DANIEL E. MIDDLEKAUFF died at his home in Polo, Ogle Co., Ill., Feb. 29, 1884, aged about fifty-two and one-half years. He died with pneumonia, which in a few days did its fatal work. He professed faith in Christ January 18, 1866. His conversion at once severed his after life from known sinful practices and associations, including the Masonic and Odd fellow orders, to both of which he had belonged before conversion.

He felt a warm interest in the Christian Cynosure and the cause it represents. He had the courage to stand by his convictions of right at all times. He was a worthy and valued member of the United Brethren church, an esteemed and useful citizen. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss, but not without Christian hope. Among his last words were—"Glory, glory, glory."

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST.

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

SPECIAL.—To those who may have had their paper stopped much to their surprise, we wish to say that at this season of the year when there are many subscriptions received for renewal, and there are a number of changes to make on our mail list, there is danger of clerical errors, and if any of our subscribers should not receive the Cynosure as they expect, we would be grateful if they would send us a postal card notifying us that they wish their subscription continued, and we will be pleasedto make the correction at once.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1884.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION OF REFORM.

Hon. Gideon T. Stewart of Norwalk, Ohio, chairman of the National Committee of the Prohibition-Home-Protection party, called a national nominating convention to meet in Pittsburg, May 21st. His exceedingly able address and call accompanying it, cut loose from the old parties, and went strong for the third party formed by an almost unanimous vote of the great union temperance convention, a year and a half ago in Farwell Hall, Chicago. The temperance press objected to so early a meeting because of the 320,000 prohibitionists who voted for Constitutional prohibition in Ohio, all but 8,500 are in the Republican party, and wish to give that party a chance to go for prohibition next June 3d. The Lever, prohibition organ, is strong for a new party, sees clearly, and says boldly, that neither old party can go for prohibition against the terrible money-and-vote-power of the breweries and distilleries. But it, with other strong papers wants its nominating convention to follow the Republicans, when it believes thousands in Ohio, and other States, similarly situated, will quit the Republicans and vote prohibition.

So the National Committee met again in Chicago and voted to recommit the May-Pittsburg call for a new time and place. The new call is not yet out, but will probably put the convention in Chicago in June or July, as the Democrats meet there July 8th to nominate their ticket.

The American Prohibition convention in Washington nominated Senator Pomeroy and Mr. Conant subject to approval by our American Prohibition convention in Chicago "near June 25th;" probably it will be June 20th.

If the Prohibition-Home-Protection convention goes there, then there will be two Chicago prohibition conventions, the only or chief difference being that one EXcludes secret societies and the other INcludes them! Possibly the two prohibition conventions will differ also on woman suffrage.

Our Washington convention voted square for the impartial ballot, and ordered the resolution to be put in the Cynosure as standing matter below, to be inserted in the platform when revised at Chicago. But the brewers and distillers will not endure a party with woman suffrage in it because, say they, "That means the death of our business." So prohibitionists who are "Republicans first" cannot go for woman's snffrage without swamping their party by throwing off the liquor vote! They will therefore "postpone" woman's suffrage till brewers and distillers will go for it, i. e., till doomsday. Then there will be two prohibition Chicago conventions, one embracing the lodge and postponing woman suffrage; the other for open work giving Mother Stewart a vote.

But if the American party votes for none who reject its platform is it not narrow and bigoted?

We answer, No! in no wise. We welcome all to come into our house, and share its hospitalities; but they must not turn the owner out of it! They must not turn the owner out of it! They must not turn God out of our skies, the Bible from our schools, or the Sabbath from our weeks. And we surely have as good a right to vote for God, in whom ninety-nine in every hundred of the American people believe; for the Bible which they revere; and the rest-day which tired labor demands, as infidels have to vote for the no-god and nothing which a meagre minority of the people hold to. Government is one thing. A party to reform goverement is another thing. We invite the world's people to sit under our government. But we intend, by God's help, to give them an American and not a heathen government to sit under. And never were prospects brighter.

THE PROHIBITION-HOME-PROTECTION CONVENTION.

We see by the papers Mar. 7th, that this national convention is to come off at Pittsburg, May 21st. It is to be hoped every Prohibitionist throughout the country will rally to it. Candidates for President and Vice President will be nominated, and, if necessary, a grand ratification meeting can follow it in June, after the Republicans nominate in Chicago. Senator Pomeroy takes a warm interest in this Pittsburg convention, and will probably attend it. The argument for holding the Prohibition-Home-Protection meeting after the Republicans have nominated is very strong. It was that St. John may be able to bring his Kansas battalion into line after the Republicans have shown that they cannot and will not carry cold water on one shoulder and whisky on the other, without spilling the water in trying to save the whisky. But now the Pittsburg convention is definitely fixed and resolved on, let every sound Prohibitionist answer "here," to the call of Gideon's trumpet. We are not in the secret, if there be any, of the political intent of the Pittsburg meeting; nor are we anxious to be. We vote for Pomeroy, but he and Mr. Stewart seem to have a good understanding; and Miss Willard awhile since, suggested Stewart as the Prohibition candidate. We know, too, for we were there, that Gideon T. Stewart was the presiding genius at the formation of the Prohibition party in the great Chicago convention.

But once and all the time we assure the Americans that the Cynosure will turn back and away from the Prohibition, and any and all other parties which undertake to save this country without the recognition of the God of the Bible, without which nothing effectual has been or can be done for mankind. Go to the Pittsburg convention, and if it goes for secrecy, follow Christ and turn away from it.

THE POLITICAL PANORAMA.

The Conventions are: The Republican, June 3d; the Democratic, July 8th, both in Chicago. The dates are significant; the Democrats put theirs late to secure the full benefit of the expected Republican distractions. They are not likely to be disappointed as to Republican troubles. Carl Schurz, and President Seelye, both able Republican politicians, have together spoken strong for a third party in the city of Brooklyn. It is difficult to "carry water on both shoulders" without spilling; but the Republican party is attempting to carry whisky on one shoulder and cold water on the other. But think of a great Democratic party putting its convention five weeks after June 3d to catch Republican stragglers; as little dogs wait and watch to catch the bone over which big dogs are fighting, with no higher object than offal!

The only salvation for the Republican party is to cast off the brewers and distillers; then a third party would spring up like as the Republican party sprung from whig and Democratic fragments; like Jonah's gourd, in a single night.

THE CANDIDATES.

These just now are Logan and Arthur; the last being nearer the treasury, having the inside track. But President Arthur is wofully belied or he has vices worse and more groveling than poor Andy Johnson. Our Mr. Capwell of New York, while here, picked up a paper which describes Arthur as a sort of Jack Falstaff toying with his Doll Tearsheet at East Cheap. Mr. Capwell, astounded at the boldness of such utterance, asked the publisher: "How do you know these revolting and disgusting statements are true?" The answer was, "We have proof of them; we have published them here, and if they did not know we had proof, they would prosecute us." If this is but half true, Arthur is, or will be, out of the ring. For such men as Carl Schurz and President Seelye will bolt any nauseous nomination.

Senator Logan is an able man, and has powerful backing and the convention too, in his own State, which is getting to be what Virginia once was, "The mother of presidents, (as Lincoln and Grant.) But Gen. Logan has done three things:

1. Put the infamous black code through our Illinois Legislature into our laws.
2. Raised, or nearly raised, a Confederate regiment to fight for slavery and treason.
3. Originated the proposition to make the liquor traffic a perpetual part of our National Government by basing National education on it. As the quick and clear-sighted Mrs. Willard called it, "Demijohn education." The Prohibitionists will not vote for him.

But Gen. Logan, (and especially Mrs. Logan) is a Methodist. The Mason-lodge, which has the G. A. R. by its rope with ring in its nose, is strong for him; and Bishop Simson, the strongest outside pillar of the lodge, has been here in Washington with him; and if the Methodist cable holds the lodge and Methodism can nominate but not elect him.

The Democrats enjoy the felicity of having no prominent men who have not fought against the Union; and so may elect another Franklin Pierce.

But if the open wing of the Prohibitionists draw off from the secretists who are Masons and Mason's jacks, the American Prohibition convention in Chicago will put men in the field with a stronger backing than Van Buren had in 1848, and the telephone had not come then. The good Republican leaders, like Schurz, Seelye and St. John, may wheel into line and throw the election of President into the House of Representatives; and, as once before, a John Quincy Adams may be our next President.

"NO PLACE LIKE HOME."

The Cynosure addresses its readers from "Home," where its editor has arrived after an all winter's sojourn in Washington. And as he is a little nervous with the mountain pressure of what he writes they will pardon, for brevity's sake, the pronoun I.

THE LAST WEEK'S WORK AT THE CAPITAL.

On Sabbath evening I preached at the Lincoln Memorial Congregational church (Rev. Mr. Moore's), and Rev. Messrs. Stoddard and Hinman officiated at communion after sermon.

On Monday, after three days' search in the Senate Library, at the City Recorder's office, and at the District office, I succeeded in finding the Masonic and Odd-fellows'

CHARTERS BY CONGRESS!

These will be given at large, dates and facts, in next week's Cynosure. They are all the more momentous from the fact that the lodge has tried to hide them under a legal fiction and fraud: to get from Congress the power to hold property under laws which they rival and contemn, and escape responsibility to the laws. The last section of the Masonic charter proclaims in express terms on motion of Senator Foster of Connecticut that:—

"This act may be altered, AMENDED, or REPEALED at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States."

We have italicized and capitalized three words. Look at them. The whole next week.

BETHEL HALL LITERARY SOCIETY.

I attended and addressed this representative colored Literary Society of Washington on Tuesday evening. The large hall was crowded as it always is. A good programme was rendered, and I have not seen a better bill of fare, or better lived up to in any literary society white or colored.

Rev. Mr. Moore, by previous appointment, read an ornate paper on "The Colored Boy of To-day." The argument of it suggested by his own experience. The president, Robert J. Smith, is a young lawyer, born in the Bermudas, and reared in England. He handles a deliberative body well. He called Mr. Lewis Douglass, son of Frederick, to the chair, while he spoke on Mr. Moore's paper. There were half a dozen short speeches, characterized by clear thought, sound sense, sound morals and sound religion.

These weekly literary meetings are opened with singing a hymn, reading the Scriptures, and prayer, and dismissed with benediction. In this it contrasts sharply with the Women's Suffrage convention, which like the political conventions, seemed to think a prayer at the beginning sufficient; and, I judge from brief superficial acquaintance, that that one prayer is an improvement, as some of the leaders are still skeptical. The Women's Christian Temperance Unions are, what their name imports, Christian.

The Bethel Hall Society waived their rule in my favor, giving me another member's time in addition to what the rules allowed me.

I said: "The 190 secret orders in this city are a greater obstruction to 'the colored boy of to-day' in every upward honorable path, than all other evils put together. An earnest, industrious colored man came to our door with fish caught from the Potomac, when we had the following dialogue:

"'How many secret societies do you belong to?' 'Three.' 'What did the three initiations cost?' 'One $20, another $15, and the other $10.'

"This man had thus paid $45 to get ready to be taxed by these secret orders, and he was making his money by catching white perch and selling them at ten cents a string!

"These vampire 'orders' thus pinch the men and women who toil and save in this district, and pay their earnings, not to educate their children, but to support the men who run these secret orders."

As the great mass of the men, and a few of the women before me were members of the secret orders, the most I had hoped was to escape a hiss. But there were several spontaneous plaudits and the applause at the close was cordial and prolonged. Not a hiss; but many were thoughtful and silent. I predict that the thoughtful colored people of the District of Columbia will, before long, abhor these secret shams.

Mr. Cromwell, editor of The People's Advocate, was to read a paper next week on "Our Churches and Societies," and I learned that he considers the two antagonistic.

J. B.

Women Suffrage.—We next week will endeavor to give the Washington Women Suffrage Convention in its length and breath—in a historic, philosophical and actual view of it.

—A large extra edition of last week's paper was printed, but the number is far short of the demand. Other numbers will be sent instead, containing addresses delivered at the Convention.

—Many friends will mourn the early death of D. E. Middlekauff of Polo, whose brief obituary appears elsewhere. Bro. Middlekauff was one of the first to report himself as free from the lodge oath after the revival of Anti-masonry, and he maintained his testimony fearlessly and firmly to the end.

—We learn that M. N. Butler of the American Freeman, State lecturer for Missouri, will devote his time largely to the interests of the American party hereafter in several of the trans-Mississippi States. Bro. Needels, publisher of the Freeman, has offered to transfer his list to the new Washington paper, and take additional stock besides.

—The Christian Statesman is somewhat facetious that the Cynosure should issue a circular and leave anti-secretism out, as if Hamlet should be left out of his play. The circular was issued from our newly organized advertising department and probably was prepared on the supposition that the name Christian Cynosure, being somewhat unique, was sufficient advertisement against the lodge, as the Statesman is the recognized embodiment of the National Reform for the Christianizing of our Constitution. We should be happy if the Statesman should put anti-lodgery prominent on its list, as by a slight misinformation the circular has done for National Reform. Bro. Pritchard may "steal our thunder" and welcome.

—The work of the New York agent, Bro. W. B. Stoddard, in Livingston county, was noticed last week. In a brief letter upon the meeting at Griegsville Bro. Wm. McBurney writes:

"Being the first Anti-masonic effort made here for many years, if ever before, it caused no little stir in the enemies' ranks, a number of Masons being present. The arguments were clear and convincing, showing that Masonry was a great evil to church, family and state. We feel that a good impression is left on this community from the brother's labors. May the good Lord speed him on; success is his. Thankful for the weekly visits of the Cynosure. We read it with great interest. The Lord bless you."

—The advertising business of the Cynosure has been placed by vote of the N. C. A. Board in the hands of Mr. A. R. McDonald, an energetic and Christian young man, who has been for a few years in the business, and whose success and integrity have highly recommended him to the directors. His office is at No. 6 Arcade Court, Chicago. Friends of the Cynosure can aid in sustaining it by advertising in our columns if they are in business that can be thereby benefited, or they will confer a favor by sending to Mr. McDonald the address of business firms which would be likely to become patrons.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH has again fallen across the pages of the Cynosure. On Monday morning C. L. Blanchard, the youngest son of the editor, passed quietly from earth after a long sickness of nearly three months. When President and Mrs. Blanchard left their home in Wheaton last fall for the East, the place was left in his charge. About the middle of December he suffered a severe attack of kidney disease, superinduced by too close and severe application to his legal business in this city and New York. He had nearly recovered and was regarded out of danger when a relapse set in last Wednesday, from the effect of which no human aid seemed possible to save him. His last moments were peaceful, and his many friends were cheered during his long illness with many tokens of his Christian faith which supplimented a life of Christian activity. He graduated at Wheaton in 1878, having studied also a year at Hillsdale College. He was soon after admitted to the bar, and by his energy and great natural endowments had built up an extensive and lucrative practice. He was engaged by the Women's Christian Temperance Union of this city as legal counsel, and prosecuted a number of cases against liquor dealers in this city and vicinity. He was also engaged to prosecute the ruffian in Kellerton, Iowa, who attacked Elder Rathbun, and would have carried the case through but for the refusal of an important witness to testify. Aside from his legal business, he has given lectures on law in Wheaton College, has occasionally lectured on temperance and preached to Sabbath congregations in the vicinity, and held himself in readiness to speak against the lodge when the occasion demanded, although his name has not appeared in our list of lecturers. From his unusual abilities and promise of eminent usefulness in the cause of Christian reform, many hopes were cherished respecting him, which have been by this stroke of God suddenly cut down.

THE NATIONAL "AMERICAN."

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1884.

It is necessary to explain to Cynosure readers the delay in starting the new paper. The Board of the American Publishing Company are determined to incur no debts, but to run the new paper on a sound financial basis. We asked for $5,000 cash to start the paper. Five thousand five hundred dollars have been subscribed, of which less than $1,000 have been paid in, another $1,000 is promised as soon as the paper starts, and another $1,000 within one year. All these are good pledges. We must have $2,000 in the treasury to purchase type and fixtures and pay printing bills as they come due. We therefore must wait until $1,000 more in money is sent in before issuing the first number. If this sum should come from any source or from various sources the paper would immediately commence. Let the friends who desire the success of this enterprise send in as much money as possible. Address 215 4½ street, N. W.

LITERARY.

We never open the Missionary Review of Princeton, N. J., without high expectations, which have never been disappointed. The whole missionary field with its triumphs, perplexities, encouragements and grand opportunities is here before us, and no one whose heart is in sympathy with Christ's can fail to benefited and strengthened from reading it. The March number shows the British contributions to foreign missions in 1882, has some sensible and just comments on the American Board's troubles in Armenia, now happily in process of adjustment, gives a view of the land of the Asiatic Kaffirs through an Afghan evangelist, has a map and article on Trinidad, summarized reports of a number of American missionary societies beginning with the American Board and presents an interesting review of independent foreign missions.

The Illustrated English Magazine gives its patrons some unusual attractions in the fine reproductions of a half-dozen of Sir Joshua Reynolds' portraits, and as many more sketches of Cornwall headlands and coves which deserve a careful study. Noticeable articles are those on "Sir Joshua Reynolds," "An Unsentimental Journey through Cornwall," and "Shakespeare in the Middle Temple." Macmillan and Co., New York and London.

Vick's Magazine for March is a very attractive number. A group of single dahlias is chosen for a fine chromo frontispiece, and the National Soldier's Home at Dayton, Ohio, furnishes a subject for a considerable article nicely illustrated. Every page reveals something instructive for those who desire both the useful and beautiful in the outward and natural adornment of their homes. James Vick, Rochester.

Purdy's Descriptive Catalogue for 1884 is one of the brightest and best of the small fruit circulars of the season. Strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants and grapes of every variety, size and flavor are described and pictured, beside fruit trees, potatoes, roses and flower seeds have an abundant representation. It will pay to have a copy for frequent reference. Address A. M. Purdy, Palmyra, N. Y.

Bartholdi's immense bronze statue of Liberty, which the French people are preparing for a gift to America, has been finely pictured as it will appear in New York harbor upon the pedestal which New York is trying to raise $250,000 to construct. The picture is published by the Travelers' Insurance Company of New York. Emma Lazarus, a Jewess, wrote lately of this mighty light-house of liberty:

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame
With conquering limbs astride from land to land,
Here at our sea-washed sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman, with a torch whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name,
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon hand
Gleams world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp," cried she,
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses, yearning to breath free—
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.
Send these the homeliest tempest tossed to me;
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

The eminent Bible scholar Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, is to contribute to the April number of the North American Review an article on the Development of Religious Liberty.

AN EASY TASK.

To get two-month subscribers for 25 cents will not be found a difficult work, if you fail in securing a yearly subscription. Each copy of the Cynosure is equal to an ordinary pamphlet of 80 pages. Eight such pamphlets for a quarter of a dollar is not extravagance by far. Let every reader of this paper present this matter to his neighbors.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible] intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The paragraph below is from the Boston Congregationalist's Washington correspondent. The Congregationalist published greedily the false report of the Ford funeral last year and has never corrected itself. Its Washington correspondent then was Ben Perley Poore, a Freemason of thirty-two or thirty-three degrees, and whose intense hatred of all opposers of the lodge is everywhere known. Such a paragraph as this would naturally come from such a source:

"The Presidential contest has now fairly opened, and the first nomination made. One gentleman is now before the public asking their votes for this high office. A convention of self-appointed Anti-masonic Prohibitionists has been held in this city this week, to nominate a candidate for the next Presidency. General O. O. Howard was spoken of, but was objected to as a member of the Sons of Temperance. The Prohibition party has, therefore, put itself on record as opposed to the great majority of temperance societies. After some days' discussion, which nobody seemed to care to hear, Hon. S. C. Pomeroy of Kansas was nominated for the Presidency. Statisticians have not yet begun to calculate the number of electoral votes he is likely to obtain. It is now rumored that Mr. Pomeroy has declined."

PROHIBITION IN POLITICS.

A late issue of Harper's Weekly, in an article entitled, 'Prohibition in Politics," admits that "there is no doubt of a profound and wide-spread feeling upon the subject;" and also says, with reference to the formation of a new national prohibitory party organization, that "it is equally beyond doubt that the situation is most favorable, because parties now cohere, not by a strong conviction and purpose, but by force of tradition and of circumstances." "This," it says, "is the situation which is always most favorable to new party movements founded upon opinions strongly held." It adds: "In several Western States especially, such a movement, vigorously organized and prosecuted with energy, would be a very disturbing element in the canvass." It recognizes the opportunity which Prohibitionists now have to exercise—an important controlling political influence—but doubts the "willingness of temperance voters to subordinate every other consideration to that of prohibition." May its doubt prove not to have been well founded.—Nat'l Temperance Advocate.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

"TIRED OF LIFE."

BY LILLIE E. BARR.

"I'm tired of life, 'tis such a hore;"
He lit a cigarette and sighed;
"One does the same things o'er and o'er
I really wonder men abide
The weary round; I'd he content
To slip away from out the strife,
There's nothing in it—that I know;
I've tried it, and, I'm tired of life."

Oh wondrous life! That it should he
A scornful fool's conceited jest;
Life, that has soared in Newton's brain,
And beat and throhhed in Lincoln's breast;
Life that has tremhled into prayer,
And charmed the listening world with song;
Life that hath love to make it fair,
And hlessed hope to make it strong!

Did Shakespeare find his life "a hore?"
Or Wesley mock "the weary round?"
Did Franklin wish to sink away?
Has busy Edison yet found
That life has nothing in its grasp?
Ah no! for in the van of strife,
Where great souls think, and work and love,
They have no time to tire of life.

Life dowered hy prophets and hy seers
And heir of Plato's mighty hrain,
Of Attic art, and grace, and song,
Of Roman laws, and arms and gain;
That keeps great Cromwell's larger thought,
And starry Milton's heavenly dream,
And clasps the golden days gone by,
Amid the eager days of steam.

It is the idle tire of life;
The idlc hearts, that duties shirk;
The idle hrains, that have no thought;
The idle hands that have no work.
The good man knows that life is good,
And strives to make his own complete;
The thoughtful know that it is great;
The loving know that it is sweet.

Yea, even when lifc halts with pain,
Or falls with anguish by the way,
Great souls it patiently detain,
And hope, and bear, and humbly pray,
Because life is so grand a thing;
Becausc beyond its pain and strife
They see a fair eternity
That must he hought hy noble life.

Then, thou who art so "tired of life,"
Go work, go love, go try to think,
Go find some duty, howe'er small,
And then beside it no not shrink.
Go take thy place; it may he low,
And in the rear of mortal strife,
But fill it well, and then I know
Thou wilt not say, "I'm tired of life."

THE PERILS OF THE PLAY-HOUSE.

A PLAIN TALK WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

Young people often ask me the questi:on "Would it be right for me to go to the theatre? If not, then why not?" Those who propound these questions are not of the dissipated and dissolute class, but clean young men and maidens—too clean to be smirched by a needless exposure to impure influences. That such questions are raised constantly is not surprising; for the play-house is increasingly persistent in its demands on popular attention and patronage. It fills a constantly enlarging place in the daily journals. Theatres multiply more rapidly than churches in some of our great cities. Theatre-going increases more than church-going. The dead-walls are covered with flaunting pictorial representations of scenes and actors in full dress (or of no dress at all); and many of these are of such disgusting indecency that they deserve suppression by the public authorities. If the pictures be so shameless, what must the originals be?

Before our youthful inquirers become patrons of the play-house it is but fair that they should know just what perils to their moral nature and to their welfare as immortal beings they are likely to encounter. The first peril is to purity of character. Your eyes and ears are windows and doors to the heart. What enters once never goes out. Photographs taken on the memory are not easily effaced or burned up; they stick there, and often become tempters and tormentors for a life time. "I'd give my right hand," said a Christian to me once, "if I could rub out the abominable things that I put into my mind when I was a fast young man." He could not do it; neither will you be able to efface the lascivious images or the impure words which the stage may photograph on your very soul. We do not affirm that every popular play is immoral, or that every performer is impure, or that every theatre-goer is on the scent for sensual excitements. But the stage is to be estimated as a totality; and the whole trend of the average American stage is hostile to heart-purity. The exceptions do not alter the rule. Nor have honest attempts to bring the stage up to a high standard of moral purity been successful. The experiment once made in Boston of so managing a theatre as to exclude every indelicacy from the stage and every notoriously improper person from the audience, ended in pecuniary failure. The Puritanic play-house soon went into bankruptcy. The chief object of the manager is to make money; and if he can spice his evening's entertainment with a plot that turns on a seduction or a scene of sexual passion, or with a salacious exposure of physical beauty, the temptation is too strong to be very often resisted.

1. You must take the average stage as it is, and not as you would like to have it. It is an institution which, if you patronize, you become morally responsible for, as much as if you patronize a public library or a drinking saloon. As an institution it habitually unsexes women by parading her before a mixed audience in man's attire. Too often it exposes her in such a pitiable scantiness of any attire at all that if you saw your own sister in such a plight you would turn away your eyes in horror. Yet you propose to pay your money (through the box-office) to somebody else's sisters and daughters to violate womanly delicacy for your entertainment. "If the daughter of Herodias" dances to please you, then you are responsible for the dance, both in its influence on the dancer and on your own moral sense. There is no evading before God of your accountability for the theatre, if you habitually support it. What its influence on the average performer is, appears from most abundant testimony. One of the most celebrated actresses of this time informed a friend of mine that she "only enters a theatre to enact her part, and has very little association with her own profession." A converted actor once said to me, while passing a play-house in which he had often performed: "Behind those curtains lies Sodom." Although sorely pressed to return to his old business, he said that he would starve sooner than go on the stage again. Mrs. Francis Kemble Butler—the last living representative of the most famous historic frmily of modern times—has in her old age condemned the stage emphatically. As an institution, the American stage tolerates sensual impurity in its performers and presents scenes of impurity to its patrons. If you become one of its patrons, you go into moral partnership with the theatre.

2. It would be a sufficient condemnation of the average play-house if it stimulates one evil passion. But other temptations lurk about it. There are dangerous associations to be encountered there. It is a prevalent habit with young people who attend the theatre to remain until a late hour amid the excitements of the plays, and then finish off with a midnight supper, or a wine drink at some neighboring restaurant. To this perilous practice a young lady of my acquaintance owed her downfall. Long after sensible people have laid their heads on their pillows, the habitues of the theatre are apt to be adding a second scene of dissipation to the first one; and it must be pretty hard work for a Christian to finish up such an evening's experience with an honest prayer for God's blessing. That is indeed a poor business and a poor pleasure on which we cannot, with a clear conscience, ask our Heavenly Father's approval. Certainly, there are enough innocent, wholesome and beneficial recreations without venturing into the dangerous atmosphere of the play-house. This is a dear-bought pleasure which involves even a risk to the immortal soul.

3. Another peril of the theatre arises from the fascination which it too often engenders. Like wine drinking, it becomes an appetite, and a very greedy appetite. To gratify this growing passion for the play-house, teus of thousands of young people squander their money and their time most profusely. Other and purer recreations become tame and insipid. Even the entertainments of the stage become dull unless they are spiced with new excitements to the passions. Wholesome pleasures cease to please, just as a brandy drinker ceases to be satisfied with cold water or a cup of coffee. It is not recreation, but stimulation, and a very dangerous sort of stimulation, too, that you will be after, when you become enslaved by the fascinations of the stage.

My young friends, be assured that no sagacious employer ever chooses a clerk, or accouutant, or any other employe, the sooner because he is a theatre-goer. No seusible man is apt to select the companion of his heart and home because she is a frequenter of a play-house. No good woman wants her sons and daughters there. No pastor expects that his youthful church members can go often into that impure atmosphere without a terrible damage to their piety. I don't believe that the theatre has ever helped many souls toward heaven. I know that it has sent thousands to perdition. Now that I have, in kind and candid plainness of speech, pointed out some of the inevitable perils of the play-house, do you feel like taking the risk?—Independent.

TALKING AGAINST POKER.

SOME REASONS WHY THE FASCINATING GAME IS BAD.

Poker-playing and poker clubs, whether clubs in fact or only so called, says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle, should be discountenanced, because of their demoralizing effect upon persons addicted to the game. It dulls the feelings of generosity; it makes men selfish, harsh and deceitful; it causes them to lie, to be profane and often to cheat, while it leads to evil associations generally. Men will sit down to play poker with persons whom they would not like to introduce into their families, and some with whom they would hate to be seen in public. It has a tendency to make men neglectful of their legitimate calling and their families, and the money lost in the game would greatly enhance domestic comfort and happiness if employed in that way or saved for future use. Whether merchant, physician, lawyer, mechanic, principal or clerk, when infatuated by this game, and when spending nights at the gaming-table, instead of resting in bed, they are surely liable to neglect business, unfit themselves for duty by their uightly orgies, while they depreciate the value of their services to clients or employers. It impoverishes the mind as well as the purse, and it destroys amiability and establishes fretfulness and ill humor.

The game is usually begun as a means of amusement, with very small stakes; but, being enticing and infatuating, it soon becomes a daily habit, and a cancer slowly eating its way into the vitality of the victim. Most players are bound to lose, as the chances are by no means as equal as people may think they are. As the losses increase in amount and frequency, the minds of the players become worried and troubled, and the continuous attempts to win back lost money tends, in most cases, to renewed ventures. Then comes more worry and gloominess and trouble. Invariably the efforts to regain only result in new and heavier losses.

It is a positive fact, and can be proved in almost every instance (at least I could prove it as far as my own experience reaches), that in every club there creep in in the course of time a few persons who are possessed of great patience and a penchant for trickery, who, under the guise of gentlemen, simply come to play to pass away their spare time, and they seem to have a good deal of time to spare for this purpose. It is not wonderful, under these circumstances, that many persons retire from the club room with not only empty purses, but with exhausted credit, and go home to punish their innocent families by their unaccountable chagrin and nervousness. Men who but a short time since deemed no purchase burdensome, now find that the ordering of an overcoat is a severe test of their financial capacity. Poker is very amusing and very engaging, but men are not content with mere amusemeut, and do not seem to care for stopping anywhere short of embarrassment or ruin. It is horrible to carry about with one the humiliating consciousness of being an unsuccessful gambler.

GOD'S CARE.

It has been said, and I will repeat it, "God is great in great things, but he is very great in little things." I will illustrate this by an incident which occurred in the room of a relative during a Scripture reading. There was a beautiful engraving on the wall of the Matterhorn Mountain. We were remarking that the wonderful works of God were not only shown in those lofty snow-clad mountains, but also the tiny mosses found in their crevices. A friend present said:—"Yes, I was with a party at the Matterhorn, and while we were admiring the sublimity of the scene a gentleman of the company produced a pocket microscope, and having caught a tiny fly placed it under the glass. He reminded us that the legs of the household fly in England were naked, then called our attention to the legs of this little fly, which was thickly covered with hair," thus showing that the same God who made these lofty mountains rise attended to the comfort of the tiniest of his creatures, even providing socks and mittens for the little flies whose home these mountains were.—*T. SOWING SEED UNTO LIFE ETERNAL.

BY L. R. DE WOLF.

Two young girls walked arm in arm up the Grammar School stairs, talking quietly and earnestly. They had been sometimes very troublesome with their haste and noise, now all was gentle, polite and perfect with them. They studied each lesson thoroughly, and passed in and out with propriety and taste. Every one noticed the marked change that had come over them. I was standing by the Principal's desk as they passed down at recess.

"What in the world has so altered Ella and Amy?" he asked.

"The religion of the cross, was the answer."

"So that's what all this staying after school has meant, has it? I don't believe a word about it." And walking to the stairway he leaned over and recalled the girls to the school-room.

They came softly back and stood before him. "Girls" he asked harshly, "what makes you behave so well today"?—They glanced at each other smilingly then one said, "the love of Jesus." "I wish to please him," said the other. "Well, why not wish to please me as well?"—"I should think if we tried to do right it would please you." "Well, how long do you propose to keep this up?" "Always, for we intend never to go back."—"How long is it since you made this resolve?" "Since last night. We decided this in the recitation room before going home." Turning to me he forbade my preaching Jesus to my pupils. But the good work went on.

"My father is an infidel," said one, "please pray for him." My father is a Universalist" said the other, "please pray for him;" and so the good seeds kept dropping into the fertile soil, and in stony places. But some of it "bore fruit an hundred fold."

INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE.

The history of the world compared with the prophecies of the Bible when carefully examined infallibly prove the truth of Christianity. Any honest infidel may become a Christian by studying the Bible and history. So long as Babylon is "uninhabited heaps," (Jer. 51:37); so long as Nineveh is "empty and void, and waste," Nahum 2: 10); so long as Egypt is "the basest of the Kingdoms," (Ezek. 29:15); so long as Tyre "is a place for the spreading of nets," (Ezek. 26:5.); so long as the Jews are scattered "among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other," (Deut. 28: 64); so long as "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles," (Luke 21: 24); so long as the great empires of the world march on in their predicted course, (Daniel, ch. 2 and 7,); so long as we have positive proof that Bible "prophecy came not in old times by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," (2 Peter, 1:21). Willing ignorance and willful sin are the causes of infidelity. Those who turn away from the Bible and "the many infallible proofs" (Luke 1:3,) of its truth, plainly declare themselves "unworthy of everlasting life," (Acts 13:46.) But "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Rom. 1:16).

Jesus can refuse nothing to faith. His word and honor are pledged to it. His word, inasmuch as he has proclaimed a hundred times that all things are possible to him who believes. His honor, for how could Jesus abandon any one who confides in him? Otherwise he would compromise his truth, his goodness, and his power. Jesus can save me. He desires my salvation; he has promised me it; I know it and believe it. So sufficient is this way of salvation, that it is not inconsistent with any of God's attributes to save even the chief of sinners; yea, the greater triumph has Christ over his great adversary in redeeming and setting at liberty from his bondage those who were his greatest vassals.—Jonathan Edwards.

How wonderfully the Spirit of God works through the Word of God! A touching incident is given by an English missionary in Central Africa concerning a slave boy, Dumurila, who had read the Testament with him for a while, but afterward was missed, and it was not known where he was. One day a heathen lad brought to the missionary a copy of the Testament, saying that Dumurila had died, and the day before his death had read the Gospel all day long; that he had asked his companion to bring water from a pool near by, and when it was brought bade him sprinkle it upon his head, and name over him the names of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. He charged his friend to take the Testament to the missionary, and soon after died.

THE GOLD EAGLE.

A good many years ago a merchant missed from his cash-drawer a twenty-dollar gold piece. No one had been to the drawer, it was proved, except a young clerk whose name was Weston. The merchant had sent him there to make change for a customer, and the next time the drawer was opened the gold piece had disappeared. Naturally, Weston was suspected of having stolen it, and more especially as he appeared a few days after the occurrence in a new suit of clothes. Being asked where he had bought the clothes, he gave the name of the tailor without hesitation; and the merchant, going privately to make inquiries, discovered that Weston had paid for the suit with a twenty-dollar gold piece.

That afternoon the young clerk was called into the merchant's private room and charged with the theft.

"It is needless to deny it," the merchant said. "You have betrayed yourself with these new clothes, and now the only thing that you can do is to make a full confession of your fault.

Weston listened with amazement; he could hardly believe at first that such an accusation could be brought against him, but when he saw that his employer was in earnest he denied it indignantly, and declared that the money he had spent for the clothes was his own, given him a year before. The merchant sneered at such an explanation, and asked for the proof.

"Who was the person that gave it to you? Produce him," he demanded.

"It was a lady," answered Weston, "and I can't produce her for she died last spring. I can tell you her name."

"Can you bring me anybody that saw her give you the money, or knew of your having it?" asked the merchant.

"No, I can't do that," Weston had to answer; "I never told anybody about the gift for she did not wish me to. But I have a letter from her somewhere, if I haven't lost it, that she sent with the money, and in which she speaks of it."

"I dare say you have lost it," the merchant sneered. "When you have found it, sir, you bring it to me, and then I will believe your story."

Weston went home with a heavy heart. He had no idea where the letter was; he could not be sure that he had not destroyed it; and it was the only means of proving his innocence. Unless he could produce it his character was ruined, for he saw that the merchant was fully convinced of his guilt, and appearances, indeed, were sadly against him. He went to work, however, in the right way. He knelt down and prayed to God for help to prove that he was innocent, and then he began to overhaul the contents of his desk, and trunk, and closet.

He kept his papers neatly, and it did not take long to see that the letter was not among them. He sat down with a sense of despair when he was convinced of this. What else could he do? Nothing but pray for help and guidance and strength to endure whatever trouble God might choose to send upon him.

'When I rose from my knees," he said, telling me the story years afterward, "I happened to catch my foot in an old rug that I had nailed down to the carpet because it was always curling at the edges. The nail at the corner had come out, and stooping down to straighten the rug I saw a bit of paper peeping out. I pulled it from its hiding place, and it was the letter!

"How it got there, I don't know. The fact that I had found it was enough for me, and if I had not gone on my knees again to give thanks for such a deliverance I should be ashamed to tell you the story now.

"I brought that letter to my employer. It proved my innocence, and he apologized. A month afterward the gold piece was found in Mr. Finch's overcoat. He had never put it in the cash drawer at all, though he thought he had. He raised my salary on the spot to pay for his unjust suspicions; and I have never yet repented of trusting the Lord in my trouble."—Young Reaper.

JOSEPH HENRY.

INCIDENTS IN A PHILOSOPHER'S BOYHOOD.

Prof. Joseph Henry, one of the most eminent of American scientists, died May 13, 1878. On Thursday, the 19th day of last month, his memory was honored by the unveiling at Washington of a magnificent bronze statue, made by W. M. Story, and costing $15,000.

Among the interesting reminiscences of his boyhood is the story of his first pair of boots—a true story, often told by himself in later years.

When he was a boy it was the universal custom to have boots made to order, and his grandmother with whom he was living, indulgently allowed him to choose the style for himself. There was no great variety of styles. Indeed the choice was limited to the question of round toes or square toes. Day after day Joseph went to the cobbler's and talked over the matter without coming to a decision, and this even after their manufacture was begun; until at last the shoemaker fairly out of patience, took the decision into his own hands and made a most remarkable pair of boots—one boot round toed and the other square toed.

Later in life Prof. Henry often came deliberately to his decisions, with the advantage that he seldom, if ever, had occasion to abandon them.

While Joseph was a school-boy he acquired a taste for reading in this peculiar way: one day he chased a pet rabbit through an opening in the foundation wall of the village meeting-house. While crawling about among dirt and rubbish a gleam of light enticed him through the broken floor, and he found himself in a room containing the open book-case of the town library. The title of one of the books struck his fancy and he took it down. It was Brooks' "Fool of Quality," and he read, coming again and again through the hole in the floor, until access by the door was finally granted him. From this first book that he ever read with relish he passed on eagerly to other works of fiction in that library.

A few years later, in a way almost equally as accidental, his mind was turned to an entirely different class of reading.

Confined at home by a temporary illness, he took up a book casually left on the table by a boarder, and entitled "Lectures on Experimental Philosophy, Astronomy and Chemistry, Intended Chiefly for the Use of Young Persons. By G. Gregory." It began with a few questions: "You throw a stone or shoot an arrow into the air; why does it not go forward in the line or direction you give it? * * * Why do flame or smoke always mount upward, though no force is used to send them in that direction? And why should not the flame of a candle drop toward the floor when you reverse it or hold it downward? * * * Again, you look into a well of clear water and see your own face and figure as if painted there. Why is this? You are told it is done by the reflection of light. But what is the reflection of light?"

The trifling incident of taking up this book may be said to have turned the whole course of this lad's life.

After his death this book was found in Prof. Henry's library, with the following entry upon the fly-leaf written in his own hand:

"This book, though by no means a profound work, has, under Providence, exerted a remarkable influence upon my life. It accidentally fell into my hands when I was sixteen years old, and was the first work I ever read with attention. It opened to me a new world of thought and enjoyment, invested things before almost unnoticed with the highest interest; fixed my mind on the study of nature, and caused me to resolve at the time of reading it that I would immediately commence to devote my life to the acquisition of knowledge."

Many young men quit school at sixteen years of age. They should take a lesson from Joseph Henry, and regard education as not completed, but just begun.

THE BEGINNING OF A CAKE.

Once I heard a story of a girl, quite a small one, that wanted to begin at the beginning, and make a cake, and she said to her mother:

"I want to begin at the beginning and make a cake. How does it begin?"

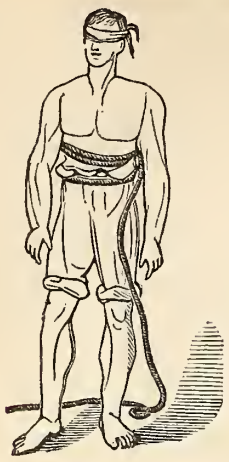
Her mother said: "If you want to begin at the beginning you must go into the kitchen and begin it with flour."

She went to the kitchen and said to Bridget: "Does a cake begin here? I want to begin at the beginning and make a cake. Please give me some meal."

Bridget said: "If you want to begin at the beginning and make a cake, you must go to the baker's. Flour comes from the baker's."

She went to the baker's and said to him: "Does a cake begin here? I want to begin at the beginning and make a cake."

The baker said: "If you want to begin at the beginning you must go yonder to the miller's. My flour comes to me from the miller."



She went yonder to the miller's and said to him: "Does a cake begin here? I want to begin at the beginning and make a cake."

The miller said: "If you want to begin at the beginning you must run over the fields to the farmer's. The farmer brings corn to my mill; my mill grinds it into flour for the baker; the baker sells flour to the people living in houses; and people living in houses make the flour into cakes."

She ran over the field to the farmer's and said to him: "Does a cake begin here? I want to begin at the beginning and make a cake."

"The farmer said: "The beginning was last spring when I planted my corn. When the snow had all melted away I planted my seed corn. From the seed corn sprang up corn stalks. All summer these grew and grew, and grew taller and taller and taller, and when summer was over there was gathered from them bushels of corn. I sell the corn to the miller; the miller grinds it to flour and sells the flour to the baker; and the baker sells flour to the people, and the people make it into cakes. But you see if you begin at the beginning it takes all summer to make a cake. If you want to begin at the beginning come next spring and plant some seed corn."

The story did not tell if the girl went in the spring to plant some seed corn. My big sister says even that would not be beginning at the beginning, for she says that the seed corn that you plant had to be grown somewhere.—Wide Awake.

Rev. Mr. Niceman duly and truly prepared to practice idolatry in one of the secret chambers of this country. This Republic is destined to be ruined, not because of the Republican party or the Democratic party, so much, but because this nation has "Forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshiped other gods, and served them." Jer. 22: 9. Rev. Mr. Niceman, Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Finefellow, and all the rest of the Masonic fraternity, are in the position of the "five-and-twenty," seen by Ezekiel 8th chapter 16th verse. He saw them "with their backs toward the temble of the Lord and their faces toward the East, and they worshiped the sun toward the East. Of this idolatry this nation must repent, or God will seal its doom.

TEMPERANCE.

WHISKY NOT GOOD FOR THE STOMACH OF INFANTS.

[The following communication coming to us with no name attached would not, within our rule, receive any attention; but being a good article, on a subject which needs much to be written upon, it has room. The writer seems to suspect that the Cynosure may be responsible for the advice objected to; we are responsible only for the mistake of printing it.—ED.]

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wish to utter my emphatic protest against the advice to give whisky to infants contained in one of your recent issues. Such advice, by whoever given, is simply atrocious, and is suggestive of the Satanic craft of the whisky league. Mothers, if you must do something desperate, give your darlings arsenic and thus a speedy relief from suffering, and yourselves and them exemption from long agonies and bitter grief and shame.

The case of St. Martin and recent extended experiments in hospitals, especially in England, have demonstrated that alcohol is never good for the human stomach. If more evidence were needed to establish this fact it is supplied by the illustrations now easily obtainable, showing the diseased condition of the inner coating of the drinking man's stomach, which reveals the fact that as soon as a man begins to drink, diseased indications appear, and, as he progresses towards the condition of the confirmed drunkard, these marks of disease increase till this inner coating is entirely destroyed. If such is the effect of any indulgence in alcoholic drinks by full-grown men, a little reflection must show you what will be the effect of even a small quantity upon the tender stomach of a child.

Such is the nature of this artificial disease that only a hair of the same dog will cure its bite. The smart and pain caused by the first dose is only, or most readily, relieved by the same enemy that caused it, and thus an appetite, deeply seated in a felt physical need, is often acquired in infancy, and the victim feels that exemption from physical pain in the injured organ and power to properly digest food, depend upon a repetition of the dose—and that each dose renders another more needful. Such poor unfortunate "drags at every remove a lengthened chain," rivcted to his tender limbs, it may be, in infancy by the ill-advised kindness of her who gave him birth, and if physical constitution, or mental or moral power, saves him from a rapid downward course of shame and perhaps of crime, to an early, dishonored grave, an old age of suffering—mental and physical—almost certain to end in darkness, surely awaits him. God hath said "no drunkard hath eternal life abiding in him."

Mother, if you kindle in your infant's stomach this fire that is "set on fire of hell," don't wonder that this want, this thirst you have created, will seek the means of relief, and that the saloon will have greater attractions for your lovely boy than his mother, wife, or any earthly object.

The writer has now in mind an aged man—nay, more than one, who has been no mere slave of self-indulgence; who has scorned the life of a drunkard; who has been the soul of honor in business, and whose word was as good as his bond; who hated injustice and wrong, and whom his fellow-men honored and trusted. His one great mistake was in not applying in time for cure to the Great Physician, who alone can repair the damage done by the quacks that attempt to minister to human suffering. His mother, under the mistaken notion that he would die without it, fed him whisky in his infancy. In later years, under a similar delusion, he took his dram at meal-time to aid digestion till his outraged stomach became so deranged as to cry out between meals for more liquid damnation to deaden its sufferings. Now to make life endurable bottles of this terrible "fire-water" must be placed so as to be at hand whenever the paroxysms of pain may seize him. The doctors now say the inner coating of his stomach is entirely destroyed. Unless his sufferings quicken his exit his lamp must go out in delirium, as it now seems.

Who will have to answer for the "deep damnation of his taking off?" Will not a share of it lay at the door of the fond mother who watched over his helpless infancy; and, haply, another moiety be laid to the charge of the sapient doctor, whose genus, it seems, is not yet all extinct, who gave such perilous advice, and still another portion to that guardian of the public health, moral and spiritual, the press, if by its inadvertence or ignorance it has sanctioned and confirmed the ruinous practice of using in any way what Shakspeare, for lack of a better name, calls devil?

IOWA STATISTICS.

By carefully reviewing the record of criminal convictions in Iowa for 1880, it is found that there were 1,081 convictions of which number 380 or 35.2 per cent were saloon-keepers. The total expense on account of the criminal prosecutions in that year was $333,457.69, and if the saloon-keepers were to pay their proportion, they would have to pay $117,377.11.

Many will claim that this is a record for only one year, and that we have selected the year which will make the worst showing, but this is not the case. When we found that such a large proportion of the convictions in 1880 were saloon-keepers we were astounded, since, although we knew that 80 per cent of the crimes were traceable to their influence, we had no idea that such a large percentage of crimes were committed by the saloon-keepers themselves. We accordingly examined the record for 1881, thinking that the case would assume a better aspect for the saloon-keepers. But instead of growing better, we found that it grew worse in every respect, increasing from 35.2 per cent to 49 per cent.

The facts are that in 1881 there were 1,370 convictions, of which number 671 or 49 per cent were saloon-keepers. The total expenses on account of convictions were $380, 836.25, 49 per bent of which is $186, 609.76. If the criminal saloon-keepers were convicted in the same ratio in 1882, they constituted 63 per cent of the total number of convictions.—Ex.

A NEW AND STRIKING ARGUMENT FOR TEETOTALISM.

The anecdote is told of the celebrated Dr. Richardson, of London, that by a simple experiment he convinced an intelligent young man of the importance of total abstinence, when argument or appeal might have been in vain. The young man was singing the praises of the "ruddy bumper," as he called it, and saying that it not only did him good but that he could not get through the day without it.

Without attempting a direct reply, Dr. Richardson said, "Will you be good enough to feel my pulse as I am standing here?"

He did so, and the doctor said, "Count it carefully and tell me what it says."

"Your pulse," was the reply, "beats seventy-four to the minute."

The doctor then sat down in a chair and asked him to count it again. He did so, and said, "It has gone down to seventy."

The doctor then laid himself down on the lounge, and said, "Now count it again."

He did so, and exclaimed, "Why, it is only sixty-four; what an extraordinary thing!"

The doctor then said, "When you lie down at night, that is the way that nature gives your heart rest. In sleep you know nothing about it, but that beating organ is resting to that extent; and if you reckon it up, you will see at once it is a great deal of rest, because in lying down the heart is doing ten strokes less every minute than before. Now multiply that by sixty, and it is six hundred, and multiply that number again by the eight hours you may give to sleep, and, within a fraction, it is five thousand strokes less than when you are awake. And as the heart throws out some six ounces of blood at every stroke or pulsation, it makes a difference of thirty thousand ounces, or nearly nineteen hundred pounds of lifting during the night, or nearly eleven millions of ounces, or almost seven hundred thousand pounds, of lifting in a single year; and this by so delicate an organ, or instrument, as the human heart. When I lie down at night you do not get that rest, for the effect of alcohol or spirit is to increase the number of strokes; and instead of getting this rest you put on something like fifteen thousand extra strokes, or some ninety thousand ounces of extra lifting, in a single night; and the result is that you rise up weak and exhausted, and unfit for the next day's work till you have taken another drink, which, in the end, increases the exhaustion, and rapidly wears away the life itself."

The young man acknowledged that all this was perfectly true, though it had never before struck him in that light. He carefully reckoned up the figures, and finding what it meant to be lifting up so many extra thousand ounces whenever he took a drink, he became a total abstainer, with every benefit, as he admits, to his purse, his health, and his happiness.

Is not here a most striking and conclusive argument for teetotalism? Let every young man ponder it.—Christian Weekly.

"I have made a thousand dollars during the last three months," said a saloon-keeper, boastfully, to a crowd of his townsmen. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" "You have made wretched homes—women and children poor, and sick, and weary of life. You have made my two sons drunkards," continued the speaker, with trembling earnestness; "you made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. Oh, yes; you have made much—more than I can reckon up, but you'll get the full count some day—you'll get it some day!"

THE

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE CHURCHES.

—The King Street church at Chambersburg, Pa. Bro. W. O. Tobey, pastor, has been enjoying a revival season which has continued now for an unusual time. The labors of the evangelist Wolf with the church have been greatly blessed during these meeting.

—On the first Sabbath in March fifteen persons united with the Congregationalist church in Bartlett, Ill., near this city. Eight of the number were young persons from the public school of the place, which is in charge of Bro. A. Thompson of the N. C. A. Board, and whose personal and unremitting labors for the salvation of his pupils has had this signal mark of God's favor.

—Lynnville, Iowa, is having a remarkable revival visitation, 300 being saved—many whole families, infidels, rich and poor men, young and old, from six years up to 75.

—The Christian Harvester reports the meeting at La Otto, Ind. "Souls were saved every day to the last. One backslider who had lived for the world, said the Lord had burnt covetousness out of his soul in an instant. Another backslider was saved and gave up Masonry. Five men were saved from the tobacco habit, and several souls received cleansing."

—Rev. Dr. Rankin of the Washington Congregational Church, in answer to an inquiry as to the number of white and colored members of his church writes: "I do not divide my flock that way. I never did the black people of my congregation the indignity to count them. All who come are welcomed just as the whites are. As a pastor I know no difference of color or race, and this I try to teach them is Christianity."—N. Y. Herald.

—A church sociable is announced at Evanston, Ill., where young ladies will be attired to represent Methodist periodicals. The Guide to Holiness doubts if any one will venture to personify the holiness periodicals.

—Rev. J. C. Brooke, President of the Southern Ohio Holiness Association, reports decided victories at South Lebanon, 200 saved in two wecks, of these 75 sanctified; at "Seven Mile," 100 converted, 50 sanctified; Pendleton Church, Cincinnati, 60 converted, 25 sanctified.

—The interest in the work of Moody and Sankey in London continually increases. It was computed that over 20,000 persons thronged the precincts of the hall at the three services held on a recent Sunday. The majority of those present are in all cases working men drawn from their homes largely by means of the local tickets distributed throughout the district. The inquirers at the close of the evening service frequently exceed 500. It is also pleasant to notc that the assistance rendercd by the neighboring ministers and clergy of all denominations has been of the heartiest character, and the agencies employed to assist in and supplement the work have been more widely organized than at the first stations at which services were held. Mr. Moody is greatly encouraged.

—We are told that some merchants of Cork, Ireland, say that the Moody and Sankey meetings were more profitable to them than the industrial exposition, because so many old debts were paid as the result of Mr. Moody's teachings in regard to the duty of making restitution. There are some Christians who stop their papers without paying for them and if they had Mr. Moody's teachings for a while it would be to the profit of publishers.—Baptist Weekly.

—In addition to Moody and Sankey, who are busy in London, Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan have been holding evangelistic services in Ireland. In Dublin large numbers attended Major Whittle's Bible readings, and not a few Roman Catholics have been among his audiences.

—The Rev. R. N. Freeman, missionary in the City of Mexico from the Memphis Conference of the Methodist Church South, died suddenly a few days since. He was pastor of a self-sustaining church in the City of Mexico, and was doing a good work in which he was deeply interested.

—The Rev. George Muller and wife are visiting mission stations in India.

—In the revival at Providence, Ill., in connection with the Congregational church, E. A. Paddock pastor, noticed last week, seventy or more persons have confessed Christ, of whom forty are heads of families. Fourteen families include husband and wife, and in two or three instances one or more grown children. The work still goes on.

—Prof. Ed. F. Reid, of Monmouth College, was invited by the students of Xenia Seminary, Ohio, to deliver two lectures in Xenia on the Huguenot Psalmody in the First United Presbyterian church, Feb. 22d and 25th. The subject of the lectures will be "The Huguenot Psalter" and "Psalmody of the English and Scotch Churches." A choir of six male voices under the direction of Mr. J. A. Wiley of the Seminary rendered selections from Huguenot music in connection with the lectures.

—It is stated by an agent of the S. S. Union that in Breathitt county, Kentucky, with a population of 8,000, there is not a single church building. Wherever services are held some private or public building is used Is there no call for aggressive domestic mission work.

—Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe, D. D., writes to the Independent in favor of a Christian Alliance as distinguished from, and in some respects opposed to, the Evangelical Alliance. In connection with his plea he has these words relating to union among Christians while at the same time they agree to differ. "Here let me profess my profound distrust of those specious schemes for union among Christians which are professedly based on 'agreeing to differ.' How sincerely I respect the man who cannot conceal his convictions, but who, because they are so strong, subordinates them to the law of Christian love and maintains them with heartfelt respect for the convictions of others. I see little hope when men stifle and mask their principles in order to shake hands and drink together; but, when bold and ardent spirits can meet for practical efforts in the nation, or for social ends more limited, in spite of real differences, not suppressed in any degree, but openly avowed and understood, then I see the Spirit of Christ at work, and I believe that he who begins it is able to carry it on to the most glorious result."

—Beginning with a fifty-cent piece, ten years ago, the gift of a little orphan boy, the Thornwell Orphanage, a Presbyterian charity, located at Clinton, S. C., has grown year by year, until it now owns a farm of 125 acres, a beautiful seminary building, capable of accomodating an orphan school of 150 pupils, two stone residences filled with orphans, and the nucleus of an endowment, now reaching $5,000; besides having supported for eight years a family of forty orphans at an average cost annually of $2,500.

—At Milbank, Dakota, on Sunday, Feb. 10, a Congregational church building—probably the finest in Dakota—was dedicated. It was built by Mr. Jeremiah Milbank, of New York city, at a cost of $15,000.

—Mr. K. A. Burnell is engaged in evangelistic work in Kansas. At Fredonia union meetings were held, and the whole town seemed moved as never before. Mr. Burnell's next appointments are for Burlingame and Osage City.

—The Congregationalists are sending to China able and efficient teachers and preachers from their California Chinese Christians.

—There is a strange revival work going on in Russia, that empire to which the national Greek church has long been a stranger. The men and women who are carrying it on are called Stundists. They began their work in Norway and Sweden before the Methodist and Baptist missionaries. They carry the open Bible, and thousands gather about them to hear the gracious words of life. They take their name from the German word stund, meaning an hour—an hour with God. They call men and women in the busiest time of the day to come and spend an hour with God. The sect has swept over a large part of Russia and made captive one village after another.—The Advance.

ALL REMITTANCES should be made by draft on Chicago, New York or Boston, postal money order, express or registered letter. Currency by unregistered letter at sender's risk. In sending money the amount and what it is for should be distinctly stated. In every instance the name of the writer and his post office address should be given to avoid confusion or mistake.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE FOR 1884.

The national representative of the movement to "WITHSTAND, EXPOSE AND REMOVE" THE SECRET LODGES can now promise for the coming year a more attractive LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS than ever before, embracing some of the ablest writers upon Christian reform topics in over twenty denominations. The Cynosure has been known for fifteen years as one of the most radical and uncompromising defenders of Christianity against the error of false religious systems, especially those now organized and powerful in the SECRET LODGES OF AMERICA.

The Cynosure is a welcome family paper in thousands of homes, having a choice family department, temperance, religious and secular news, farm notes, editorial notes on current events, literary reviews, etc.

The editors, PRES. J. BLANCHARD and HENRY L. KELLOGG, will be most ably assisted by the lecturers and agents of the National Christian Association and its auxiliaries: J. P. "FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the pastmaster of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do."

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much.' This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. With each "Glance" will be sent an N. C. A. tract, and as the pamphlet gives an exposition of the ceremonies of the lodge the tract will give an exposition of the character of those ceremonies.

Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only to one address. Single copies 6 cents.

UNSHOD HORSES.

Mr. Sam Chapin, of Lowell, writes as follows to Cotton, Wool and Iron on the subject of shoeing horses: "I have a horse I have owned over seven years that I think a great deal of, and which I have kept for my own driving. I came to the conclusion four years ago that shoeing was against nature. I talked the same to horsemen here in Lowell, and they said it might do in some cases, but for a man who drove as I did over the pavements, it would ruin a horse's feet in one month's time. I did not believe it, although I did not get my courage up to pull off my horses shoes until April, 1882. Since that time those shoes have hung up in the stable, and I would not put them on her feet again for any consideration. She had good feet when I took them off and she has better feet to-day, and you know, Mr Editor, and all of my acquaintance in Lowell, that I am not a slow driver, no matter whether I am on pavement or a soft road. I would not advise parties to take off their horses' shoes at this time of the year, but take them off in the spring, when the frost is coming out of the grouud, and by the time the ground gets hard the frog of the foot gets grown down so as to become a cushion for the hard ground and pavements to protect the nerves of the feet from injury. I now drive my horse up hill and down, over pavements, crossings, etc. I never expect to see a harder winter for ice than we had here in Lowell last year, when some of my neighbors sharpened their horses' shoes twice a week, and I drove all winter (and what is called pretty sharp, too,) without a shoe, and no slipping, either.

FRUIT TREES FOR ORNAMENT.

Can any one tell me why a grapevine is not a suitable ornament for a front porch, or what would be the objection to a fine standard pear or grand wide-spreading apple tree in the lawn? Was ever a blossoming shade tree more beautiful than either of these when the flowers come out? And is not the rich green of the leaves a thing of beauty all the season? When the purple clusters hang thick on the vine and the red apples and juicy pears shine through the leaves in autumn, it certainly could not take anything from the beauty of the scene. When one has but little space, as in a village lot, could not the useful and ornamental be profitably combined by putting in handsome fruit trees in the place of those designed only for shade? And a pretty dwarf pear or two would look well among the shrubbery. A row of young cherries before a fine house with a many pillared porch is one of the pleasantest memories of my early walks to school. The old doctor who owned the property gave those trees as much care and attention as he ever did a rich patient. He was almost daily doing something for them, if it was only to pour a bucket of suds about their roots, loosen the ground a little or bury a dish of bones under the soil. But their marvellous growth was the wonder of the village, and in a very few years they cast a deep shade over the whole sidewalk and yielded a bountiful supply of great ox-heart cherries. Let us give our children all such memories we can, for they are healthful for mind and body both. Fruit, or no fruit, means riches or poverty in the minds of our little children, and there is certainly a thriftiness about a home well supplied with this luxury which is better than an old stocking full of hard dollars in the strong chest, but only one old crab apple tree in the pasture lot.—*Correspondence Ind. TESTING SEEDS.

During the winter months the farmer and gardener should look over their seed, and ascertain what they have got that are of good quality, and decide what to buy. It is always best to buy seeds early, so as to give time to test them, to ascertain their germinating qualities. This is very easily done by planting seeds in a box of earth kept in a warm room. Whatever seeds are planted should be counted, so as to know just what proportion germinates.

In testing seeds care should be taken not to plant too deep, especially if the seeds be small, and care should also be taken to keep the earth moist, but not too wet. A box six inches wide and twelve inches long may be divided into eight parts, each part of which will be three inches square; this will be large enough to plant twenty-five seeds in. Thus eight varieties of seeds can be tested in each box.

The trouble of testing seeds is so slight that no farmer ought to neglect it. Yet we apprehend that comparatively few do it; but even when they buy seed, plant large fields without knowing the quality of the seeds until it is too late to remedy the evil. It is not only important to know if any of the seeds will germinate, it is also important to know just what proportion. If by testing it is found that twenty out of the twenty-five germinate, it may be considered very good, and only the usual quantity planted; but if only fifteen out of the twenty-five germinate, it may be considered not very good, but if found necessary to plant it an extra quantity must be used. If on the contrary, all of the seeds germinate, then it may be considered to be seed of extra quality and not so much should be planted. In testing seeds more than one trial should be made; if eight varieties of seeds are to be tested, two boxes should be used, and twenty-five seeds of each variety should be planted in each box. In this way a very correct judgment may be drawn as to the quality of each variety.

To plant a large field and lose the whole crop because the seed is not good, is not only a great disappointment, but it is a great loss, which could have been avoided by a very few moments' work. A farmer who thus loses his crop is entitled to but little sympathy.—Massachus etts Ploman.

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to oure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN BRIEF.

—Charles Sumner's old house in Washington is now a hotel "annex;" Edward Everett's is occupied by a War Department office; and so is the house in which Seward was nearly murdered at the time of Lincoln's assassination; Chase's "Edgewood" stands empty; Stanton's and Hamilton Fish's houses are boarding houses now; and Daniel Webster's former residence has been converted into a beer saloon.

—An exchange says a Harvard student has fitted up his room at a cost of $4,000. The probabilities are that he will be the poorest scholar of his class, and before old age will be glad to take a clerkship under some of the now poverty-stricken members of his class. It is a rare thing for a scolarship and riches to go together. The father makes no greater mistake than when he lines the pockets of his son in college with greenbacks.

—A lady living near Baltimore, who is very deaf, stopped a milkman as he was passing the house the other day, and asked him how much he charged for a quart of milk, and then put up her ear-trumpet to catch the reply. The man drew a quart of milk and emptied it into the trumpet, and the result has been that he has to go three miles out of his way to keep out of sight of the lady's son, who sits at the front door waiting for him to pass.

—Matthew Lafferty, a workman engaged in making the excavation for the laying of the electric light conduit on Chestnut street near Broad street, Philadelphia, struck a hard lump of earth which loosened itself from the deposit. Shifting his position, he placed his foot upon the lump, when it crushed in under his weight and a large black toad jumped out. He dropped his pick in fright, and stood staring at the animal. It remained perfectly still. James Higgins, another laborer, who was not afraid to handle it, took the toad up and put it in his dinner kettle for safe keeping. Several gentlemen examined the reptile during the evening. Dr. Charles Irving expressed the opinion that it had been embedded for many years, as the cavity in which it had been confined showed no break other than that which Lafferty's heel caused.

—The annual compilation of the latest military returns from the States shows the organized militia to be 81,261 non-commissioned officers and men and 6,802 commissioned officers, while the unorganized militia of the States aggregates 6,-419,912. New York has the largest organized militia force, having 10,779 men and 788 commissioned officers. Pennsylvania is second, with 7,454 men and 552 officers. Florida ranks third, having 6,261 men and 455 officers. Ohio Fourth, with 5,515 men and 360 officers; South Carolina is fifth, with 4,612 men and 507 officers; Delaware, Nebraska, Nevada and Vermont reported the smallest organized militia, the first named having only 234 men and 21 officers; Nebraska, 450 men and 402 officers; Nevada, 615 men and 76 officers, and Vermont, 624 men and 65 officers. Ohio has the largest unorganized militia strength, 500,-000; New York, 492,628; Pennsylvania, 461,482; Illinois, 400,000; Missouri, 310,-000 men of militia age, unorganized.

—A correspondent of the New York Tribune, in a letter from Constantinople, says: "The prevalence of oppression and crime indicates disorganization. One cannot prognosticate the rate of dissolution in a mass that is already jelly-like in respect to consistency. But it is safe to say that fifty years have not seen such languor, such flabbiness of body and mind, as has befallen the Turkish body politic since Tel-el-Kebir and its destruction of the Pan-Islamic idea. The Grand Vizier, after a long tussle with the party of inanition, succeeded in gaining the Sultan's assent to three commissions for reorganizing the administration of affairs. But these commissions are merely advisory, and are destined to follow in the path of generations of such commissions in doing nothing. The destroying forces at work in Turkey become more and more evident every day, and the fact that this ancient empire has close before it new disasters, becomes more certain."

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE,

Invaluable at a Tonic.

Dr. J. L. PRATT, Greenfield, Ill., says: "It is all that it claims to be—invaluable as a tonic in any case where an acid tonic is indicated."

Recent experiments made in Paris have been successful in producing artificially in the laboratory specimens of almost all kinds of rocks of igneous formation such as lava, basalt, etc., thus imitating Nature in her most secret processes, and completing on a small scale in a few days what she requires years to accomplish.

OUR ANCESTORS' NERVE.

THE SECRET OF THEIR UNUSUAL VIGOR EXPLAINED AND HOW IT CAN BE ACQUIRED.

There was something about the sturdy vigor of former generations that challenges the admiration of every man, woman and child. They were no epicures—these ancient fathers. They lived simply, and successfully met and overcome difficulties that would have discouraged this age and generation. The rigors of the frontier were supplemented by the savages; wild beasts threatened their enterprise and poverty was a common companion. Yet they bravely encountered and resisted all those things and laid the foundation of a land whose blessings we now enjoy. Their constitutions were strong; their health unsurpassed and yet they were forced to expose themselves continually. There certainly must have been some good and adequate cause for all this and for the physical superiority of that age over the present.

It is well known to every one conversant with the history of that time that certain home compounds of strengthening qualities were used almost universally by these pioneers. The malarial evils and exposures to which they were subjected necessitated this. When their bodies become chilled by cold or debilitated by the damp mists of a new country they were forced to counteract it by the use of antidotes. Medicines were few in those days and doctors almost unknown. Hence the preparations above referred to. From among the number, all of which were compounded upon the same general principle, one was found to be more efficient, and hence far more popular than all the rest. It was well known through the middle and western states and was acknowledged as the best preparation for malarial disorders and general debility then known. The recipe for compounding this valuable article was handed down from one family and generation to another, was known to the Harrison family and is used as the basis and general formula for the present "Tippecanoe," the name being suggested by the battle in which General Harrison was engaged. The manufacturers have thoroughly investigated this subject in its minutest details, and are certain for malassimilation of food, dyspepsia, tired feelings, general debility, prostrations, malarial disorders and humors in the blood, nothing can exceed in value "Tippecanoe," which was the medicine of our forefathers and seems destined to be the most popular preparation of the day.

"Tippecanoe" is prepared and given to the public by Messrs. H. H. Warner and Co., of Rochester, N. Y., proprietors of the famous Warner's Safe Cure, which is now the most extensively used of any American medicine. The well known standing of this house is a sufficient guarantee of the purity and power of this preparation which seeks to banish one of the greatest banes of the nineteenth century—mal-assimilation of food. Any one who experiences trouble of digestion; who feels less vigor than formerly; whose system has unquestionably "run down" and who realizes the necessity of some strengthening tonic cannot afford to permit such symptoms to continue. If the farmer finds that his threshing machine does not separate the grain from the straw he realizes that something is wrong and tries to repair the machine. When the food does not sustain the life; when it fails to make blood; when it causes the energy to depart and ambition to die, it is a certain sign that something is wrong and that the human machine needs repairing. It is not a question of choice; it is a matter of duty. You must attend to your health or your sickness and nothing will sooner overcome these evils than "Tippecanoe," the medicine of the past a safeguard for the present and a guarantee of health for the future.

"I am the Last of Six."

One rainy forenoon, something less than a year ago, a pale, cadaverous youth walked into the store of C. N. Crittenton, New York, and in weak, husky tones, interrupted frequently by a dry hacking cough, stated that he wanted a couple of bottles of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar. "I am the last of six," he said; "the others all died of consumption, and I am going fast: I will try this new remedy, but I have no hope." He did try it, and to some purpose. He took in all twelve bottles, and is to-day in perfect health—lungs sound, cough gone, not a sign of pulmonary disease remaining. Sold by druggists.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.
By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.
Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The Postmaster General has suceeeded in making arrangements for a speeial fast mail train between New York and Chieago. The train left New York via the New York Central and Lake Shore and Miehigan Southern at 8:50 P. M., Saturday, arrived at Albany at 1:05 A. M., where it received the postal ear eonneetion from Boston with the mail from the New England States. It reaehed Chieago at 12:27 Monday morning. An arrangement was made with the Chieago, Burlington and Quiney road to eontinue the train westward, leaving Chieago at 3:00 A. M.

—The Hon. Kenneth Raynor, Solieitor of the Treasury, who died Mar. 5, was a native of North Carolina. His home was in Raleigh until ealled to Washington by President Hayes, who appointed him to the position he has since held. Politieally, he was an old-line Whig before the war, but for many years past he has been identified with the Republiean party.

—Sinee the introduetion of 2-eent letter postage there has been an unexpeeted reduetion in the number of postal cards issued. During eight months the issue of postal eards only reaehed 256,552,750, as against 260,226,250 for the corresponding time last year.

—Those who are opposed to the extension of the bonded period for distillers do not believe the bill will pass. The whisky men do not like it as it is. Those who are opposed to the bill eonstitute about half the Demoerats and half the Republicans.

—The Woman's Suffrage Convention eolleeted over $400 at the door of Lineoln Hall as admission fees to its different meetings, the priee per person being ten eents only. All the members eame in on life tiekets, so there must have been nearly 1,500 admissions eaeh day to the eonvention.

—Extensive preparations are being made by the Good Templars in th edistriet for the reeeption and entertainment of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of the World, which will hold its session in May next. Ninety grand jurisdietions will be represented by over 400 delegates.

COUNTRY.

The eattle plague whieh has broken out in Woodson eounty, Kansas, proves to be the genuine foot-and-mouth disease and in its most virulent form. Dr. Holeomb, United States veterinary surgeon at Fort Leavenworth, after visiting Woodson county and examining the eattle, pronounees the situation serious. Of one herd of 120, 90 are affeeted, eaeh animal either having lost a hoof or a portion of the leg. In another herd of 96, 35 are affeeted. These herds are in the same neighborhood, but the disease is spreading rapidly. The laws on the statute books are ineffieient for the purpose, but it is believed that by eoneerted action and persistency the eommunities ean deal with the plague. Already the herds eontaining infeeted cattle have been quarantined and a dead line established. Diseased animals are being killed and their bodies burned.

—The family of Chas. Kasten of Elgin, Ill., retired Saturday night leaving a base-burner stove in the house insecurely shut and they were diseovered to-day—the husband dead, and the wife and two ehildren not likely to survive, from the effeets of coal-gas.

—Citizens of Wiehita and Sedgwiek eounty, Kansas, will send to the Ohio flood sufferers, Saturday, forty ear loads of corn besides a large amount of money. The Santa Fe road and its eonnections will earry this donation free to Cineinnati.

—The boiler in Trees' dyeing establishment of Lawrenee, Mass., exploded Thursday morning, killing one man, and wounding two others mortally. Three buildings were demolished, and pieees of the boiler crushed in the roofs of dwellings 400 feet away.

—Near Astor, Iowa, Friday, one of the wheels of a locomotive of a Chieago, Milwaukee and St. Paul train broke, the engine plunging into a ditch. The driver and fireman were killed and a brakeman was fatally mangled.

—William Seollard shot and killed Aleck Dietrichsen at San Leandro, Cal., Wednesday night, and when Seollard's father heard of the tragedy he fell dead.

—The prineipal business bloek in Memphis, Seotland eounty, Mo., burned Friday morning, falling walls killing three persons and wounding seven others, three mortally.

—The first through express passenger train on the Burlington Road from Chieago to Omaha reaehed the latter eity Friday morning and was the cause of general rejoicing. This is the first whole train between the two eities.

FOREIGN.

—The English troops and Osman Digma's Arab forees met on the road to Teb west of Fort Baker Friday, Feb. 29th, and after four hours' stubborn fighting the Arabs retreated, leaving about a thousand dead on the field, the British losing less than a hundred men.

—Twenty-seven hundred bodies were buried at Teb, ineluding the Egyptians killed in the fight between Baker Pasha's troops and the rebels.

—General Graham's operations are to be eonfined to within ten miles of Suakim, whieh indieates that a defensive poliey is being pursued, and not an aggressive one.

—General Gordon's proelamation to the Soudanese, issued Feb. 26th, is as follows: "Sinee my arrival I have given you sound advice. Everything has been done to insure quietness and stop bloodshed. My adviee has not been followed. I am therefore forced against my will to summon the British troops. They will arrive in a few days, when I shall severely punish all who do not ehange their eonduet. It is generally believed either General Gordon's objeet is to frighten the natives into submission, or that the telegram has been mutilated in transmission.

—A dispateh from Havre says: "There are thirty Irish-American Fenians here. The dynamite faetory between Amiens and Boulogne is strietly watehed. It is stated the alleged informer MeDermott, who is in Paris, has offered to give valuable information to the English poliee. He will do so at the risk of his life, as the Clan-na-Gael deelare they will assassinate him."

—In the House of Commons Thursday Gladstone said the government had no intention of assuming eontrol of Egypt, and that the troops would be withdrawn at the earliest moment possible.

—Organized action against anarehists and dynamiters, without the formality of any treaty, has been agreed upon between England and the eontinental powers.

—Saturday the last bolt was to be driven and the last eonneetion made on the Mexiean Central Railroad, whieh unites Chieago with the City of Mexieo by a eontinuous line. The formal opening takes plaee the 15th inst. The eompletion of the road is an event for both the United States and Mexieo.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful represeutation in story of the ev l influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is inteusely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

PRESS COMMENTS:

"Mr. Clark has a national reputation as an author of music and as a solo singer. His music, like himself, has in it the soul of freedom and the life of love. He has made a unique and splendid book. It strikes directly and powerfully in the direction of the several questions of reform to which it is devoted, and also contains many of those old melodies so essential to the circle of song."—[Religious Telescope, Dayton, O.

"I most heartily thank and congratulate you on its timely appearance and excellent contents."—[Sandy Lake News, Pa.

"If you want to sing a variety of songs on a variety of topics, all of them good and many of them beautiful, send for this cheap volume. It contains a rich variety of songs, hymns and tunes—grave and gay."—[Christian Standard, Cincinnati, O.

"Geo. W. Clark is the author of the 'Liberty Minstrel,' 'Harp of Freedom,' etc., etc., and the great performer of songs which had their influence in ushering in the great day of emancipation which we so long labored and prayed for, and which has given five millions of the down-trodden nominal freedom, and which I trust will soon be to them REAL freedom."—[A. F. Williams, Esq., Farmington, Conn.

"This is one of the most complete books of its class that has ever come under our observation."—[Sabbath Recorder, Alfred Center, N. Y.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

The resumption of the fast mail trains between New York and the Mississippi river is made with a promise that the enterprise will be permanent, since it has the experience of the past and General Post-office Department behind it. But how can success attend an enterprise that begins with a despising of the law of God. The first train from New York which inaugurated the system plunged on through the whole twenty-four hours of the Sabbath day; and the continuance of those trains will be at the expense of unceasing Sabbath desecration. Government immorality is as bad and worse than of private individuals, and he must be either a bold or a dull man who should say that a business so begun and so continued will prosper in the end.

The not very innocent cause of the disturbed relations between our Government and Germany is Mr. Thomas Ochiltree of Texas, who proposed the resolution on the death of Dr. Lasker addressed to the German parliament. The bravado of that gentleman since he has become famous, so unexpectedly to himself and his acquaintances, would be amusing if it did not disgust. When asked the other day if Congress would stand by him against Bismarck, he is reported as saying, like a Texas bully: "You can bet your sweet life it will. I am sorry to give old Biz so much prominence before the world, but before he gets through with Tom Ochiltree we will think a tornado has struck him. People can have their fun about me, but they can't say I'm a d——d fool, and don't you forget it." Monday the papers mentioned new and unpleasant symptoms in the case and some talk big in their folly and bluster of what we will do if the German is not circumspect. This whole affair from first to last reflects no credit upon our Congress.

The Senate has passed the House bill removing the penalties that have rested upon Fitz-John Porter for twenty years, since Lincoln appointed him a military trial. The House must yet act upon some amendments, and President Arthur may veto the measure, but if Congress has its way the work is done. It is enough to say that were not that body so largely composed of men for whose bad cause Porter sacrificed the lives of multitudes of Union soldiers and jeopardized the Union armies and capital, he would not now be vindicated. It is said that an unimagined difficulty has arisen. Robert Lincoln as Secretary of War must sign the order by which Congress would restore Porter to the regular army. He affirms that he will resign before he will consent to be party to an act so disgraceful and demoralizing to the army, and unjust to the dead. The fact that Mr. Lincoln is almost as good as nominated for the Vice Presidency by the Republicans may make a pause in this business.

The dynamite business in England has had the effect, not to make Irish burdens any the less, but to unite the governments of Europe in measures for the extermination of the desperadoes who find their rare employment in blowing up railway stations in a crowded city. Since much of the material for this infamous business comes from this country, the pretended indifference on this side the water is not very becoming a people whose crowded hotels were fired a few years ago by wretches who hoped to make thus some capital for an unholy rebellion, and whose traveling friends are as likely to suffer from a mid-ocean explosion as any one else. A circular was last week sent out to all United States attorneys and marshalls, —quietly, "for fear of the" Irish politicians—calling attention to the statutes regulating the shipment of explosives, but as they relate to shipments in bulk, they are inadequate to the present emergency. A Paris dispatch to the Tribune suggests a method of awakening some positive interest in the matter thus: "Were some of the numerous American citizens, with their wives and children, enjoying a hard-earned European holiday, blown to atoms at Charing Cross or the Gare du Nord, American legislation would wake up to the necessity of drastic measures and remove an intolerable nuisance to the entire traveling community. At more than one foreign office it is even hinted that if the present status continues, no American will be allowed to land in Europe or pass from one European country to another unless provided with a duly vised passport."

Dr. J. D. Newman, President Grant's old pastor in the Methodist church, Washington, now preaching to a Congregational church in New York, had before him a large audience Sabbath evening and took occasion to speak concerning the manipulation of our politics by foreigners for the purpose of getting off some petty revenge upon the European governments that have pe wed them out. But Mr. Newman's remedy would be somewhat severe. He said, while the audience wondered and some left the house, "I shall not be satisfied until I see the day in this country when Congress so amends the naturalization laws that foreigners will be compelled to reside here just as long as I, a native born, did myself before they can exercise the elective franchise. America is for the Americans. Too much premium is given in this country to foreigners. All the offices are open to them. I shall be glad if legislation is enacted that shall declare that no foreign-born citizen shall ever enter the halls of legislation." Since it was not very long ago that we were all "foreigners," Dr. Newman's remarks lose much of their point. But he is right in the matter of political premium to classes whose ignorance or prejudice form the most ready means to control their actions. He is right too, respecting the large number of foreigners who seem to have come across the water only so they could make faces at European governments without risk of a flogging.

THE DOG AND HIS CHAIN.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

I am filled with indignation against this stupendgus fraud, this systematic impudence, to such an extent that it requires the exercise of all the Christian patience I possess to keep from being personal in my discussion of the subject. Indeed, one's outspoken positiveness is frequently misnamed "bitterness," or "vindictiveness," or, it may be, "malice." In view of this misapplication of terms it may not be amiss to say a few words right here to show that anger, or indignation, is not necessarily an un-Christian feeling. A Christian may be angry against sin—he may be angry with himself for sinning against better knowledge, and yet be free from guilt. Envy, bitterness, vindictiveness and malice, however, are always sinful. Malice, it seems to me, includes and intensifies all the other feelings. Take them all and boil them down, and bottle them up for future use, and you have malice, in full force. This is the devil within that throws rotten eggs, closes the doors of public buildings and threatens all sorts of evil consequences when Masonry is spoken against.

"Perjury!" you know, is one of the Masonic dogs. It is fed on blood and raw flesh to increase its fierceness. This dog is generally kept chained; which chain is public opinion. The chain, however, is quite long and allows the dog considerable room. He seldom gets hold of any one to bite them, but he barks a great deal, and that frightens some folks even more than a nip in the leg does others. He seems to be a very religious dog, too—if I may be allowed to use the expression, figuratively—and his keepers say that his "orthodoxy" is not to be questioned. As I happen to know something about this particular particularity of this "ancient" animal, I will tell you a few items from my own experience, and give you some o my views, based upon personal observation.

As "preacher in charge" of a church in Illinois, not many years since, I had occasion, as I had the right, to examine the church records—the book containing the constitution, by-laws, and the proceedings of the regular business meetings of the congregation. In perusing the proceedings of one of these meetings I was peculiarly impressed by one item. It seems that application had been made, a short time before, by an "anti-secrecy fanatic" for the use of the lecture-room of the church wherein to hold forth against secret orders, and Masonry in particular. The use of the room was promptly refused. The matter, it seems, was considered of such importance as to demand the special attention and prompt action of the church in public meeting assembled, and a resolution covering the case was adopted. This resolution was in substance as follows: It having been already decided that the lecture-room should never be let for immoral purposes, the same is now reiterated as the sense of this meeting. As a man who lectures against Masonry is a "perjured man," if he be a seceder, or a slanderer and a liar, if he has no experimental knowledge of Masonry, he is, therefore, immoral, and the use of the church should be denied him.

I say, this is the substance, or sense, of the resolution as entered upon that church book. I caution against the use of it as a quotation; except the words, perjured man.

Now, any one can see that the members of that church stand committed to secretism. That resolution indirectly, but emphatically, indorses Masonry. A man who, with the love of God in his heart and with the inspired Word of Truth in his hand, asks permission to show that oath-bound secrecy is in opposition to, and a violation of, human and divine law, is denounced as a "perjured man" by a religious assembly, and without having given him a hearing!

I stop here because my letter must not take up more than its share of your valuable space. But I shall not forget where I left off, when next you hear from me.

HOW MASONS ROB ONE ANOTHER.

BY J. W. MOSS.

The Masonic Grand Lodge claims the absolute power to tax lodges and individual Masons at its sole discretion.—Chase's Digest, pp. 24, 448, &c.

In the fullness of our charity towards the "nice men" who exercise the more than Cæsarean power of the Grand Lodge, we are apt to imagine that this fearful assumption of power is seldom or never exercised; but some facts which have come under my notice, give color at least to the belief that it is not unfrequently exercised.

We often see men (Masons) who have lived and died reputedly rich, whose estates, when they come to be settled up, will be found to be greatly dwarfed or altogether swallowed up by some big claim of which the family had no previous knowledge.

The word goes out that Mr. B. has been ruined by going somebody's bail, or has met with some great loss in business; all of which is wholly unknown to his surviving friends, further than that some stranger away off at the county seat or some distant city, has a great claim on the estate, which, though inexplicable in its origin must be met.

Several cases of the kind have occurred in my own immediate neighborhood, and while I found it nowise difficult promptly to get precise information concerning all other claims upon the estate, these large claims were always shrouded in mystery; nobody knew anything of them further than that they had to be paid. In such cases the administrator is apt to be a Mason himself. In such cases also the victim is apt to be let alone during his life time. Then the harpies pounce upon his remains and scarcely leave a bone.

Would it be anywise unreasonable to suppose these unfortunates have in some way offended their lodge masters and been mulcted in a fine that was meant to merely leave a nest-egg in the nest, or even if not offenders have been induced to buy lodge favor at such a fearful price. The modus operandi is doubtless often to have the victim to figure as bail for some insolvent debtor; this to keep up appearances.

When Samuel Vanatta of Ryerson's Station, Green Co., Pa., killed Nathaniel Pettit, Vanatta, being a Mason, he was cleared of course. But he was also a rich man, especially in landed property. But from the moment of the murder he began to be involved, and was compelled to keep on raising at every sacrifice, large sums of money which had to be had; but the quid proquo, or equivalent for such sums of money was ever an invisible thing to his friends.

Thirty-five or forty years after the murder he died comparatively poor. He told a friend that he had to raise three thousand dollars at once to hand over to friends who had aided in clearing him; but that to him was a small thing. Why had he to still keep on raising large payments for unknown parties during the whole of his life. The Masonic master pulls the Masonic criminal out of the mire of legal "difficulty" from the same motives that moved the farmer to snatch his pig from the fox—that he might eat it himself afterwards.

A later case.—Jack Hinerman, the Mason who made himself so abusive and uproarous at the meetings held by Rev. D. B. Turney and myself, died last spring, and was buried by a little clay thrown upon the spruce pine brush which his lodge brothers tossed on him. His farm was given by his father and money besides. He was not an extravagant liver, nor lacked industry; but for several years previous to his death he is said to have been greatly involved, and was paying out annually in the neighborhood of a thousand dollars, and when he died great claims came upon his administrators for payment, insomuch that for a while it was feared his estate would be licked up completely. The papers by their signatures and otherwise showed that he knew of their existence, —but a Mason's secrets, you know, must not be told to the wife of his bosom. Ask about it? "O; he was such a generous soul;" when the fact was notoriously the opposite.

I have given but two of the many cases that have come under my notice. Verily, the "tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." In other words the shelter of the lodge Upas costs more than it is worth in the long run.

As for me, give me God's Word for a lamp to my feet, though in the race of life I should only enjoy an even chance with the rest of mankind—my brethren all.

INFIDELITY IN THE PULPIT.

The editor of Word and Work, a London paper which it is a pleasure to commend again to faithful Christians on this side of the Atlantic, truly says in the last number received:

"Men were honored three centuries ago, or even two centuries ago, in proportion to their pious care in setting forth in fitting framework the truth of God; whereas nowadays the path to honor and success lies over the ruins of the sacred doctrines our forefathers loved so well. Let any one write a clever or captious book, denying any portion of the Christian faith, and it is welcomed by the leading organs of public opinion with loudest notes of praise; while any one who timidly or boldly attempts to maintain the time-honored belief is received either with a chilling silence or the wildest scorn. Our lot, in this respect, has fallen in evil times. . . . The 'falling away' which precedes an era of most sifting trial has already come."

The voice of Mr. Spurgeon also sounds across the sea in tones of warning:

"Let the new theologians have liberty to preach what they like on their own ground, but not in our pulpits. Alas! the leading members in many churches are Christians without backbones, molluscous, spongy; snails I would call them, only they have not the consistency of the snail's shell. They are ready to swallow any mortal thing, if the preacher seems clever and eloquent. Cleverness and eloquence—away with them! If it is not the truth of God, the more cleverly and eloquent it is preached the more damnable it is. We must have the truth and nothing but the truth, and I charge the fathers in Christ all over England and America to see to this. Get ye to your watch-tower and guard the flock, lest the sheep be destroyed while ye are asleep."

That the state of things in the old country, of which these earnest witnesses complain, exists also in the United States is too obvious to call for proof. An overworked pastor of a large church in an Eastern city, and an overworked pastor of a large church in a Western city, were compelled to abstain from all l bor during the last summer. This gave them the opportunity, which they had not enjoyed for many years, of listening to preaching, and although they were separated hundreds of miles while resting, and neither knew the experience of the other, they both declared to the same brother at the close of the summer, that, having heard sermons every Lord's day for two months, they had not once heard the Gospel.

On the other hand, one of them heard evolution, infidelity and nonsense boldly proclaimed by a prominent D. D. He heard another distinguished pulpit orator declare with great emphasis, as he waved his hand over his manuscript in the presence of less than two hundred persons, out of a population of at least three thousand, that "we are evidently living in the dawn of the millennial glory, even if its beams be not actually upon us." Much of this kind of stuff was preached, but for two dreary months not once was the way of salvation exhibited, nor scarcely once in an entire sermon would the name of Christ occur, nor a passage of Scripture be quoted apart from the text.

But this is not the worst of it. The preachers who draw the crowds as a rule are the sensationalists, the mountebanks and humbugs, the men who have no convictions of truth; and the nearer they approach to infidelity, the more certain they are of popular favor. The Rev. Heber Newton, for example, was regarded as a man of mediocre ability, and quite common-place in every respect; but when he began to repeat the stale objections of German infidelity to the authenticity and genuineness of many of the books of the Bible, he stepped to the front as an advanced thinker, an accomplished scholar, a great preacher.

A recent telegram announces that the demand for pews and sittings in the building where he assails God's Word, is so great that it cannot be met, and he adds another to the number of preachers who have achieved success at the tremendous cost of disloyalty to Christ, unfaithfulness to their ordination vows, and the terrible prospect of finding the blood of murdered souls on their garments in the day of judgment. But this is not the worst. A devoted servant of the Lord, whose word will not be questioned by any who know him, declares that in a conversation with an Episcopal minister of New York city, the latter avowed his hearty sympathy with the views of Rev. Heber Newton, and stated that, out of seventy-five Episcopal ministers in that city and Brooklyn, more than fifty hold, even if they do not publicly express the same opinions of the Bible.

No wonder infidelity is increasing so rapidly in the pews, when it is so boldly proclaimed in the pulpits, and no wonder intelligent men of the world are beginning to look upon preachers and the church with contempt. There has just been received an article from the Mail and Express, a secular paper of New York, said to be ably conducted, referring to an article in The Sun, another secular and political paper, which the former presents to its readers under the appropriate heading:

"SUN"-LIGHT ON FROCKED INFIDELITY.

"Our able and independent contemporary, the Sun, . . is compelled to notice the significant fact that an Episcopal clergyman on Staten Island—doubtless encouraged by the success of Mr. Heber Newton in defying ecclesiastical discipline for theories of the Bible only differing from those of Renan as feeble adaptations differ from the works of original genius—has been figuratively speaking, sawing off the limb on which he, as a priest, was sitting, by denying the inspiration of the Bible and propagating his infidelity in the uniform of his betrayed faith. The Sun remarks very caustically, but with justifiable earnestness of contempt for such anomalous priests; 'Indeed, the clergyman in question, Rev. Dr. Bush of Staten Island, says that his opinions touching inspiration and revelation, which are substantially the same as those of Rev. Heber Newton, have been endorsed and commended by some of the leading men in the Episcopal church. There is nothing surprising in the statement, for Mr. Newton continues to be rector of a very prosperous parish, and it does not seem probable that he will be subjected to ecclesiastical discipline, because he applies to the Bible. methods of criticism which ignore or directly antagonize the teachings of his church as to divine revelation.'

"The Sun now insists, as the Mail and Express has insisted frequently the past year, that there are the gravest issues underlying the prolonged tolerance of an aggressive advocacy of the most subtle and dangerous form of infidelity by a priest in the pay and uniform, and presumably under the discipline, of the Episcopal church. And these issues concern the whole community, for they effect the question of maintaining of faith among men in the word of Christians as a body. The Sun does not overstate the seriousness of this practical—not theological question—when it closes its censures of the two recreant priests and of this anarchical diocese, by saying . . . 'You are not unselfish martyrs of free thought. You are well paid frauds. Step down and out.'"—The Truth.

WAS JOHN WESLEY A FREEMASON?

This question is suggested to us by the following somewhat amazing paragraph in the Press of Philadelphia of February 2d last:

Rev. D. W. Bull, of Transfer, Mercer county, has some interesting relics of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. They consist of a Royal Arch Masonic apron, receipts of lodge dues paid by Wesley to the lodge of which he was a member, extending over a period of some fifteen years, and a number of books from Wesley's private library containing his autograph. The Masonic apron is 153 years old. These relics were purchased by Rev. Mr. Bull's grandfather at the public auction of Wesley's personal effects after his death.

Our question is not whether Masonry is good, bad, or indifferent; whether John Wesley would have been a whit the worse if he had been a Royal Arch Mason, or a Master Mason, or a Knight Templar, or a whit the better if he was. It is whether this story be true or not. Here are several questions. Was there a public auction of Wesley's personal effects after his death? We doubt it. His will disposed of everything he had.

I give the books, furniture, and whatever else belongs to me in the three houses at Kingswood, in trust to Thomas Coke, Alexander Mather and Henry Moore, to be still employed in teaching and maintaining the children of poor traveling preachers.

I give to Thomas Coke, Dr. John Whitehead, and Henry Moore, all the books which are in my study and bed-chamber at London and in my studies, in trust, for the use of the preachers who shall labor there from time to time.

I give the coins, and whatever else is found in the drawer of my bureau at London, to my dear granddaughters, Mary and Jane Smith.

I give all my manuscripts to Thomas Coke, Doctor Whitehead, and Henry Moore, to be burned or published as they see good.

I give whatever money remains in my bureau and pockets, at my decease, to be equally divided between Thomas Briscoe, William Collins, John Easton, and Isaac Brown.

I desire my gowns, cassocks, sashes, and bands may remain in the chapel for the use of the clergymen attending there. I desire the London assistant, for the time being, to divide the rest of my wearing apparel between those four of the traveling preachers that want it most, only my pelisse I give to the Rev. Mr. Creighton; my watch to my friend Joseph Bradford; my gold seal to Elizabeth Ritchie.

I give my chaise and horses to James Ward and Charles Wheeler, in trust, to be sold, and the money to be divided, one half to Hannah Abbott, and the other to the members of the Select Society.

Is it reasonable to believe that such relics, if they existed, would have been sold at auction? Every relic he had was desired by his friends. By every presumption there was no public auction of John Wesley's effects. That his receipted bills should have been sold—a part of this story—is absurd beyond belief.

So far presumption. Enough if there were no more.

We shall now proceed to prove the story false by Wesley's own words, See Wesley's works, volume 4, page 398: "Friday, June 18, 1773. I went to Ballymena, and read a strange tract, that professes to discover 'the inmost recesses of Freemasonry,' said to be 'translated from the French original, lately published at Berlin.' I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry! And what a secret is it which so many concur to keep! From what motive? Through fear, or shame to own it!"

Any person with a grain of reason can see that John Wesley knew nothing whatever of Masonry. No more thoroughly absurd yarn was ever spun—whatever may be the mistake which gave rise to it. —N. Y. Christian Advocate, Feb. 21.

THE WASHINGTON CONVENTION.

PROHIBITION.

ADDRESS BY REV. B. T. ROBERTS.

Good men are often found on the wrong side of moral questions. Many are unconsciously influenced more by what is popular than they are by what is right.

It appears impossible that any intelligent, honest, temperance man should be opposed to prohibition. But many who claim to be in favor of temperance are against prohibition. Generally, church members profess to be in favor of temperance. There is but little doubt that if all the members of all the churches in this country were to put forth earnest, intelligent and united efforts to prohibit by law the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, it would be done. Many claim to be temperance men in principle, who in practice are opposed to it. The cause of temperance can never triumph while men are licensed by law to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

On my way to the election I asked one of our hardest drinking men how he was going to vote on the license question. To my surprise, he said he always voted against license.

"Why is that?"

"Because I know I ought not to drink. It is ruining me. If I can get it I will have it. But if I could not get it conveniently, I should do without it."

The strange sight was witnessed of a habitual drunkard voting for prohibition, and a steady church member who never drinks, voting for license. Such are some of the inconsistencies of human nature!

All the lovers of God and humanity should take side in favor of prohibition.

What do the friends of prohibition propose to do?

They do not propose to secure the enactment of sumptuary laws. Some political papers, claiming to be respectable, boldly assert that this is the aim of the prohibitionists. Every intelligent man ought to know better. A sumptuary law is a law enacted to prevent extravagance in banquets, dress, and private expenditure. Such laws were common among the ancients. Zaleucus, the Locrian legislator, ordained that "No woman should appear on the streets attended by more than one maid servant, unless she were drunk; or wear gold or embroidered apparel, unless she designed to act unchastely." At an early period of Roman history the Censors punished all persons guilty of luxurious living.

Sumptuary laws were in great favor in England. In the reign of Edward III. it was enacted that "No man of whatever condition or estate shall be allowed more than two courses at dinner and supper, or more than two kinds of food in each course; except on the principal festivals of the year, when three courses at the utmost are to be allowed." All who did not enjoy a free estate of one hundred pounds per annum were prohibited from wearing furs, skins, or silk; and the use of foreign cloth was allowed to the royal family alone. The last of the English sumptuary laws were not repealed till 1856.

The laws which we have in most of our States forbidding the sale of liquors to an intoxicated person, partake much more of the nature of sumptuary law than does a prohibitory law. There should be suitable enactments by our National and State governments to make the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage a crime to be punished by adequate penalties.

What is a crime? A brilliant writer, a mistaken friend of temperance, says: "A vice is a harm I do to myself in a mistaken pursuit of happiness. A crime is a harm I do to another person, with malice prepense."

We cannot concur in this definition, unless the phrase, "malice prepense," is taken in its strict, technical, legal sense:—"an intention to do an act which is wrongful, without just cause or excuse." When a man does a wrong act, with the intention of doing it, the law presumes that the intention was wrong. In reality many an unlawful act is done without any "malice aforethought," or without any intention to injure any one. Custodians of the money of others often use it with the full intention of properly replacing it when needed. One of the most respected and trusted bank cashiers of Rochester is now in prison for using the funds of the bank in oil speculations. There did not seem to be any doubt of the success of the venture. He had not the slightest intention of wronging any one. Had the investment turned out favorably, every depositor would have had his money. Properly speaking, there was no malice, no ill-will towards any one. But there was a crime—a great crime.

Forgeries are sometimes committed when the forger fully expects and intends to meet the obligation to which unauthorized, he attaches the name of another.

Blackstone, the great English writer on common law, says: "A crime or misdemeanor is an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it Public wrongs, or crimes and misdemeanors, are a breach and violation of public right and duties, due to a whole community, considered as a community, in its social, aggregate capacity."

"In common usage the word 'crime' is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious degree: while smaller faults and omissions of less consequence are comprised under the general name of misdemeanors only. Treason, murder and robbery are properly ranked among crimes, since, besides the injury done to individuals, they strike at the very beginning of society, which cannot possibly subsist where actions of this sort are suffered to escape with impunity."

A distinction is properly made between acts which are mala per se, (wrong in themselves), such as murder and theft, and others which are mala prohibita, (made crimes by the positive enactments of the legislature), such as smuggling.

That selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage is malum per se, a wrong in itself, and should be made a crime and punished by law, is evident from the following considerations:

1. It is, by common consent, in all civilized countries, declared to be a crime under certain circumstances. The writer to whom we have referred admits that "The sale to a child, to a man who is drunk, to a sot, or to a person who is dangerous when under the influence of drink, is a crime. The sale to a man who is insane, or non compos mentis, is a crime."

But why a crime? Is it not because it is obtaining money without giving a fair equivalent, of a person who, on account of weakness of mind, or the power of a vicious appetite, is incapable of making a contract? But how came the drunkard to be incapable of judging for himself when liquor should be sold him? Was it not by selling him liquor? When he began to drink his judgment was as sound as that of men generally. Can it be a crime to sell liquor to a sot and no crime to sell it to a man up to the point that he becomes a sot? As far as the injury to the man is concerned, it is already done when he becomes a sot. His prospects for life are blighted, his family are plunged into misery and disgrace; and what matters it to him whether he fills a drunkard's grave now, or a few years hence? Society has lost a good citizen. He has long since ceased to contribute to its welfare. The sot is already a burden to society and liable to become more so by his crimes, or his poverty, every day he lives. So, if it could be right to sell liquor to any human being, it would be right to sell it to a confirmed drunkard. But we all agree that it is a crime to sell liquor to him—therefore it must be much more a crime to sell it to one who is liable to become a drunkard.

2. Robbery is a crime. A neighbor sold a farm and invested the proceeds in government bonds. Masked men broke into his house, bound him to his bed, broke open his safe and stole his bonds. This we all agree was a crime. Another man was left by his father a good farm well stocked. He went to the saloon and bought liquor. In a few years, in consequence of his drinking habits, he put a mortgage on his farm, and a few years later another. The farm was sold. He saved enough to buy a small house. In a few years more that was gone. The bartender took the proceeds. His faithful, devoted wife, reared in comfort, supports the family as best she can. Was it no crime to him and his family to rob him through his weakness, of his farm and his manhood, and render him incapable of self support? Is it no crime to society at large to make the producer a pauper? To have his boys so exposed that they early acquire the same insatiable appetite and form the same pernicious habits? But it is said that he parted with his money of his own free will. So does the gambler and we punish gambling as a crime. But the will of the drunkard is not free, it is enslaved by appetite. To take a thousand or ten thousand dollars from a man by theft does not then, do either him or society the harm that it does to take it from him for strong drink. He still has the capacity to make money. But the drunkard has lost the ability to even take care of himself.

3. The use of intoxicating liquors is the great cause of crime. This has been demonstrated again and again, by the statistics of prisons and of our criminal courts. It is a demonstrated fact that fully eighty per cent of the crime and seventy-five per cent of the pauperism of the country are directly traceable to the use of strong drink. Said the presiding judge of one of the Chicago courts recently: "Look at the defalcations; fully ninety per cent of them come about through drink and dissipation. Of the insane and demented cases disposed of in the courts here Thursday, a moderate estimate is that seventy per cent are due to alcoholism and its effects. The sand-baggers, murderers and thugs generally, of to-day who are prosecuted in the police courts and criminal courts, are the sons of men who fell victims to drink. The percentage in this case is fully ninety-five per cent. I have studied this question for years, and have passed upon criminal cases for years, and I know whereof I speak."

When men for their own profit engage in business which has no beneficent results, but which everywhere makes criminals and paupers, shall they not be treated as criminals? Is not the cause of crime itself a crime? If a school should be opened in a city to teach boys the art of picking locks and breaking open buildings and safes, would it be tolerated, much less licensed? Not long since a quantity of slung-shot, sent by the manufacturer to New York to be sold, was confiscated. The seizure was justified on the ground that if the articles were sold they must of necessity be put to a bad use. Would not the same reason hold good for confiscating the contents of a grog-shop? Alcohol creates the disposition to use slung-shot and other murderous weapons.

4. The traffic in intoxicating liquors is demoralizing in its tendency. It depraves the conscience of all who have anything to do with it. With no class of manufacturers does the government have the difficulty to collect its taxes that it does with distillers. They may be rich, but they resort to every expedient to evade their taxes. A quantity of whisky was sold at auction in Rochester for the taxes. Liquor dealers were plenty, but the liquor sold for less than the tax. In some way saloon keepers could buy it for less than the tax. It is said that prohibition cannot be enforced. But why can it not be enforced? There ought to be no difficulty, if a man sells whisky, to convict him of it. His work advertises itself. Diamonds and laces may be concealed about the person; but put whisky inside a man and it proclaims its presence by his breath, his walk, his talk. Put him under oath and ask him where and how he got it? He swears falsely. You cannot get him to tell the truth. When in judicial investigations the sanctity of an oath is generally disregarded society is on the border of dissolution. Men will become the avengers of the wrongs they suffer. Lynch law will be supreme.

A traffic which tends thus to unloose the bonds of society should be prohibited. Nor is it a good argument against prohibition to say that the liquor traffic has already so demoralized the community that a law which they may pass to suppress it cannot be enforced. The evil should be stayed before it becomes greater. The fires of perdition which have burned the moral sense out of so many souls should be checked before its ravages become deeper and more widely spread. The wolf which has destroyed so many of the choicest lambs of the fold, should be driven to his den, and kept at bay until he can be killed.

5. The principle of prohibition is already adopted by all civilized nations. It only remains to give the principle a universal application. The thousands of men confined in States' prisons are not allowed to drink liquor, though in most cases it was the love of it that brought them there. Some of the more important railroad companies will not permit their employes, whether on or off duty, to drink intoxicating liquors.

The laws of Germany, France, England and America differ in many particulars; but they all agree in restricting the sale of intoxicating liquors. Everywhere this has been found to be a necessity.

But if it is right, for the good of society, to prohibit nine hundred and ninety-nine persons out of a thousand from selling liquors, why is it not right if the good of society demands it, to also prohibit the thousandth man? Why should he be allowed a monopoly of the horrible business? What is there in his character, what has there been in his conduct to entitle him to this distinction?

A friend of mine, the pastor of the Presbyterian church, made pastoral visits to every liquor saloon on the south side of the river in Pittsburg. He found that eighty-seven per cent, if I remember correctly, of those who kept them were foreigners. We believe in giving foreigners who come to us every advantage our country affords. But why should they be allowed to demoralize our sons, and devastate our homes? Better give them a pension to support them in ease than give them a license to sell whisky and beer!

Man has no natural right to injure for the sake of gain, his fellow man, though he consents to, or even solicits the infliction. Whisky cannot be drank as a beverage without injury both to the person who drinks it and to those connected with him. Therefore no man has a natural right to sell whisky as a beverage. Then all this ado about prohibition depriving men of their natural right is a cry of demagogues of which a man of candor and intelligence should be ashamed.

6. The Bible requires prohibition. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness." Hab. 2: 15.

"What we do by others, we do ourselves," is a maxim of common law. If we vote for men who enact license laws; and vote for men who grant license, we grant license. When the man whom we license gives his neighbor drink and makes him drunken, he acts as our authorized agent—we give our neighbor drink. Whoever does that, God pronounces a woe upon him!

It is time then for those who believe in the Bible to take sides with God against the liquor traffic. Think and pray over the matter until your soul is stirred within you and you are led to feel your responsibility. Then you will seriously inquire what you can do to avert the evil that is upon us in overwhelming force.

7. The fact that millions of dollars are invested, and thousands of men engaged in the traffic, only renders the necessity for prompt and decided action the more imperative. It is so much money and so much labor taken from wealth producing industries and employed in wealth destroying pursuits. The more money and the more men employed to turn earth into hell, the more active and the more energetic should the friends of God be to stop the terrible business. Every barrel of whisky that is made and sold adds to the number of broken hearted wives, of desolate mothers, of lost men going down unsaved to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell! So that the greatness of the evil, instead of being a reason for letting it alone, is a call to grapple with it with all our might, in the name of God and humanity.

We should not look at the public revenue derived from it, only to be overwhelmed with shame to think that our nation would draw a revenue from such a source. The Emperor of China, when the English were forcing the opium trade upon him, was advised to consent to the importation of opium, and to lay a heavy duty upon it. He made this noble reply: "I would sooner see my Empire perish than have it supported by a revenue derived from the vices of my people." Every dollar paid for the tax on whisky implies a hundred dollars taken from the productive resources of the country. It implies groans of anguish that pierce heaven and tears of blood that call for vengeance!

For such money our nation has no need.

8. Do you ask, then, What can I do to aid the cause of temperance?

(1) Some think we should rely alone on "moral suasion." All should be done that can be done in this direction. Youth should be instructed—moderate drinkers should be entreated and admonished; and every possible influence brought to bear upon the drunkard to effect his reformation. But all this amounts to little in comparison to the great work to be done, as long as strong drink is freely made and sold.

In the great Washingtonian movement many were reformed, but the great river of intemperance flowed on as ever, with its volume scarcely perceptibly diminished.

Many who reformed, led sober lives, but many relapsed into intemperance. The best that "moral suasion" can do is to wage a perpetual warfare, with the chances generally against it. Prohibition alone can effect a permanent victory, and bring about a lasting peace.

Do all you can by personal influence.

Earnestly and constantly pray.

The temperance cause will never triumph without fervent prayer. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." Isa. 59: 19. Plead this promise. Much has already been accomplished in answer to prayer.

(2) Use all your political influence in favor of prohibition. If you are a voter, see to it that your vote tells in the strongest possible manner, in favor of strict prohibition. Do not tie yourself up to any party—not even to the Prohibition party. If either of the great political parties nominate a man in other respects suitable, who can be relied upon to give his influence in favor of prohibition, then give him your unqualified support.

Fas est doceri etiam ab hoste. It is right to be taught, even by an enemy. This is the way the adherents of the liquor party do. They seek to hold the balance of power between the two great political parties. They never vote for a man who is opposed to their traffic. However strong party men they are, their highest allegiance is to King Alcohol.

No matter what issue is forced upon you, do not allow yourself to vote for a man who will use his official influence in favor of the liquor traffic. Let all temperance men take this stand. Better by far that the most valiant soldier who drew his sword in behalf of the South be in the Presidential chair, if he will set the nation the example of total abstinence, and will give his influence in favor of prohibition, than that the most loyal man should be President, if he will encourage drinking habits, and favor the liquor traffic. The temperance question is by far the greatest issue now before the people. Let us not be diverted by any frantic, partisan efforts from giving it our hearty support.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

ADDRESS OF PRES. J. BLANCHARD.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—Americans have no conflicting interests respecting secret societies. We shall have but one opinion when we understand them. So Americans had but one opinion concerning slavery, after they saw the country could not "endure part slave and part free."

Let us try to understand secret societies.

Eighty-six years ago the book which I hold in my hand (Robison's Conspiracy), written by an Edinburgh professor and dedicated to a member of the British Cabinet, was published in the city of New York. The burden of the book is to prove, not that all Freemasons are conspirators, but that Freemasonry is "A conspiracy against all true religion and just government." The writer, Prof. Robison, while in Paris, received at midnight from a Masonic friend who was fleeing the country to escape imprisonment, a box containing the higher degrees of Masonry carefully written out. He was himself a Mason and did not reveal the ritual, so as to let outsiders into lodges. But being under no oath of secrecy as to the degrees in that box, he entered the higher lodges of Europe and this book is the result.

In the year of its publication this book was sent to Washington, at Mt. Vernon, but a few miles below this city, by Rev. G. W. Snyder of Fredericktown, Maryland; and the sender received Washington's thanks.

Amid a vast amount of similar information, the book contains the following estimate of Masonry which I give in the author's own words. He says: "Nothing is so dangerous as a mystic association. Its object remaining secret with the managers, the rest simply put rings in their noses by which they are led at will." p. 357.

He says that "Homely English Freemasonry has been totally changed in every country of Europe by French ascendancy." p. 13.

He says: "In direct opposition to a standing rule and declaration that 'nothing touching religion or government should ever be spoken in the lodge,' I have found the covert of a Mason lodge has been employed in every country for venting sentiments subversive of all (sound) religion and politics." p. 14.

He says: "I have found the most active leaders in the French Revolution were members of this (Masonic) association, and conducted their movements by its principles and assistance; that their leaders' real intention was to abolish all religion, and overturn every government; that they disbelieved every word they uttered, and every doctrine they taught; that their profession of 'making men good and happy' had no influence on themselves; but that almost without exception, their leaders were the most insignificant, worthless and profligate of men." And while such were the leaders, the Masonic masses were mere "tools of unknown persons."

Such was Masonry in Europe one hundred years ago. Let us see how Washington and others regarded it in this country at that day.

WASHINGTON'S OPINION.

Washington replied to Snyder in the well known words: "I have not been in a Masonic lodge more than once or twice in the last thirty years." This in a soldier would be desertion, and in a church member a denial of his faith. These words of Washington were written sixty-five years after Masonry had been introduced into this country (1733). The lodge was in its vigor. It was twenty-eight years before the murder of Morgan; no outside movement had ever been made against it; and Washington's withdrawal was caused by what he had learned in the lodge itself. This Washington-and Snyder correspondence has since been challenged, scrutinized and verified by Jared Sparks, president of Harvard University, and biographer of Washington, who had his manuscript letters.

In 1832 Madison writes from Montpelier, Va., that he had never been a Mason; and next year Chief Justice Marshall wrote: "I have been in a lodge, so far as I can recollect, but once in nearly forty years." Such is the lodge record of Washington, Madison and Marshall. And I submit that their course proves that they viewed the lodge, if not with detestation, at least with doubt. If we detested the lodge and feared it we should have acted as they did. We are here to-day in the capital of the nation, which these three Virginians helped to originate and construct, to examine the record which the lodge has made. Washington died eighty-five years ago, ten years before the Grand Lodge of this District was formed. It has since had time to reveal its nature and effects.

But before opening its record, let us look at the thing itself; or rather, let us examine the whole secret lodge system, of which Masonry is the modern mother and type.

It's apologists are wont to say, families, churches, senates, juries and camps have their secrets; and these justify the lodge.

The answer is: Secret societies are not families or churches. The lodge is human; the family and church, creations of God. They rest on the words of Christ, "What God hath joined let not man put asunder;" and "This do in remembrance of me." On the contrary, secret societies rest on art, and only appeal to God to enforce the contrivance and give fealty to the clan. The first family was a church, and worshiped; and the proper principle of both is love. The artificial motive of the lodge is terror. The family swears one man and one woman to love and keep to each other; the lodge binds a promiscuous body of men together by penalties and pains to be enforced or inflicted by unknown hands. Wedlock begins and is perfected in love. The lodge commences, like prostitution, in a joke, is sanctioned by blasphemy, and ends in swindling and secret advantages. Therefore to call a family a secret society as many do, is to put the veiled sanctities and pure blandishments of a home on a level with the rollickings of a brothel, and confound the mercenary grimaces of a hunger-pinched harlot with the pure blushes of a bride. This is to mock God who made the family.

Nor are lodges senates. True, to avoid peril senates close their doors, as men lock their trunks when thieves are looking on. But the injunction of secrecy is taken off when the peril is passed; while the lodge demands concealment till death, seals the Mason's lips and makes his silence perpetual.

Again, secret societies are not juries. A jury is a band of independent men, sworn by their "verdict," or true word, to do justice to their equals and the equals of each other before the law; being amenable to the Independent God who cannot be bribed and who will not bribe. The lodge is a body of superiors and inferiors, sworn to concealment, the upper from the lower, and all from the outside world; not to do justice but to get and give secret advantages. And they are amenable to a "Master;" who is amenable to a "Grand Master;" who is amenable to a "Sovereign Grand Commander;" each of whom is a frail needy, and selfish man like themselves.

True, the juryman during the trial, must be shut from those whose silver might turn him into a Judas Iscariot. But the seclusion of the jury is not the secrecy of the lodge. If Barrabbas is a Mason the lodge requires the jury to find for Barrabbas and condemn Christ.

Nor again, are lodges camps. "The Cincinnati" and the "Grand Army" were contrived after the fighting was done. Battles, it is true, must have their concealments. But the private exploits of the veteran become the stories of his children, while the secrecy imposed by lodges, brigands, and banditti is perpetual.

Thus the lodge is neither family, church, senate, jury, nor camp. It is a civil and religious fungus; no more like the church or state than a wen or cancer is like the human body, which it disfigures and destroys. And to justify the sinister secrecy of Masonry from its resemblance to the wholesome privacies of the household, church or state, is as illogical and irrational as to reason from the resemblance of proud flesh to flesh in a healthy man, in order to prove that cancer is health.

There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge, which in its present form began in a London beer club and trades union just 167 years ago. That club of four old lodges met at Appletree Tavern in 1717, voted to cease hazing only apprentices, journeymen and Master Masons, and to "accept" all able men who could pay dues and make them "free of the lodge:" and they have been "Free and Accepted Masons ever since. That is to say, they dropped stone masonry and set up a priest-shop to manufacture Masonic saints; and they ever since profess to send them to heaven, drunk or sober, when they die. Sufficient has been said of the nature of Freemasonry. Let us now open its record.

FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT.

Of course, in tracing the relation of the secret lodge system to free or popular government, Asia and Africa are to be laid out of the account. Their society is all lodge, and Freemasonry is but the outcropping of Asiatic and African society in Christian lands.

It were easy to show, did time permit, that from the first dawnings of popular liberty under the great Alfred, under Wyckliffe, and in the charter King John, it has been met and squelched by the one fundamental principle of the lodge, which is salvation by ceremonies administered by priests. Secrecy and ceremony fastened on everything from palace to hovel. Even cobblers drove their pegs by "the art and mystery of cordwainery." Let us come at once to the grapple of the lodge with popular liberty in England, in the overthrow of Cromwell's English commonwealth.

Emanual Rebold, whose book is good Masonic authority, dedicated to the lodges of Europe and the United States, says (p. 54): "After the death of Charles I., 1649, the local lodges of England worked in secret to restore the throne destroyed by Cromwell." Charles II. was in exile over the water. The English Masons placed a tub of water in their lodges, touched their glasses over it and drank to Charles over the water, without pronouncing his name, and so avoided the law of treason. The same Masonic author says that Charles "gave Masonry the title of The Royal Art, because it was mainly by it that he was raised to the throne." (p. 55). This same Charles II. whose conscience was destroyed by Masonic oaths, who had sworn over and over again to support the English liberties and the Protestant religion, undertook and would have achieved the overthrow of both; but he was struck with death on the Sabbath day, at the age of 36, while toying with his courtesans. He died with his eyes fixed on a silver cross, held before his vacant gaze by a popish priest named Huddleston; and with his dying words provided for his favorite concubine, Nell Guinn. This Masonic monarch had already overturned all that the people had gained in their long civil war. In the first year of his reign he and his Masonic associates dug open the graves of Cromwell, Ireton and Bradshaw, hung up their mouldering corpses at Tyburn and set up Cromwell's head on a pole at Westminster to be mocked at by cowards who dared not look that head in the face while its owner wore it.

This complete overthrow of popular liberty in England according to their own historian, Rebold, was achieved by the English Mason lodges, fifty-seven years before the dark, despotic order was changed from stone masonry into priest-craft in 1717, and the lodges turned into priest-shops for manufacturing Masonic saints.

After the London transformation Masonry spread like pestilence in darkness. In twenty-five years that first London Grand Lodge had chartered lodges in nineteen countries in Europe, in Canada and the United States. And every one of those lodges has to-day a religious creed without Christ, and a constitution which their chief Masonic writer, Mackey, declares to be "completely despotic." If that creed and constitution are realities, they are the sure ultimate destruction of our free institutions. If not real, they are a stupendous swindle and imposition. But they are real.

We have only time for a brief passing glance at the workings of

MASONRY IN FRANCE.

Robison has told us that "homely English Masonry" was changed by popish priests when it crossed the English Channel. The names "Chapter" and "Templar" Masonry confirm this. "A chapter" means a dean and his clergy, and "Knights Templar" were inventions of the crusades which were got up and engineered by priests.

Our own civil war was bad enough. There are men now living who survived Libby and Andersonville, who saw Masonic distributing officers, when food was short, give double rations to prisoners who could give Masonic signs, and no rations to boys who could not. We sent from Wheaton College sixty-seven noble boys at one time. They were brave as lions, swift as eagles, and strong as patriotism and truth. But they could not stand hunger, and some of them succumbed to Masonic regimen in those prisons, and never went back to return their mothers' last kiss: and the grand-children of the survivors will tell to their children, stories of the "dead line" in Andersonville and Libby. But boys in our schools will declaim on "the horrors of the French Revolution of '79 while there are schools; and the phrase, "Reign of Terror," will never mean any other reign but that of Robespierre and Dunton, Couthon and St. Just. Our lodge-and-slavery war was sufficiently horrible. In one ravine up here at Antietam Creek it piled men seven corpses deep. But our war was a holiday sham fight to the revolutions in France, where prisoners have been drowned in her rivers for safe-keeping till their channels were choked with corpses, and reddened with gore. Old men, women and children, have been thus disposed of; and girls, seeing their lovers drowning, have been seen to leap from the banks into the water, and they have sunk in death, clasped in each other's arms.

How are we to account for this? Are Frenchmen human monsters? and born in a country which produced Fenelon and Lafayette? No! they are not monsters. They are the politest people on earth: and "politeness is benevolence in trifles."

The explanation is this: Those revolutionists were Freemasons, initiated by Popish priests and sworn to receive and enforce penalties by manglings, which President J. Q. Adams forcibly said, a humane butcher would not inflict in slaughtering a hog.

I take my authority from Professor Robison, himself a Mason who did not reveal the secret ritual; who received the higher degrees from an absconding Mason, sent him at midnight in a box, carefully written out; and who had visited the chief lodges of Europe from Paris to St. Petersburg. This great, good, unimpugned authority, tells us that the leaders in the revolting butcheries of the French Revolution as "Mirabeau, Condorcet, Rochefocault and others, were officers in the great Masonic lodges" (p. 296); that the leading lodge of the French Revolution was formed by the Bishop of Autun and other priests turned infidels; that they had not even the "honor" which exists "among thieves," for they systematically cheated each other (p. 287); that those lodges were schools of blood; that the principles of the revolution were the common cant of Freemasonry (p. 298); and Robison quotes Latocnaye, who says, "While some lodges continue the old plan of solemn trifling, the awful and gloomy rituals of Masonry have a great tendency to harden the heart and fit men for atrocious actions." These are a few citations from the book for which Washington thanked the Rev. Frederick Snyder.

Paris has been the paradise of the lodge. Like Talleyrand it joins all parties, for it means to control all: and overturn every government but its own, monarchy, aristocracy, or republic alike. In 1793 it guillotined Louis XVI. and his queen; and overturned the Lamartine Republic in 1848. And as to religion, its Grand Orient Lodge, which long led the world of Masonry, has expunged the name of God from its ritual and cast the Bible from its altar among the rubbish of the lodge! Yet the Masons tell us "The old landmarks never change!" And the members of that godless Grand Orient are in standing in lodges in the United States, and in this District of Columbia to-day!

Communism, Socialism, Nihilism, and in this country Ku-Klux, Knights of the Golden Circle, etc., are but aliases of the secret lodge system whose argument is assassination, and its weapon, dynamite; and itself a sort of dynamitic religion, whose worship is blasphemy, and its god a liar and "a murderer from the beginning."

AMERICAN MASONRY.

We come now to our own beloved continent of North America.

Scotch Rite Masonry was introduced into Mexico by the Hildagos or old aristocrats who spurned the Creole Emperor Iturbide. By it they overturned his throne. J. R. Poinsett, afterward member of Jackson's Cabinet, took the York Rite into Mexico and initiated the republicans. It worked like dynamite. The two rival lodges fought ten years. When one lodge was uppermost, the outs would join the other and overthrow the existing government. "The conflict," says the historian, "became terrible;" giving rise to the saying that "the normal state of Mexico is revolution." And I heard Webster in Faneuil Hall say, "Mexico is the worst governed country on earth." It was governed by Masonic lodges. They fought each other till the country cried out: "Down with secret societies." An Anti-masonic party was formed and peace restored after the terrible insurrection of the Acordada (See Mexico and Her Religion — Wilson.)

Before opening our own gloomy lodge record in the United States let us answer three questions:

1st. Can Masonry be overthrown?

It has been repeatedly overthrown in Europe; and in this country six years of popular discussion so effectually destroyed it that 1,500 lodges gave up their charters.

2d. What saved and restored the lodge?

It went South, joined itself to the slave power, ruled the country from Jackson to Lincoln; and came back North by the Democratic party and the war.

3d. How do you expect to destroy it?

It lives by the silence of the pulpit, press and platform. It will die when that silence is broken, as all evils die; by the truth and power of God.

The first Masonic lodge was started in Boston in 1733. Forty-three years before our Independence. Statesmen and divines loathed it. Samuel Dexter ridiculed it. Hopkins of Rhode Island said it belonged to Satan's kingdom; and Williston of Connecticut, grandfather of R. S. Storrs of Brooklyn, N. Y., said, "A Freemason is hand in hand with the devil." Such was the estimate of it by the calm, clear-thinking men who founded and formed the United States. Yet without conventions, or argument, or popular appeal, it spread; and lodges multiplied like brothels by night.

In 1826, its sorcery had so bewitched many best men in western New York, that they murdered a man for violating its by-laws! It was then assailed by the people in Massachusscts. Fifteen hundred lodges fell, and 45,000 Masons left their lodges to return to them no more; and so were witnesscs of the truth of Morgan's exposures. The first national nominating convention ever held in this country was held at Baltimore by Anti-masons; and William Wirt, the beautiful, classic statesman whose monument stands here east of the Capitol, received 228,000 votes—equal to three times the number now—as their candidate for President of the United States.

The lodge then moved South, where opinion was not free, and discussion could not follow it. Masonry then became, for a time, a "Southern institution;" and, from that hour, the lodge-rooms of the South became the council-chambers of treason.

The Northern statesmen, Adams, Webster, Everett, Quincy, Rush, and the younger men, Seward, Chase, Stevens and Ritner, were Anti-masons: while, in the South, Jackson and his Cabinet, Livingston, Eaton, Barry and Poinsett, were Masons, and made honorary members of Federal Lodge No. 1. of this District.

I will pause here to answer one question; viz., How can Masonry be destroying free government, while such men as Jackson were Masons?

I answer, There have been Rahabs among harlots even, who by good behavior "obtained a good report." Gen. Jackson lived a patriot and died a Christian. He walked his chamber in agony all night long the night before he found peace with God. Jackson and Col. Benton and Gen. Houston and their like, loved the Union and the flag, and denounced those whom the lodges were taking into nullification and secession; and he swore his great oath that he "would hang them higher than Haman" if they did not desist. This postponed secession a quarter of a century.

THE LODGE AND THE REBELLION.

"But," you properly insist, "give us proof positive that the lodges organized secession and rebellion."

The proof is that rebellion and secession were discussed and organized in the South, and they were not organized outside of Masonic lodge rooms but inside. There are Knights Templar now in this city who will tell you (at least one of them has told me), that they withdrew from the lodges before the war because those lodges were going for the rebellion. And in the first secession convention, in Columbia, S. C., Parker, Inglis, Keits and Rhett said in their speeches, "We do not go for secession because of the election of Abraham Lincoln, or the non-execution of the fugitive slave law; but we have been working it up for thirty years." (See Greeley's Great Conflict). Where did these gentlemen hold their meetings to "work up" secession? Not in churches, court-houses or school-houses, but in the secret lodge rooms. The raid on Kansas, the newspapers said, was paid for by the blue lodges of Missouri and the South. And there is now on this platform a Free-State Kansas leader who was told that he must join the Freemasons who managed the Kansas rebellion, and they would save him alive if he fell into their hands! If more proof is needed, there is more at hand. Why, the very Indians who scalped our dead and wounded troops at Pea Ridge, had to be brought here—some fifty of their leaders—and sworn into the lodges of this District before they would fight against the flag. And that great-souled, truthful Georgian, A. H. Stephens, declared the end and object of the Confederacy to be the overthrow of popular government, empire, and perpetual slavery. He was Vice President of the Confederacy, and knew what he said. And so effectually had the slow poison of the lodges done its work, that eleven States went into secession on Mr. Stephens' terms; which never could have been done had not their leaders been blinded, bewitched and sworn in the lodges beforehand. And the Union would not be standing to-day, nor we meeting in this capital, if God had not in mercy put this government into the hands of Anti-masons, Lincoln, Seward, Chase, Stevens and others, with Charles Francis Adams and Thurlow Weed, at the Court of St. James.

But we need not go back to our lodge-and-slavery war for proof that secret lodges are a deadly miasm to free government. I have myself heard Senator Eugene Hale declare that our Senate does not control its own printing, but that a secret society dictates both the wages and the men; and Senator Voorhees in reply admitted the fact, but said that a syndicate of banks was doing the same thing in regard to financial legislation.

And the Mormon question which has just begun to lift its crest and show its fangs, is in the same dilemma. The Mormons are Masons; and though in 1843 the Grand Lodge of Illinois revoked the dispensation it had granted the Mormons, their lodge works on all the same, and the Mormon people are its bondmen, both men and women. Lieut. Gunnison, who revealed the oaths, grips, and signs of the Danites, was next year murdered on Sevier River, with his party of eight engineers. The oaths, grips and signs, substantially Masonic, are published in our Senate document No. 189, second session of the 26th Congress. And to expect Masons who adhere to the same blood-curdling oaths, to exterminate Mormonism is like setting saloon-keepers to abolish distilleries, or foxes to suppress wolves.

But I seem to hear from some faint heart the cry, "O dear! What can we, what shall we do?" "It's no use trying!" What shall we do? God is neither dead nor sleeping, and in the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world he has made all arrangements needful, so that repentance and confession can wipe out the sins whether of men or nations. Do! "Let the wicked forsake his way; and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord who will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." This is what "we shall do."

What has been done with slavery? How long is it back to the night of Bull Run, when Lincoln sat listening through the night in yonder Peoples' Palace, and people in this capital

"————Were whispering with white lips,
The foe! They come! they come!"

But the auction block is gone; and the slave pen is empty. The city stretches out her streets like arms to welcome coming population. The sweet hum of industry lulls us to peaceful slumber at night; and in the morning the colored faces swarming from the surrounding country suggest no thoughts of slave insurrections. They are bringing provisions to the stalls of the finest market in the world. This has been "done" with slavery, and God's ear is not yet heavy, nor his arm short.

It is true no nation can live with two oaths in its court-house any more than "part slave and part free." It is true, too, that the secret lodge system is fearful beyond words. There are 190 secret orders in this capital alone, which with their local lodges and posts count thousands; and their names which are legion, are all aliases of Masonry. They are the giddy, outer gyrations of the Masonic whirlpool which sucks down governments, as the Maelstrom swallows ships: and brave men stand silent, and timid men quail before them. But they are not of God's planting, and we have his Word, which never fails, that "They shall be rooted up."

Morgan Anti-masonry sunk because it became simply political; and political action cannot cure religious evils, whether Masonic or Mormon. But our indictment is drawn in the name of Christianity and of Christ, who said nothing in secret, and who must and will "put all enemies under his feet," these lodges included.

Nor are we left to faith alone. From Oregon to Florida, and in the Canadas, prayers are now ascending to God for this convention; and every prayer means a VOTE!

Besides, the two leading parties, already obsolescent, are imploring the colored voters, whom they both despise, to give them next term the key of the White House: and the colored people have been swept into these secret orders like quails into nets. But they will soon find that the secret societies to which they belong, and of which they are so proud, are all children of Masonry; that, in short, Ku-Klux is Masonry by another name; and that those night-riders who mangled and murdered them by hundreds keep their disguises, sprinkled with the blood of their dead kindred, in the closets of Masonic lodge-rooms! They will see that those who are friends to the Ku-Klux cannot be friends to the colored people. And they will not vote for parties run by Freemasons, and by men who are governed by Masons.

And then the women, the soft-voiced, self-denying women, whom the lodge insults with its flatteries, while it bars its door in their faces,—yes, the women, who, like timid antelopes from deserts are coming out from cradles where their babes are worse than orphans while the drunken father lives,—Yes! the WOMEN,—May God bless them!—are venturing up to the fountain of political power, and asking leave to drink of the water of political life. And the ballot once in woman's hand means not only the destruction of the distillery, but of the lodge which shelters it, and is to it as the head is to the serpent, the seat of its wiles. And when "the seed of the woman," the Son of Mary, is setting his heel on the head of the serpent of the still, we shall find, that, in bruising one, he has "bruised the head" of both.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE MICHIGAN AGENT.

After sending copy of February number Michigan American to press Friday, January 25th, on the following day I repaired to East Springport to make arrangement for lectures at Pope church. Found Rev. E. D. Bacon at home and shortly arranged to be present at service on the following day and announce lectures for Monday and Tuesday evenings. I preached to the people of this place on Sabbath evening.

On Monday evening I met a good audience to whom I spoke with seeming good effect in regard to national evils and the remedy for the same. On the following evening the audience was larger and the greater portion of the time was filled in arraigning Freemasonry as a "Deceiver." There was good attention throughout, and it is believed a good impression was made, especially upon the boys and young men, of whom quite a number were present.

February 9th, I went to Coldwater, where I was announced to preach on Sabbath and to lecture and canvass the following week. Met large audiences at the city in the morning and evening, and in the afternoon preached at the Fox school house. From both places lectures were announced for the week following. The first of the evenings announced for in the city was stormy and there was no lecture.

On the second evening met a good audience, and gave the first lecture, with good effect. The second lecture was announced for Saturday evening following. On Thursday evening met a full house at Fox appointment and had good attention throughout. The next day some engaged in the work of drawing off the audience. Notwithstanding this on the second evening I found a full attendance, and had respectful attention.

On Saturday returned to the city, and in the evening met a small audience in the Wesleyan church. It does not work well to give too long a notice of such meetings as the craft employ the time in arranging to keep people from hearing. In this audience I sold two shares of stock, and took some subscriptions to the paper. Having sold six shares in the same audience last summer this makes eight members of our Association in this city. There ought to be five hundred. On the following morning I preached in the same church and after service was taken by Bro. Buffham to Batavia, some seven miles west, where I expected to preach in the evening at the Free Will Baptist church, but was not invited, so listened to a talk by Prof. Copp of Hillsdale College; text, "Do thyself no harm." The audience went home without knowing by the sermon in what ways they could do themselves harm. Sin was referred to in general terms, while all through the community is card-playing, dancing, tobacco-using, profanity, drunkenness and lodgery, all of which should be loudly and clearly denounced from the pulpit of this country. But no such preaching is at present the lot of this community. The Lord awaken Bro. Copp and the rest of the preachers to realize their duty and responsibility. "If the watchman see the sword come and warn not the people," their blood will I require at the watchman's hand, saith the Lord. Watchmen, read for yourselves. I was also refused the use of the church here for lectures, so I announced with good grace that I would speak on the two following evenings at the school-house near by, and circulated posters to this effect.

Some stir was made by the refusal of the church for lectures, but a little pastoral visiting the next day among the belligerents restored quiet, and I met a small audience at the school-house Monday evening. Spoke for over an hour and had good attention. Everything was endorsed but the reference to secretism. Here, as elsewhere, they did not bear this well. God was with us in the meeting.

On the second day toward evening a rain came on which continued until after dark, when the wind shifted and the rain turned to snow. No attempt was made to hold a meeting. I had a pleasant home during my stay in Batavia with H. F. Buffham and family, real reformers. In this family are sold seven shares of stock, also some books. No date is yet fixed for the second lecture in this locality. On the next day Bro. B. took me to the Snow Prairie M. E. church, where in the evening I met a small but attentive audience. Nothing in the line of lectures against secret societies has ever been held in this place.

On the second evening a much larger congregation was present, and I spoke for nearly two hours on the "Idolatrous Worships Protected by the Laws of the United States." Had excellent attention throughout. Was urged by several to come again. Some ladies in the audience were very sure the man was crazy, but aside from this, there was no movement during the lecture. This community has been and is, cursed with the Masonry of the M. E. church, so that the life and power of godliness have long since departed. Financially there were no returns from these lectures, save that contributed by Bro. Brook and family. I am confident however, that good was done. To-day, Feb. 22, Bro. Brook will take me to Bethel where this evening I am announced to speak in the U. B. church. I pray God to be with us. Met a good audience at this place and spoke for two hours. Every one gave unbroken attention.

On Monday evening preached at Batavia to a small audience, and announced my second lecture for the following evening. At the time appointed I met a good audience and opened the subject of national idolatry. I spoke for two hours, and had the unwearied attention of the hearers. The subject was new, never having been publicly discussed in this vicinity. Masons who were present kept very quiet until the close, when some slight equivocations were indulged in, but of the correctness of my exposition not a denial was offered. Here I sold a few books, one share of stock, took two subscriptions to the paper, received some donation to the treasury and gave away tracts. My strength is holding out very far beyond my expectation. Evidently the Lord is on our side. From here to the Scribner school-house I was taken by Bro. M. C. Warner and tarried with him for the night. Met a fair sized audience at the school-house, where the subject was entirely new. Freemasonry was never disturbed in this place before. The audience listened carefully, and at the close Bro. Benton subscribed for the paper and bought two books "for my boys," as he stated. He took Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. This is the way to educate the boys. Some other books were taken in the neighborhood. To-day (Feb. 28), Bro. Warner takes me to Sherwood, where I am to speak to-night and to-morrow night.

H. A. DAY.

JOTTINGS FROM OMAHA.

OMAHA, NEB., March 5th, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You may have noticed the present aspect of the temperance war in this city. Omaha will sustain the prophecy of its people—that it is to become great in size. It has added ten thousand in two years.

The moral greatness of the people is a prophecy in blank. The good are at work and the wicked curse. The mayor has complied with the requisitions of the city council, and accordingly last Sunday was a dull day for the drunkard-makers. The press, as usual, is on either side—divided. The average newspaper follows the people. We are in error when we talk of their leading save as an ally. The true leaders among the newspapers are as rare as that class among the ministry or in political movements. Newspapers are made to sell, and when the genuine leaders of men have made a large market for good papers, they have added to their other work the helps that make the consequences stay.

I am writing in the room of the Y. M. C. A. and have just had a sort of spiritual lunch with them at their noon-day prayer-meeting. The members present corresponded with the number of enrolled members in about the same ratio that many churches exhibit. There was prayer for the sick and thanksgiving for a recent case of recovery. There were significant allusions to the many dens of vice. The Daily Dispatch, that talks in a glib and weakly way about the liquor nuisance, calls attention to the increasing number of opium dens reported by the police, who claim that they have no express authority to deal with them. Had they been in the place of President Lincoln they would have waited for a new Constitution before setting free the slave. Like the woman that went to the neighbor's house to get tongs to pull another woman's child out of the swill barrel, they are very delicate about handling the matter promptly.

There is promise of much westward travel this summer. As usual in the spring the larger part are, in appearance, moderately poor, and seem compelled to move somewhere.

SECRET ORDERS AMONG FREEDMEN.

When I have seen simple-minded colored men strutting in ribbons and feathers and all the paraphernalia of a secret order, I have been disposed to excuse it in them, as better becoming children than those who should be expected to "put away childish things," I have been willing that the colored people should monopolize this childish pageantry entirely. But I find that it is injurious and degrading to the most ignorant and childlike. A correspondent of the Examiner, writing of the number and injurious influence of the secret societies among the colored men at Washington, takes occasion to say that the same is quite general throughout the South. He adds:

"In the town of Paris, Ky., there are about 1,500 colored people, and among them seven societies of as many different orders. The exact amount of all the contributions for church and also for lodge purposes, has been ascertained; and the former does not amount to one-third of the latter. A large portion of the means of an indigent class struggling to obtain comfort is wasted on ceremony and regalia. The freedmen are impoverished by lodgery! The few men of property among them owe it to their race to devote their superfluity to the education of youth. In the present condition of the freedmen, scarfs, badges, gilt stars and pompous ceremonies have for them peculiar attractions. The effect upon them of familiarity with empty and meaningless ceremonials, I am told by ministers, is to gradually undermine their faith in the reality of religion. The church falls little by little in their estimation, to the level of the lodge, and the once devout worshipers are transformed into indifferent lookers-on. For these manifest evils there is no compensation in the charity feature of the secret societies. The amounts collected are mostly expended in rents, furniture, banners, regalia and the thousand fripperies of procession days; they are ridiculously large when compared with the trifling sum doled out in charity. To organize a secret society for charity is as absurd as to burn a house to roast a pig—a culinary method charged by Tom Hood upon the Chinese."

A CHAPTER FROM THE PAST.

KELLERTON, Iowa, Feb. 19, 1884.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—This town of Kellerton will live in story as the scene of one of the most disgraceful instances of Masonic mob vengeance in the history of the anti-secret reform. Here an eminent and devoted minister of the Wesleyan Methodist church, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, was assaulted by a furious mob, inflicting injuries from which he will never fully recover. The town is twelve miles southeast of Mt. Ayr, the county seat of Ringgold. It has little to attract attention, except the absence of any church but a small Catholic structure with no other ornament than a plain cross. A lodge of Masons and one of Odd-fellows wield a controlling influence, and one saloon and two drug stores dispense a liberal amount of liquor. It has been said there is a divine power in human suffering. This outrage awoke the friends of anti-secrecy throughout the country, as no other event since the abduction of Wm. Morgan. In twenty minutes after the telegram reached Chicago, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, General Secretary of the National Christian Association, took the train for Kellerton, to render all possible aid to the sufferer. Dr. Norris, of Birmingham, a prominent citizen of Iowa and hero of "In the Coils," hastened to the victim's bedside. M. N. Butler, editor of the American Freeman, and other prominent friends of the cause visited him as he lay during nine days of agony at the home of W. N. Layton, before he was able to be taken home. Rev. J. R. Tedford of the United Presbyterian church, Mt. Ayr, was the first to visit the scene of the tragedy. Rev. J. D. Nutting of Oberlin, O., recording secretary of the National Christian Association, some time afterward visited the place, gathering all the facts possible. The facts published by these friends in numerous letters at the time, were vividly recalled this afternoon, as I interviewed some of the leading actors in the affair. I also heard the whole story afresh from the lips of Rev. Samuel Smith a few days ago, who was at Elder Rathbun's side during that memorable day. The following are the undoubted facts. In the afternoon of June 21st, 1881, Bro. Smith a highly esteemed minister in the Wesleyan Methodist church, residing at Beaconsfield, drove with Elder Rathbun to Kellerton, where he was to lecture that evening on Masonry. Near sundown a Masonic lawyer, W. K. Brown, engaged Elder Rathbun in a conversation on Masonry in the store of a United Presbyterian named D. Hogue. A notorious saloonist, Ed. Gale, entered and passed quietly around the room taking in the situation. Next five or six men entered and took positions on each side of the store, and at the same time a considerable crowd collected at the door. The lecturer was seated on a chair, and his attention so closely held by lawyer Brown that he did not notice these ominous proceedings.

That they were deliberately planned beforehand is not for a moment doubted by those who have looked carefully at the facts. It was announced by members of the orders on the streets of Clarence, Iowa, the home of Elder Rathbun, hours before the event occurred, that HE WAS KILLED at Kellerton. A member of the order near Kellerton declined going to the lecture that night, because Elder Rathbun was to be killed.

A moment after the five or six men had taken their position Gale again entered the store and deliberately approached Elder Rathbun, and with a heavy blow on the back of the head felled him to the floor. He then sprang with both knees upon his prostrate victim and struck him a succession of heavy blows on the head, which rendered him partially unconscious. Bro. Smith then came to the rescue, but was seized and held back by two men, one of them a Mason named Dan Collard, who was the leader of the mob, and shouted "Kill him! kill him!" The bloodthirsty, cowardly mob then crowded around the prostrate form of the lecturer, and with fearful oaths kicked him out of the store across the sidewalk and into a pool of water. Here Bro. Smith was permitted to come to his assistance, and with difficulty he was supported into a doctor's office, where he vomited blood, and was found to have sustained very serious internal injuries. He was assisted into Bro. Smith's carriage by Harmon Patrick and L. O. Shaver, while the mob pelted them with eggs, until the horses were literally smeared.

The mob followed them with oaths and curses, the leader Dan Collard, flourishing a revolver and swearing vengeance to those who would dare to speak against Masonry. And what was most humiliating, when Ed. Gale the chief actor in this outrage, was brought before the county court at Mt. Ayr, about the only result was to lionize the desperado, and heap abuse upon Elder Rathbun and his friends. Thus this oath-bound despotism, with a little over 500,000 members out of the nation's ten million voters, claims three-fourths of the office holders shapes our legislation and largely controls our courts; and worse than all it seeks to deprive us of our blood-sealed right of free speech and liberty of the press.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XIII.—March 30. REVIEW.

QUESTIONS.

LESSON 1. How does the religion of Masonry resemble the yoke which the Jews tried to force on the gentile Christians?

LESSON 2. Is it any use for us to hear about reform if we never do anything?

LESSON 3. How does Masonry teach falsehood and profanity?

LESSON 4. Can one live as in God's sight and have fellowship with the dark works of secrecy?

LESSON 5. What three great hindrances to missionary work can you think of?

LESSON 6. Who inspires and controls all false worship?

LESSON 7. Can a Christless religion save souls?

LESSON 8. How are we to find out the right side in questions of reform?

LESSON 9. How does the lodge deny the great truth that "God has made all men of one blood"?

LESSON 10. Do those who fight evil always have Christ with them?

LESSON 11. Why will Christ's coming be a terror to all who practice secretism?

LESSON 12. What three great foes to industry can you mention?

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

LICENSE AND PROHIBITION.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and stablisheth a city by iniquity." Hab. 2: 12.

Q. Do most people think drunkenness an evil?

A. They do, but they differ very much about the way to prevent it.

Q. What way do some think best?

A. Some say that it is not possible to stop liquor selling, and the best thing to do is to allow any one to sell it who will pay a certain sum, and comply with certain conditions more or less stringent. This is what is called the license system.

Q. What benefit do they think will result from license?

A. They say the money can be used in supporting the public schools.

Q. Is this good policy?

A. This is very bad policy for drink makes nearly all the paupers and criminals, and causes many terrible accidents to life and property, so that the direct value of the liquor drank in this country, which good authorities estimate at six hundred millions, will not begin to cover what it costs the nation in the expense of courts, penitentiaries and almshouses. Some estimate it as high as ten or twelve hundred millions, but the rumsellers only pay about fifty millions in taxes to the government.

Q. What other way do some advocate?

A. They think the traffic can be checked by making the tax on rumselling so heavy that but a few will be able to pay it. This is called high license.

Q. Will this really check the traffic?

A. It will not. It will only concentrate it in fewer hands, and those few will sell more and grow rich faster than they could under the other system. Suppose in a certain town there are four saloonists paying two hundred dollars tax. If the tax is raised to one thousand dollars and only one saloonist stays while the rest move off or go into other business, he will probably sell just as much liquor as all the four did, and be better able to pay a tax of two thousand dollars than he formerly was two hundred dollars.

Q. Would it be right to let a burglar or gambler ply his trade on payment of a certain sum of money, whether large or small?

A. It would be as wise and right as to let the rumseller do so.

Q. What strong reason can you give for thinking both these ways wrong?

A. No government can afford to put money into its coffers that is gained by ruining the bodies and souls of men, either for the purpose of supporting schools or any other object of public benefit. God has pronounced his curse against all prosperity that is gained by unrighteous means. Recite Golden Text.

Q. What way do many people think the best?

A. The prohibition of the liquor traffic altogether.

Q. Is this God's way with all sin?

OBITUARY.

Died in Washington, D.C., February 21, 1884, J. H. Whiteford, a man remarkable for his devotedness to the cause of Christ and humanity. For years he had occupied an old church building on the corner of 2d and I streets, N. E., where he had given food and shelter to the homeless and the wretched. But it was not their temporal wants alone that secured his chief care. No one ever labored more earnestly, and, considering the class of minds to which he appealed, more successfully, to win men and women to Christ. He had, too, a woman's home, where the poorest and the worst might find refuge and an open door to reformation and purity. He sought out the prisoners in their cells and preached to them the freedom that they might have in Christ. He taught in the streets, published tracts, and constrained some of the worst and most worthless of people to aid him in their distribution. A skillful mechanic and inventor, he gave up all to labor for Christ. A military officer in the late war, he concealed the fact that he had ever had a military title, and held and taught that all war is crime. He abhorred secret societies and on all appropriate occasions expressed his opposition. His intense hatred to intoxicating drinks and tobacco was illustrated by his words, his tracts, and the mottos on his house. He did not believe in sects among Christians and was identified with no religious organization, yet no man ever kept the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace better than he. It is not too much to say that probably no one in this city ever had the respect and Christian confidence of all people, Protestant and Catholic, more than he. Some hated and persecuted him, but all knew that he was faithful and true.

A few kind friends ministered to him in his last sickness, but none of his kindred were at his burial except only his kindred in Christ. The poor, the suffering and the sinful will endure a great loss, but to him there is great gain. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. They rest from their labors and their works do follow them." H.

"FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE."

An exposition of the first three degrees of Freemasonry in every village! How can it be done? By sending to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer N. C. A., for a 32-page pamphlet, containing 40 illustrations with explanations, with the legal attestation of the pastmaster of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, as to the correctness of said exposition. We will send, postpaid, thirty (30) of these pamphlets for one dollar; sixty-five (65) for two dollars, and 165 for five dollars.

Edmund Ronayne says: "One of these pamphlets put in each family will do as much good as a public exposition would do."

Many have written: "Send a lecturer to our place, we need one very much.' This is often impossible, but the above plan is much better than no lecture; does not need a church or hall, which often cannot be had; and costs but a fraction of what a lecturer usually costs. Will you see to it that you have one of these lecturers, silent as sunlight and as powerful, in your town. If you cannot afford the dollar or five dollars yourself, you can soon collect from friends for this purpose the needed funds.

N. B. With each "Glance" will be sent an N. C. A. tract, and as the pamphlet gives an exposition of the ceremonies of the lodge the tract will give an exposition of the character of those ceremonies.

Not less than thirty sent on the above terms, and only to one address. Single copies 6 cents.

Special.—To those who may have had their paper stopped much to their surprise, we wish to say that at this season of the year when there are many subscriptions received for renewal, and there are a number of changes to make on our mail list, there is danger of clerical errors, and if any of our subscribers should not receive the Cynosure as they expect, we would be grateful if they would send us a postal card notifying us that they wish their subscription continued, and we will be pleased to make the correction at once.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST.

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Associated Churches of Christ.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

☞NOTICE.☜

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1884.

Personal.—My promise of an article on Woman's Suffrage and its Washington Convention is delayed till next week by the death of my youngest son Cyrus Louis.

"My heart is still in the coffin with my son,
And I must wait till it come back to me."

I never knew the meaning of the above words in Shakespeare until now. Next week I will, D. V., give the promised article. J. B.

"The Movement."—We transfer to our columns, from the Free Methodist, part of an exceedingly able editorial under the above caption. With a few trivial inaccuracies, it gives one of the best sketches of the American party yet out. Mr. Travis is an able writer, but in this article he has excelled himself.

Sectism.—The Sword, drawn by Bro. Dolan, is a Washington monthly, a converted Catholic, against "sectism." Its every blow brings blood; and its terrible severity is its truth. But the editor should remember that, though the sword cuts down enemies, it neither plants a garden or builds a fence; and it must become a plowshare before Christ can reign on earth. Then there will be no swords. Christ was no come-outer. He sent the people to hear orthodox preaching (Matt. 23:2,3), though in no age was the church more corrupt than in his.

"Freemasonry and Free Government."—This discourse has a singular history. It was intended to represent the political American movement at Washington, to the National Congress and the nation. It was crowded down the program till the gas was lit during its delivery. By brethren Pomeroy, Capwell, Britten, Bailey, Stoddard and others, it was regarded as a true, learned and powerful exhibit, and the convention voted to make it a campaign document.

To reach Congress, it was offered, thus endorsed, to two leading papers in the capital. The Post (Democratic), agreed to print it; took and receipted for $20 in gold for its insertion; kept it over Sabbath, and returned it with the money. The Star studied it over night, and returned it with this note, unsigned even by a clerk:

"We cannot use this at any price. Have too much matter set up."

They were told to print it at their own price! Men will put different constructions on the above facts. To us the Washington papers seem terrorized by, and to stand as outside sentinels and ban-dogs of the lodge, which rules our seat of government from the President down. But the discourse is printed, and a copy will be sent to each member of Congress, Senate and House, President and Cabinet.

The American Reformer, a good and useful paper, warns us against one-ideaism. The source of the "one idea" fling should make the Reformer careful in its use. That paper quotes and censures what we said about the secret wing of the Prohibitionists opposing Gideon T. Stewart's call for the Pittsburg convention, May 21st, and asks, "Will the Cynosure make a note of it?" to which we answer, We will. We have already said that the argument for a June convention to gather stragglers from the Republicans who may bolt their nomination June 3d, is legitimate and worldly-wise; and multitudes of anti-secret Prohibitionists go for it. But it is also true that the anti-Pittsburg wing is the Masonic wing of the Prohibitionists. Will the Reformer deny it?

James G. Birney.—We have received the exceedingly able sketch of Hon. James G. Birney, with his picture, sent us by his son Gen. Wm. Birney of Washington, D. C. It is a most instructive document concerning the fall of slavery, and contains more sound history of that earthquake period of American history that has yet been written. Every young American ought to read it. We shall wait a little to receive orders for extras. The call for extras has sometimes exhausted the issue, and left many unsupplied. We wait only for orders for the Birney number. Please send in your orders as soon as you read this, that this important number may be issued speedily. Oliver Johnson, and other admirers of Mr. Garrison have been misled by that admiration and so have warped the truth of history. This Birney sketch restores it. Send orders, and send at once. Four cents per copy, post free.

Joseph Cook vs. Thomas.—Cook says, "The sincere study of the Mosaic law leads to Christ."

Thomas said, The Gospel of Masonry is Knight Templarism. Where Masonry is the law Knight Templarism is the Gospel.

It is clear that here are two Gospels. And now hear Paul: "If any man preach any other Gospel than that which we have preached to you (Galatians) let him be accursed."

Which Gospel did Paul preach? The Gospel of Christ certainly, and not the Gospel of Hiram Abiff.

THE PITTSBURG CONVENTION.

Remember the call for a National Prohibition Convention at Pittsburg, May 21st. This call was objected to, and "recommitted" by a meeting of the National Committee, meeting at Chicago; Miss Frances E. Willard in the chair, in the absence of chairman Stewart. Soon after, the Ohio State Prohibition Convention met at Columbus; voted unanimously for the Pittsburg convention, May 21st, and suggested Gideon T. Stewart as their candidate for President. This foreshadows a split in the National Prohibition-Home-Protection party, formed at Chicago a year and a half ago.

We have long, even from the first, foreseen this split as inevitable. The Know-Nothings split the anti-slavery party, and postponed its triumph. A secret section or wing of any party, cause, or community is, by its organization, a conspiracy on the rest. And the thin veil of secrecy thrown over the mock-solemn initiations, prayers without Christ where Jews or infidels belong; and the impudent pledge of the upper, to concealment from the lower "degrees," are vile in their origin and abominable in their nature. The Republican party grew on the grave of the secret Know-Nothings and a glorious reform party is to spring up from this separation of the "precious from the vile." But Satan will try to keep secrecy in both ends of the split, as he put slavery in both ends of the riven churches. Let him be disappointed. Let the Pittsburg convention plant itself in God's open sunlight, and the faction which by its working behind closed doors, insults Him who "spake nothing in secret," and contemns his example, will soon, like the Know-Nothings, sink out of sight. For without Christ they can do nothing. Pray for and attend the Pittsburg convention, May 21st.

ORGANIZATION.

Having passed another landmark at Washington, and gained a footing at the capital, I presume the friends of the American party are ready to take up the next thing in order, which is organization. There are before us two things, one of which we must choose, viz., a combination of our scattered forces for concerted action, or an inglorious death. God has brought us to a point where we may not longer halt between two opinions. He has shown us that with his help we are well able to overcome the giants, even in their mountain fastnesses, and to go up and possess the land.

Look for a moment at what has already been achieved. Passing by the first ten years and more of conflict and victory, take examples that are fresh in your memories. Scarcely four years ago you said, we will erect a monument to the memory of Captain Wm. Morgan, and it was done. Two thousand willing hands cast in as the Lord had prospered them, and an imposing shaft surmounted by a life-size statue of the fallen hero attests the strength of your united efforts. Less than fifteen months ago you said, we must have suitable accommodations for our work at the head and heart of this nation, and to-day you own a property in Washington worth $10,000, on which there is not one dollar of indebtedness. Behold what God hath already wrought by your hands and in answer to your prayers, and be encouraged in the Lord to expect and work for greater things.

By this time you ought to be ready to throw your whole strength into the work of organizing, so as to send delegates to the convention at Chicago who shall put men in nomination worthy to bear the standard to victory. When you said, We will build a monument, you went to work with a will and it was done. When you said our cause shall be anchored in Washington it was put there to stay. Will you now say we will join hands and work and pray and vote until we put a God-fearing prohibitionist and anti-lodge President in the White House? You may think this a bold proposition, and utterly beyond reason. If there were no God in Israel it would be presumptuous, but since he is on the throne and demands to be acknowledged as supreme in all constitutions and governments, the presumption is in not recognizing his claim and doing our very utmost to enforce it.

When a purchase in Washington was first talked of there were "faint-hearts" who predicted defeat and saw only failure in the attempt, and I suppose some of you will come halting and incredulous to the greater work of organization. "O ye of little faith." The only question is, Do you want lodgery, rum, licentiousness and profanity cleaned out of the White House and the Capitol, and clean men put in places occupied by unworthy incumbents? If you do, just as surely as you built a monument and bought a home at Washington, and just so surely as God reigneth you can do it. Conventions are good but organization is better. The one is the root, the other the top, and as the branches and fruit will never come to perfection without the root, so the June convention at Chicago will be only a blight and disgrace if we come together as a kind of heterogeneous political mob.

Therefore organize. Send at once to E. D. Bailey, 215, 4½ street Washington, D. C., for instruction and the documents you need to start an "American Club" in your school-house, or, if more convenient, in your own house. Ask the women to come along with the men and begin now to make up a roll of names that will be heard from in the approaching campaign.

J. P. Stoddard.

—Bro. Hinman writes from Pittsburgh that he spoke in Chartiers United Presbyterian church at Cannonsburg, twenty miles from the former city, last Thursday evening. He was cordially received by the pastors of the place.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard was last heard from at Syracuse, N. Y. He was probably with Bro. Capwell at Dale over Sabbath, and had several appointments in western New York to be filled this week. There was also an important reform meeting announced to be held in the Wesleyan church, Syracuse, on Tuesday evening of this week, which he will probably attend.

—A good audience greeted Prof. L. N. Stratton in Carpenter Hall, N. C. A. building, on Tuesday evening last, and his eloquent address on the "Religion of Freemasonry" well repaid them. The Chicago Association which has arranged this series of lectures is thereby doing a good work in Chicago. There has been some desire expressed for their publication in permanent form.

—Our story of the Lodgeville church waits till next number. To make amend for the necessary omission from this paper we can assure every reader that the remaining chapters are of very touching interest to every worker in our reform. They will see as in a glass the difficulties they labored to overcome, and will want several copies of the little pamphlet containing the whole story, which is now printed and ready for mailing, and will be sent, prepaid, for fifteen cents per copy. We should be glad to have a few copies of this pamphlet circulated in every church which has convictions but no testimony against the lodge. It will not fail to do good. The edition is limited, and when sold out may not be reprinted.

—Dr. S. L. Cook, Indiana agent, kindly sends word of a little investigation he has made into the case of Orin A. Carpenter, now on trial at Petersburg, Ill., for the murder of a young woman whom it is believed he had ruined. The Presbyterian minister at Lincoln, Carpenter's home, writes that the accused was once a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church which he left, and he is a Mason of, at least, two degrees.

—The Interior may have the credit of a good deed in far-off India. The powerful article by Edmond Ronayne published in its columns and copied in the Cynosure last fall has been reprinted in the India Methodist Watchman, of Bombay. The article by the editor of the Cynosure, which opened the Interior discussion, has also been republished in the March number of the Associate Presbyterian.

The Illustrator, the latest, freshest and one of the most practically useful of the S. S. lesson helps, will be sent with Cynosure for $2.30 per year for both, price separate $2.60. Working teachers will find a great advantage in using this magazine.

NOTICE.

The Niagara county Association opposed to secret societies will hold their annual meeting in the Good Templars Hall, Lockport, commencing Tuesday evening, Mar. 25, 1884, at 7:30 o'clock; to continue through the next day and evening.

All who desire to know the truth are cordially invited. Among those expected to be present are the N. C. A. General Agent J. P. Stoddard, State President F. W. Capwell and Geo. W. Clark, reform singer. Several have kindly volunteered to entertain friends coming from a distance. Those desiring entertainment will favor us by dropping a card to Bro. P. D. Miller, Wrights Corners, N. Y.

Let us come, friends, praying and expecting that the Lord will bless our efforts to the glory of his name. By order.

W. B. Stoddard, State Agent.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

KINGSTON ON THE HUDSON, Mar. 12, 1884.

Leaving Washington with Bro. Bailey on the evening of the 10th inst., we reached New York yesterday morning. A cordial reception awaited us at 307 West 33d Street, where we thankfully accepted the hospitality proffered us by brother and sister Harrison, who were preparing to visit their 2,000 acre farm in Pennsylvania. Leaving our baggage we set about the work of the day, which in some respects proved less successful than we had hoped in immediate results. Drs. Milligan and Gregg had learned of the payment of the Washington debt with much satisfaction, and desire to aid in making No. 215 as noted and useful to the cause of righteousness as was the office of the National Era under the former Mr. Bailey.

At the fine residence of the late Thurlow Weed we were disappointed in not meeting Thurlow Weed Barnes, whose experience as a journalist and the recent biographical volumes he has published on the life of his grandfather indicate for him a promising future in the literary and perhaps political arena. I advise our friends to secure these volumes and cultivate the acquaintance of a young and vigorous writer, who is perhaps to emphasize the Anti-masonic labors of his illustrious grandfather. We were sorry to learn of Miss Weed's illness, but glad to hear from her niece that she reads the Cynosure with interest. It is no small compliment to the Cynosure and its editors to receive the commendation of one who possesses a cultured taste, and who has enjoyed and improved so many rare opportunities and such an extensive acquaintance with journalism in this and European countries.

The room where I met Mr. Weed nearly two years ago, and where I saw him sign and legally attest the facts of Morgan's abduction is little changed. The numerous pictures and furniture, with perhaps two or three slight changes in arrangement, remain as they were; but the great spirit and most wonderful memory I ever met were not there.

Miss Barnes was her grandfather's amanuensis in preparing his statement of facts for the Batavia convention, and seemed much interested in our work. When I asked if she sympathized with her grandfather's views on the Masonic question, she replied, "I have been well trained and thoroughly instructed, and why shouldn't I?"

Sure enough, I thought, why should not any intelligent, well instructed woman be disgusted with the debasing rites of initiation, and the wicked conspiracy called Freemasonry. The trouble is, even intelligent women are not as a rule well informed on this question, and hence some are found to apologize and even advocate the abominable thing.

At the office of the Witness Mr. Cochran, in the absence of the senior editor, bid us God-speed and put his paper on the exchange list of the American, soon to be.

Reaching the office of Thomas and S. C. White, we learned the sad news of Bro. Louis Blanchard's death. It was too late for me to reach Wheaton in time to see his face once more and attend his funeral. The intelligence was not wholly unlooked for, but came suddenly, as such news always does when received at a distance. I recalled the time when as I stood on the platform in Farwell Hall, he stepped to my side and laying his hand on my shoulder said, "Katie is killed instantly by the cars, and your little boy is seriously, perhaps fatally injured." And now he has joined the innumerable company, and perchance brothers and sisters lingered on the hither margin of "sweet Beulah land," close by the river of death, to greet him at his coming. To us there is an impenetrable mystery shrouding the out-goings of the life that now is, but the Husbandman knows best when to thrust in the sickle and bind the ripened sheaves, and the Good Shepherd when to "gather the lambs in his bosom," for he doeth all things well.

Bro. Thos. White told me with tearful eyes of the sudden sorrow that so recently came upon his household, making hearts desolate and life a lonely, cheerless voyage, and as I listened to the sad story, life seemed but a fitful dream, and only God and heaven worthy of our thoughts and affection. And so it would be, but for that faith by which we receive the substance of the thing hoped for, and wait but an hour until we come again into the presence of loved ones who have passed through the portal that opens before us.

After spending the night at Bro. Harrison's and taking an early breakfast, I took a "West Shore" train for Syracuse, leaving Bro. Bailey to go on to New England and visit friends there, while I fill appointments which my son has arranged for me in western New York.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-President of the United States.

"THE MOVEMENT."

The Convention of the National Christian Association which met in the city of Syracuse, N. Y., June 2 to 4, 1874, after its deliberations, per call, resolved itself into a secular convention, and in its deliberations, as such, concluded that the exegencies of the case called for political action. There the American party was organized. This party held its convention in the city of Washington, commencing Feb. 20th, 1874. The American party represent in a political form and demands political action for the issues of the Christian association, with some correlative isssues which it has assumed.

Its platform demands equal civil rights for American citizens; the prohibition of the liquor traffic; the revoking all National and State charters granted to Masonic and all other bodies of secretists; the enactment of sufficient law, and the penal enforcement of the same against administering extra judicial oaths; the recognition of the fact that this is a Christian government, and that the Christian Sabbath must be defended, if need be, by civil authority. It has also a plank against combinations of both capital and labor that interfere with the private rights of the citizen. It demands a uniform national currency, and recognizes the supreme right of the national government in matters of finance; is against polygamy in any one of the United States or Territories, as much so as in any other of the States or Territories. Brick Pomeroy, contemptuously styled the Republican prrty, "the God and morality party"; this party is a good deal more so.

During the sessions of the convention just held, there was a large latitude for expression and discussion of opinion allowed. Hon. Frederick Douglas discussed the civil rights question; Dr Miner, of Boston, and Rev. B. T. Roberts, the prohibition question; President J. Blanchard, Dr. McAfee and Rev. Braxton, (colored), of Baltimore, the secrecy question; and Mrs. Belva Lockwood, of Washington, D. C., civil rights, more particularly in their relations to woman.

The representation from the various States was encouraging. The audiences were better than was anticipated, and we have it from reliable authority, that at one of the late Presidential dinners, the movement was a prominent topic of conversation and inquiry.

What the convention did, will naturally be asked. Well, it unfurled its colors, declared its principles, and demanded their recognition, and this upon the ground of their American character, their sound philosophy and their righteousness. It further ordained that a nominating convention be held in the city of Chicago in the month of June next, to put in nomination men for the offices of President and Vice-President of these United States. It will be seen that by this action they have made an opportunity for conscientious men to vote for principles instead of parties.

Also, it has an opportunity to convert into votes a great deal of vapor, and instead of anti-secretists doing all they do in mere talk, they will have fine opportunity to show their sincerity in forsaking party and sustaining principle. We shall look with considerable interest along the line, after the election is over, for results in certain quarters, where there has been considerable firing, but as balls (votes) have not been available hitherto, there has been nothing better than blank cartridges fired. Ram in the ball, gentlemen. Holiday firing will be out of date after the coming nomination. The party expect to be able to have their organ issued from the new headquarters in Washington in time to do service in the coming campaign. God speed the success of his cause by the American party.—Free Methodist.

LITERARY.

THE HISTORICAL EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF THE SCRIPTURE RECORDS, stated anew, with special reference to the doubts and discoveries of modern times: By George Rawlinson, M. A. pp. 454. Price, cloth bound 50cts. John B. Alden, New York.

This republication of Rawlinson's Bampton lectures in 1859 is from the original plates of Gould and Lincoln who issued the work at nearly three times its present cost. The lectures were given to counteract and destroy the influence of the German Neology, so-called, which began some twenty-five years ago to develop its line of fearful attack upon the Christian system, professing a reverence for the name and person of Christ, and showing real regard for the Scriptures as containing the purest and holiest appeals to religious feeling, yet which lowered Christ to a mere name and emptied the Bible of its force and power by denying its historical character. The same theories of infidelity yet prevail though manifested with more subtlety in such cases as Heber Newton of New York, and Swing and Thomas of this city. It is a commendable work to reissue these able lecturcs of one of the ablest Oriental scholars.

Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. By S. Baring-Gould, author of "Legends of the Patriarchs and Prophets," etc. John B. Alden, New York. Price in cloth, 35 cents.

The name of the author of this neat little work is evidence of its merit, and a glance at the table of contents sufficiently arouses the interest of even a sluggish reader. Every one has heard strange tales of the Wandering Jew, of Prester John, the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, the Dog Gellert and St George. These are a few of the traditions that have escaped from the caves of the Dark Ages, and found some recognition in the light of the printing press. The author puts the Divining Rod and William Tell among the rest, although the frequent use of the rod even to-day shows that it is rather a subject for the scientist than the story-teller, and the contest between myth and history in the case of the latter may result as has that over Homer, in a victory for history.

THE HYGIEAN HOME COOK BOOK: or, Healthful and Palatable Food without Condiments. Price, paper 25 cents, cloth 50 cents. Fowler & Wells, publishers, 753 Broadway, New York.

A new edition of this excellent manual of healthful cookery has been published. It is not a work on the philosophy of food, but one giving recipes for its healthful and palatable preparation. Under the head of "Breads," following the general rules, are thirty-five recipes giving instructions for making all kinds of breads, from the raised loaf to "corn dodgers." New and improved methods of preparing vegetables are given, together with instructions for preserving fruits by canning, drying, etc., and it would be hard to find more condensed in a small space than is given in this home cook book. It tells the readers how to live if they desire health and strength. It will be sent to any address by the publishers on receipt of price, 25 cents, in postage stamps.

The Irving Library, a weekly republication of the complete or select works of the great authors of the world, contains among its late issues: "The Message of the Nineteenth Century to the Twentieth," by Pres. Andrew D. White of Cornell University, being his address at Yale College last June; "Conversation," one of the celebrated Thomas De Quincy's essays, than whom there have been few greater masters of English style; "Night Sketches" from Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Twice Told Tales;" and the "Salamagundi" of Washington Irving, complete. It is a delight to read the beautiful, large, clear type with which the Library is printed, and the extremely low price at which these works are issued puts them within reach of all: the first three 3 cts. each; the last 20 cts. John B. Alden, publisher. New York.

The Elzevir Library a weekly publication by Mr. Alden of the same character but of smaller size and type, has some very attractive titles among its late numbers, as: "Life of George Muller," by Mrs. Muller; "Luther's Table Talk," and "Luther Anecdotes" by Dr. Macaulay; "The Raven and other Poems" by Poe; "Some of my Pets," by Grace Greenwood; "Public Health," by Edward Orton; "Herman and Dorothea," from the German of Goethe; and "Legend of the Wandering Jew," by S. Baring-Gould. From two to eight cents each is the price of these pamphlets. The reading public is continually indebted to Mr. Alden for bringing within reach of all such gems of literature.

The April Century contains two architectural papers, one on the New York City Hall and another on the White House—the latter more descriptive of the interior of the building, which has been recently decorated by Mr. Louis C. Tiffany and his associate artists. In the May Century will begin Mrs. Van Rensselaer's articles on the present movement in American architecture, which are to be rich in illustration of both public and private buildings, churches, college buildings, railroad stations, stores, city and country houses, etc.

No statue that the rich man places ostentatiously in his windows is to be compared to the little expectant face pressed against the window pane, watching for his father when his day's labor is done.

The Home.

THE OTHER WORLD.

It lies around us like a cloud—
A world we do not see;
Yet the sweet closing of an eye
May bring us there to be.

Its gentle breezes fan our cheek
Amid our earthly cares;
Its gentle voices whisper hope,
And mingle with our prayers.

Sweet hearts around us throb and beat,
Sweet helping hands are stirred;
And palpitates the vail between,
With breathings almost heard.

The silence, awful, deep and calm,
They have no power to break;
For mortal words are not for them
To utter or partake.

So thin, so soft, so swift they glide,
So near to pass they seem—
They seem to lull us to our rest
And melt into our dream.

And, in the hush of rest they bring,
'Tis easy now to see
How lovely and how sweet a pass
The hour of death may be—

To close the eye, to close the ear,
Wrapped in a frame of bliss,
And gently drawn in loving arms,
To swoon from that to this;

Scarce knowing if we wake or sleep,
Scarce asking where we are,
To feel all evil sink away,
All sorrow and all care.

Sweet souls around us watch us still,
Press nearer to our side;
Into our thoughts, into our prayers,
With gentle helpings glide.

Let death between us be as naught—
A dead and vanished dream;
Your joy be the reality;
Our suffering life the dream.

LIFE'S DIAL.

It is morning. A new day begins. The beams of sunrise lie level on the land and sea. Let us draw a horizontal line, level as the shadows are

---

Look in this cradle. It is morning there. A new life has just begun in that little, breathing, sleeping thing. How very still it lies. Its forehead faces heaven. Will its feet travel that way? Who can tell? That was a beautiful symbolic act which the father, among certain ancient people, used to perform, when a babe was born. He took the little stranger, and carried it into the open air and turned its face to the stars. At the beginning of its journey, though all unconscious, it was shown the end of its pilgrimage, nearer which each day would bring it.

Will this little one, lying low in the basket which loving hands have made so soft and warm, live to stand erect in manhood? From the basket to the casket may be a long journey; perhaps a very short one. Its almost breathless slumber makes one think of the serene repose of the dead.

Indeed, the beginning and the ending of life have much in common. Sleep and Death are called twin brothers. One, "born of the sable night" brings rest from daily toil; the other shuts the door forever on all life's weariness and pain. Their touch alike adds a beauty and a peace, oftentimes, that are not seen in waking hours.

Now it is smiling in its sleep. Are the angels talking with it? If heaven lies all about us in our infancy, the "Sons of God" are surely singing for joy at this glad morning hour of a new life. May they and the little Pilgrim never part company.

Forenoon. Look again. The sun is half way up the heavens. The angle changes on the dial. The shadows shorten. We lift the level line half way to the zenith. Where is the little one whose life the shadows measure? No longer prone and helpless. No longer does he lie with folded hands across the breast and forehead facing heaven. He is out of infancy, yes, out of boyhood and hastening to his prime. The blush of the morning has gone from the sky and so in his face you see life's day-break brightening into noon. Spring is ripening into summer tide. He now looks forward rather than upward. The doors of opportunity are swinging on their hinges wider open every hour. The angle on the dial changes as the day goes on. God guide and guard thee, noble youth!

Noon. The meridian is reached. The light is vertical. Our line, first level, then oblique, is now erect. It touches the zenith. It is the hour of noon and life is at its prime. The gates, at first ajar, stand fully open now. The pilgrim has reached the summit. Manhood enjoys a plentitude of power and a sweep of vision that give a zest to living. The elixir of life is quaffed in deep and satisfying draught. Toil is pleasure and existence itself a joy. Would that this exhilaration of heart were abiding, but there is no staying of time, no turning back of the shadow on the dial. The swift footed hours are flying. Nulla vestigia retrorsum. The autumn of age must come.

Afternoon. The western sun is sinking. The slant shadows lengthen. The light grows mellower as the day declines. Look at the dial. The angle is narrowing fast. The line again drops towards the level it must soon reach. The gates are closing. The pilgrim is facing sunset now. There is a stoop and a halting as he walks. The inscription that Dr. Johnson engraved on his watch and Sir Walter Scott on his dial stone at Abbotsford, is the old man's motto, "The night cometh!"

> "Death in these pulses daily groweth stronger,
> Life's ruby drops are oozing, one by one.
> From this right hand its cunning is departing.
> This wrinkled palm proclaims its work is done."

Life's distaff will be soon dropped and its thread snapped assunder. The wayward footprints of a weary traveler are now pointing homeward. Daylight struggles with dusk. Life runs low in languid veins. There is a careworn face and faltering step. Almost there!

Night. The day has ended and the darkness falls. Again the horizon line is reached. The doors are shut in the streets and the sound of the grinding has ceased. The golden bowl is broken, the silver cord is loosed and the wheel is broken at the cistern.

Look! There is a serene face turned again towards the stars and a pair of thin, worn hands again folded over the breast.

> "Wrinkles of aggressive years,
> Channels of unwitnessed tears,
> Furrows on the anxious brow,
> All are smooth as childhood now!"

The lips that used to laugh wear something of the sweetness of sleeping infancy. The whole face has a radiance like the twilight glow after sunset. "No smile is like the smile of death," says Keble. The good man sleeps the sleep of the just. "They that have seen thy look in death, no more may fear to die."

Does this end all? No, this prone posture is but for a little time. The morning cometh. They who have fallen asleep in Jesus shall rise to be with him forever.

Erect in immortal youth, they shall "stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God."

At a gathering of Christian workers some years ago, I saw this pictorial parable put upon a blackboard. Not a sentence of the description is now recalled but the solemnity of the truth which those six simple lines then taught can never be forgotten. God used it in the conversion of the sinner as well as in the quickening of believers. Said a Christian, who sat by my side at the time referred to, "I felt like standing up to ask prayers for myself." May God make this printed admonition similiarly vivid in teaching the lesson of life's waning hours.

"The night cometh, in which no man can work!"—Dr. E. P. Thwing in Baptist Weekly.

One of the glaring sins of the times is personal ornamentation. In this respect too many Christian professors, male and female, are like the world. They give full proof that, in this respect, the love of the world is not yet destroyed. And, what is especially lamentable, the infection has struck some of our ministers—they dare to go into the holy place with gold rings on their fingers. Away with this nonsense! The cost of modern jewelry worn by Christian professors would confer upon Wm. Taylor the power to rout Romanism from South America.

If any of our readers are tempted to wear any of these foolish ornaments, let them study with prayer, 1 Tim. 29:10, 1 Pet. 3:3–4, in connection with 1 Cor. 10:31. God's Word knows no change.—Guide to Holiness.

THE VISION OF CHRIST.

Dannecker, the German sculptor, occupied eight years upon a marble statue of Christ. He had previously exercised his genius upon subjects taken from the Greek and Roman mythology, and had won a great reputation. The celebrated statue of Ariadne in the garden of Herr Bethman at Frankfort is his work. Critics of art have given him rank with Michael Angelo and Canova.

When he had labored two years upon his statue of Christ, the work was apparently finished. He called into his studio a little girl, and, directing her attention to the statue, asked her, "Who is that?" She replied, "A great man." The artist turned away disheartened. His artistic eye had been deceived. He had failed, and his two years of labor were thrown away. But he began anew, and after another year or two had passed he again invited the child into his studio, and repeated the inquiry, "Who is that?" This time he was not disappointed. After looking in silence for a while, her curiosity deepened into awe and thankfulness, and, bursting into tears, she said, in low and gentle tones, "Suffer little children to come unto me." It was enough; the untutored instinct of the child had divined his meaning, and he knew that his work was a success.

He believed then, and ever afterward, that he had been inspired of God to do that thing. He thought that he had seen a vision of Christ in his solitary vigils. He had but transferred to the marble the image which the Lord had shown to him. His rising fame attracted the attention of Napoleon, and he was requested to make a statue of Venus similar to the Ariadne, for the gallery of the Louvre. He refused, saying, "A man who has seen Christ would commit sacrilege if he should employ his art in the carving of a pagan goddess. My art is henceforth a consecrated thing."

Is there not an experience of communion with God in Christ, not uncommon to mature believers, which is equivalent to a vision of the Lord, and which renders life and life's work, even its humblest occupations, sacred? Italian and Spanish art contains many works in painting and sculpture on subjects derived from sculptural biography and history, to which their authors have given years of ioil, and on which they labored in a state of religious fervor. Some of them believed that their artistic vision was illumined by the Holy Ghost. The privilege of every Christian life is not less exalted. The Scriptures seem to assure us of this. "Our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son, Jesus Christ." "Your life is hid with Christ in God." "He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." Such words, if they mean anything, mean something unutterably great. It is no prerogative of an elect few. The lowliest, not less than the loftiest, life may have this element of an infinite dignity. A profoundly prayerful life is by that single feature of it lifted into sympathy with God. A mean thing cannot be made noble by it, but a small thing can be made great. The work of a laundress or a bricklayer may attract the respect of angels.

Hugh Miller, when working at his trade as a stonemason, used to say that his was a grand calling, because the routine of it gave to a first-class workman so much time and mental force for silent communion with God. It was in such communion that he laid the foundation of that dignity of character which afterward made him the companion of philosophers and the instructor of princes. It matters little what may be a man's employment in life. The whole life is ennobled and adorned by it, if it is done as in the vision of Christ. "In His Name" was the watchword of the Waldenses, and their form of salutation, when they met and when they parted. It expressed their supreme idea of life, and of all that made it worth living. They said it at their weddings, and repeated it at their funerals. It was their formula in baptism, and at the Lord's Supper; and it lifted to the same altitude of dignity their work in their fields and vineyards. When have wise men ever discovered a theory of life more magnificent and inspiring? No being in the universe has a more exalted occasion for self-respect than one who lives in a vision of Christ. The apostle could find no more honorable words in which to depict the life of Moses than to say of it, "He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible.—Prof. A. Phelps, in S. S. Times.

5. Nothing but milk satisfies the babe. Ps. 119: 103, 111.

WHO STOLE THE THIMBLE?

"Pet Hopkins, I'll thank you for my thimble." The little girl spoke in an angry, commanding voice, and a dark scowl marred her usually bright face.

Pet Hopkins looked up quickly from her sewing, with a surprised wonder deepening in her blue eyes. She was plainly dressed, so plainly, in fact, that she reminded one of a little woodland violet in a garden of brilliant flowers, for the dainty misses about her were all dressed handsomely, and chattered merrily with each other, while Pet sat by herself at one side of the room, and scarcely lifted her earnest eyes from the seam she was sewing. She usually came early and took her seat before the rest arrived, remaining in her quiet little corner until her companions had all departed. Once, when Miss Alice asked her why she always remained sitting while the other children were present, she answered, while a flush crept over her sensitive face, and a mist of tears filled her eyes:

"My old dress don't look so shabby when I'm sitting down, and they can't see where my stockings are darned."

Miss Alice respected the child's desire to attract as little attention as possible after that, for her own experience had taught her the pains of poverty.

This was how the little class came to be formed: The benevolent mammas of the village discovered in Alice Hartman a worthy young lady struggling with poverty, utterly alone in the world, and without health or strength to endure hard labor. They wisely concluded that it would be kinder to provide her with easy employment than to present her with money. Upon holding a consultation they decided that she must have a sewing class of little girls, to meet for an hour every afternoon in her own tidy, little parlor. Each of the mammas present was able to contribute to the class one little pupil, and some two. When they came to discuss the matter more fully, they were amazed at the general ignorance of their children in this particular branch. The little ones could read and write quite nicely. The most of them could dance very gracefully; some of them could sing and play easy accompaniments on the piano; but not one of them could use a thimble.

And so the class began with a dozen little girls, each carrying a tiny work-basket containing wee scissors, needle-pad, patch-work, and dainty silver thimble. Pet's mother was very poor; but was quite desirous that her little girl should learn to sew, and as she had no time to teach her, she made arrangements to do Miss Alice's washing if she would allow Pet to join the class.

When Miss Alice asked the class which finger should wear the thimble, there was an ominous silence, broken at last by a little girl timidly suggesting her thumb.

"You all have thimbles, have you not?" asked Miss Alice, and instantly half a dozen bright, new thimbles were triumphantly disclosed to view.

"Now," said Miss Alice, smiling, "you may each place your thimble on the finger where you think it will do the most service."

Then, as she glanced down the class, she asked May Anson why she placed her thimble on her little finger.

"'Cause it's most out of the way there," answered the child.

"And you, Pet, where is your thimble?"

"I haven't got any thimble to put at all," answered Pet, shrinking further back into the corner.

It was at the beginning of the third lesson, and Miss Alice was in the next room when Delia Eller spoke up sharply:

"Pet Hopkins, I'll thank you for my thimble."

Pet looked up in surprise, but as she had no idea where the young lady's thimble was, she did not hand it to her. All the girls in the room looked at Pet expectantly, some of them quite severely.

"Don't you intend to hand me my thimble, Pet Hopkins?" exclaimed Delia in a louder key, her face flushing up with anger.

"I don't know where it is," said Pet, meekly.

"She don't know where it is! Just hear the bold, little thief, girls. There she sits with my pretty silver thimble on her finger, and says she don't know where it is! You all heard her say that she hadn't a thimble, didn't you?"

"Yes, we did," answered the children, clustering about poor, bewildered Pet.

"Well," continued Delia, "if her mother had bought her one since, do you think she would have bought a silver one? Washerwomen don't have more money than they know how to spend. If you didn't steal my thimble, Pet Hopkins," she continued, "you'd just as soon I'd look at it close and see if it is like mine."

"It was mamma's when she was a little girl," faltered Pet.

"A likely story," sneered Delia. "Why didn't you bring it before? Let me see it."

"It was mislaid, and mamma just found it this morning," answered Pet, as she slipped the thimble from her finger and handed it to Delia.

"Oh, what awful stories you do tell, Pet Hopkins," said Delia, as she examined the thimble. "This is my very thimble; I know it by the little vine about it."

She calmly placed it on her finger as she spoke, and walked to her seat with a very injured air, while the other little girls clustered about her and talked very excitedly about the forlorn child in the corner.

"I think we ought to tell Miss Alice," said one, decidedly. "She ought to know what kind of girls she has in her class."

"No," said Delia, reflectively. "I'm willing to forgive her as long as I've got my thimble back."

"But she may take other thimbles."

"I guess that this lesson will be sufficient," said Delia, loud enough for Pet to hear.

When Miss Alice entered the rooms she discovered that something had occurred to disturb the children, but as none of them brought complaints to her she forebore questioning them.

Poor little Pet was obliged to sew her seam over twice that afternoon, because the tears blinded her so she could scarcely see where to put her needle.

"I wouldn't care so much, mamma," she said, as she laid her head on her mother's loving breast and sobbed out her grief, "only it was your thimble when you was a little girl, and I meant to be so careful of it. I wonder if it was a punishment 'cause I was so proud of having a real silver thimble, like the rest!"

When Delia reached home that night she, too, told her mother all about the lost thimble.

"It is very strange," said Mrs. Eller, when Delia had finished. "I always supposed that Pet was one of the most honest little girls in town. Let me see your thimble, Delia."

Delia opened the work-basket and handed the thimble to her mother.

"Why, Delia," exclaimed Mrs. Eller, the moment she had taken the thimble, "this is not your thimble. Oh, my child, what have you done? You have been the thief, after all."

"I surely thought it was mine," sobbed Delia, "'cause mine wasn't in my work-basket, and, anyhow, Pet must have stolen it, for her mother couldn't afford to get a silver thimble for her."

"My child," said Mrs. Eller, solemnly, "you have made yourself and poor little Pet a great deal of trouble by your hasty conclusion. It is just possible that you may have slipped your thimble in your pocket."

"Oh, no, I didn't," said Delia, decidedly. "I always put it in my basket."

She slipped her hand into her pocket as she spoke, and an exceedingly foolish look spread over her face as she drew forth and displayed the missing thimble.

"Oh, mamma," she sobbed, "what shall I do?"

"There is only one thing for you to do, my dear. You must take Pet's thimble to her to-morrow, and ask her forgiveness before the whole class."

"I will, mamma," answered the little girl, humbly. "Do you know, mamma, she never told Miss Alice a word about it. She just let me keep the thimble when I said it was mine and sat there, looking so sorry all the afternoon."

The next afternoon Delia told the whole story about the thimble before the class, and Miss Alice listened in great surprise.

"I stole your thimble, Pet," said Delia, standing humbly before Pet. "I am so sorry. I wish you could forgive me, but I don't see how you can."

And Pet, without a thought of the eyes that were on her or her shabby clothes, just put her arms around Delia's neck, and the two little girls sobbed together, and though the other little girls could not have told what they were crying for, they all joined in the chorus, while Miss Alice slyly wiped her own eyes.—The Interior.

TEMPERANCE.

BEER DRINKING.

We devote much space in this issue to the statements of the best physicians and surgeons of Toledo, as to the effect of beer upon the human system. The statements are of all classes of physicians. We have not selected those of known temperance principles, but have taken all. What they say of beer is not colored by any feeling for or against temperance. Their statements are the cold, bare experiences of men of science who know whereof they speak.

It should be borne in mind that Toledo is essentially a beer-drinking city. The German population is very large, there are five of the largest and most extensive breweries in the country here, and there is probably more beer drank in proportion to the population than in any city in the United States. The practice of these physicians is therefore largely among the beer-drinkers, and they have had abundant opportunities to know exactly its bearing upon health and disease. Every one of them bears testimony to the fact that no man can drink beer safely, that it is an injury to any one who uses it, in any quantity, and that its effect upon the general health of the country has been even worse than that of whisky. We know it has been, for one reason if for no other. It has entered the field of drunkard making under false pretenses. It was accepted by many men as a safe substitute for whisky, and thousands favored its use on that ground, forgetting that it is an alcoholic beverage the same as whisky, and that whoever uses alcohol as a stimulant must have the amount of alcohol that is necessary to produce the effect desired, and, so far as effect is concerned, it does not make a particle of difference whether that alcohol is in the form of beer, wine or whisky, because every drinking man will take what alcohol he wants into his system to produce the desired effect.

To reduce it to plain English, men drink to get whatever degree of drunkenness they desire. There is drunk in beer the same as in any other liquor. Beer is from eight to twelve per cent alcohol. If an ounce of alcohol is what is required to produce the desired effect upon a man, he may get it in four drinks of whisky, while it would require a gallon of beer to produce the same effect. If he craves the ounce of alcohol and seeks for it in beer he is going to drink the gallon, thus not only getting the same amount of alcohol, but loading his stomach with a gallon of fluid charged with all sorts of unhealthy principles. Thousands upon thousands of confirmed drunkards have been made by beer, because it has been held that it could be indulged in safely.

There is no safety in alcohol. When a man says, "Oh I drink nothing—I take a glass of beer now and then," that man is fairly on the road. Better for him the naked fact of the undisguised whisky.

We specially call attention to another fact. Life insurance companies have no sentiment. They are as cold blooded as banks. They do business upon strictly business principles. Their business is one based purely upon experience from which certain inexorable rules have been established. A life insurance company will not insure the life of a confirmed beer-drinker. Why? Because it is a certain fact, as certain as anything can be, that the beer-drinker can not live long enough to make insurance profitable to them. The "expectation" of life in a beer-drinker is cut short by his appetite. No life insurance company is going to take a risk upon a body into which is being poured every day the seeds of disease, any more than a marine insurance company is going to take a risk upon a rotten hulk. No life insurance company is going to take a risk upon a man who is inviting Bright's disease of the kidneys, inflammatory rheumatism, congestion of the liver and enlargement of the kidneys, all of which are as certain to come to him as he is to persevere in beer. And the beer-drinker as a rule does persevere till death stops his contributions to brewers. These institutions dread beer more than they do whisky, for its effect upon the system is even worse. A non-beer-drinker at forty is considered a good risk—a beer-drinker at that age can get no insurance at all. As we said there is no sentiment in life insurance companies. They act entirely upon facts which are the result of experience. Their figures never lie.

One other fact we desire to call attention to, while we are about it. There are degrees in beer. Much more beer may be drank without death in Germany than in America, for one reason: In Germany the brewers are under government control and here they are not. Beer in Germany has to be made of malt and hops only—here it may be made of anything that the brewer chooses. He may use any poison in it that his cupidity suggests. There is a very great percentage of them who would use strychnine if it would lessen the cost of beer.

Then, again, in Germany beer is kept till it is sound. It is not exposed for sale till it has undergone all its fermentations and is as harmless as any alcoholic liquor can be. It is not so in this country. The rate of interest makes it an object to turn beer into money as soon as possible, and therefore beer made Monday is sold Saturday, with the yeast not yet half worked off, and in a condition to undergo fermentation in the stomach of the drinker. The beer made and sold in this country, were it pure, is altogether too new for even the confirmed beer-drinker. It is bad enough at best—as we get it, it is worse than vile.—Toledo Blade.

Mr. Burch, superintendent of public schools in Copiah county, Mississippi, indiscreetly remarked to Senator Hoar on Saturday that the colored children of that county attended schools "wholly supported by Democratic tax payers." "What taxes make up the school fund?" inquired Mr. Hoar. "Poll taxes and whisky licenses," innocently responded the school superintendent. Mr. Hoar then showed that the Republican voters had paid their poll taxes, and left the witness (Mr. Burch) to wrestle with the conclusion that the Democratic contribution to the school fund was in the shape of whisky license fees.—National Republican.

The saloon-keepers claim that they pay a large share of the taxes, and hence claim protection and license. The claim is as fraudulent as their business, and both are among the greatest swindles of the century. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, recently published from official records a list of 2,000 saloon-keepers of that city, with the amount of taxes paid on personal property. These 2,000 saloon-keepers returned personal property to the amount $280,330, the taxes on which was only $6,222.29 for the entire year, or an average tax of $3.11 for each saloon. Not much "protection" do they deserve. The dry goods house of John Shillito & Co. alone paid $14,191.86 personal taxes, which is more than double of that of all the liquor sellers combined. The Western Methodist Book Concern paid taxes to the amount of $3,135.28, or more than half as much as the 2,000 saloons. The saloons are responsible for three-fourths of the crime and pauperism of the city. They are the nurseries of crime and the hiding places of criminals. The saloons must go.

To trust God when our warehouses and bags are full, and our tables are spread, is no hard thing; but to trust him when our purses are empty, but a handful of meal and cruse of oil left, and all the ways of relief stopped —herein lies the wisdom of a Christian's grace.

ADDRESSES

AT THE FUNERAL SERVICES OF C. L. BLANCHARD, IN WHEATON, MARCH 12, 1884.

The impressive serviees at the house and in the College Chapel were conducted by Prof. Stratton of the Wesleyan ehurch in the absence of pastor Chittenden. He was assisted by Bro. C. W. Hiatt and the pastors of the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churehes, also by Mr. Charles Herald of the Moody Chureh, Chicago, who aided in song. The following is an abridgement of the remarks.

ADDRESS OF PROF. L. N. STRATTON.

Text:—Go to now ye that say, To-day and to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow; for what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. For ye ought to say if the Lord will, we shall live and do this or that. "James 4: 13-15.

The text points to the important subject of thought that human caleulations of future success often prove futile, from the fact that life is frail, and an all-wise, over-ruling Providence knows better than we can wish or do.

This text is not probably intended to chide those who "buy and sell and get gain," but to show them upon what principle they should act. It would be wrong to say that the element in man of human foresight is an error. That men must build no air-castles, which by and by will assume substantial shape, and solidify iuto granite and marble. Men are exhorted by the scriptures to take the ant as an example of industry, "Which prepareth her food in the summer and her meat in the harvest." And we learn from an apostle, who was eminent as an example of manly toil, that "He that provideth not for his own household, hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." Hence we are to look somewhere else than to the fact of following business pursuits and getting earthly gains, for the cause of the evil mentioned in the text.

Still further, man was made in the image of his God. God has a triple nature, so has man; "soul, body and spirit." Soma, the body; Psuke, the animal spirit, seat of the evil propensities; and the Pneuma, the soul or immortal part. With this wonderful combination of elements has been bequeathed to man the power of ehoice, wihch brings to his nature the element of seeond causes. As God wills and chooses, so man within his sphere wills and chooses. Life and death are placed before man, and he is called upon to ehoose this day whom he will serve. Choosing the right, he ascends the scale, and beeomes an aspiring and progressive being. He does what he can to succeed. He "buys and sells and gets gain." He lays plans. He maps out pathways. He elambers toward the summits. The vulture's eye, though soaring high, has never caught the sight of that shining upland path upon whose elevations his feet are trained to walk.

Notice if you will,

I. That men build their fortunes by faith, and say, "We will go into such a city, and buy and sell and get gain."

It is sometimes assumed that men should not plead law, or work in foundries, or buy and sell and get gain. That our brother who went daily into yonder eity and occupied his office as a eouncillor, or pled before the courts of that city, was in error. The apostle James, in the text, does not say so. He does not say that this attention to business for the benefit of the needy and suffering eauses of humanity is wrong. The text does however deelare that the attention given to business is often connected with the most distressing forgetfulness of the high obligations of man to acknowledge the care and hand of an overruling Providence. When men say "we will buy and sell and get gain," they should add, "if the Lord will, we will do this or that." Be it far from me to intimate that our brother was an example of this criminal neglect, though he daily came in contact with the men who were buying and selling and getting gain. The text does not say that all men who go into the eity for such a purpose are acting a vicious part. No, to buy, to sell and get gain are laudable, if properly done; for the servant who has talents bestowed, and uses them not, is punishable and condemned. Idleness leads to vice, if it is not in itself a vice. And a man who is always active in laudable and lawful work is not apt to be vicious.

2. This typical man of the text, who goes into the city, is an orderly man. He arrranges his time. He takes a certain portion of it. He is a careful man, he is frugal of his time. He takes but one year to begin with. He is a steady man. He takes to-day and tomorrow. Day after day. He mentions no "off days" but is constant for a year. He is to try an experiment, and he wants to make a faithful one. Life itself is an experiment. Man is on probation, and the prudent man puts his business on probation. He tries a year. He makes up his mind what to do, decides how long, by faith builds an air-castle, and perhaps so nobly sueceeds that he at length carves in laudable triumph, "gains" upon the very boulders whieh prop his hillside drive below his castellated height.

All these gains, these results, with perfect innocency he may pursue, if he, meantime, yields himself as the subject of God's merciful providence and help. Only let him be sure and say, "If the Lord will we will do this or that." Let the living heed and lay it to heart.

3. There are other gains which are not of material substance. There is honor; a good name. That is wealth. A man of immense colleetions of gold and estates once said: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

This was a fortune which our brother found it easy to acquire. For this earthly gain he had special adaptations. A business man said: "He was easy to get at." He was not a friend at arm's length. He came close to you. A siek man said: "He came one night to watch with me. He soothed me and smoothed my pillow, and soon made me forget my pains." That was like him. His very soul entered into sympathy with those who sought his assistance. He gave himself up to the serviee of his clients, and sought the rights of the poor man, who would be turned into the street but for his aid, with as mueh solicitude as he would seek the seeurity of his own home.

He sought the right side of cases, and refused to plead for that whieh seemed to him to be wrong. He asked of his clients as well as of the courts before whieh he stood in such youthful majesty, "What are the exact facts in this case, and all the facts that have a bearing, and let justice be done."

In looking from the pulpit toward the bar, it seems as though there were a lack of pleaders who ehoose their positions with a view of maintaining high moral principle. Still the evidences are abundant that such was his course. A legal gentleman with whom he had intimate business relations for a number of years, in the eourts, said: "He walked far above us in a moral atmosphere not known to the bar." Such was his walk and his life.

The gain of a good name as a serviceable pleader he aehieved. During the weeks of eourt in our village I have often heard the aspiring young men of the College say to their fellows: "Come boys, we must go down to the court-house this afternoon—Louie makes his plea." And as the young Demosthenes wandered into the Athenian court where a Callistratus plead, and with a charmed heart caught the fires of the embassador's enthusiasm and heneeforth rested no more until he made pleas for his country and erown which have told on the ages, so these young men, perhaps, have received a charm of soul whieh will send them with accumulating power down the ages. Yes, he died young. So did Abel. But it did not take him long to live a great while; and, like our young brother, being dead yet will he speak. His influenee will go on as the years go by, and he will be remembered ever with delight.

It may safely be asserted that our brother sought to build his future fortune in faith, and for this reason sought to plead in the city and out of it for the often fallen form of justiee.

II. Let us notice that the brevity of life as taught in the text admonishes us to be careful in making a choice of pursuits.

Man proposes but God disposes. The uneertainties of what a day may bring forth, and what shall transpire on the morrow, should not permit the indiseretion of negleet, "For what is your life?"

Life is brief. The text calls it a vapor that "appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." The Scriptures are full of expressions declaring the brevity of human life. The passing cloud, the flying eagle, the hastening postman, the weaver's shuttle, the fragile flower, the withering grass and the gliding ship with canvas strained to the wind are eaeh the ehosen symbols of the brevity of life. Children write their names in the white sand of the shore, only to see the waves steal up the beaeh and wash them all away. They have built their snowy forts on the squares and along our streets only to see them perish like the castles of frost-work whieh eonfront the sun on the window pane. So is it with all the human hopes of earth. They live for only a little moment and vanish away.

Life is as a rill, that is born in the highlands, and creeping here and there is reinforced, and begins to descend boisterously and noisily its muddy channel. As it goes farther it increases in volume, depth and elearness, until with a profound sweep it moves forward and is lost in the bosom of the sea. But be the eourse long or short, that ocean is the eommon destination.

All are nearing the end of life, and if prepared we should not deem it a misfortune. When after long absence we are on the train bound for home, and pass the white villages which hang like beads on their string of steel, we do not think of it as a mistortune to approach our home and the friends who await us. Nor yet should we feel sadly at the thought that, well prepared, we are approaehing our final home, and soon shall see the King in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off.

Let us be ready. Let us use wisely the fragment of the time left us. Let the sinner who is unprepared, this day, and in this solemn presence, resolve to begin before this day's sun shall go down, to be a Christian. In time prepare. Queen Elizabeth of England, reelining upon her royal coueh of silken tapestry, with more than a thousand dresses in her wardrobe, and a thousand courtiers bowing at her feet, and a kingdom on which the sun never set, cried out, in the agony of despair, "millions of money for an inch of time." Sinner, I plead with you to be ready, as was our brother.

ADDRESS OF C. W. HIATT.

We are again reminded of the uncertain tenure of life. A human life is well likened to an areh resting on two clouds—the mystery of birth and the mystery of death. How much of sky that arch will span God only knows. This only we know: The grave is the heritage of all. Death spares none; it has no favorites. Every home must one day sink beneath the sorrow of bereavement, every household must one day clothe its doors with pathetic crape. In all this assembly there is none but can whisper to them that mourn: My grief was twin to thine. Death comes to young and old, to weak and strong, to him that is beloved and to him that has no friend. It stretches forth a ruthless hand and plucks away the light, the pride, the idol of home, while the darkness of desolation settles upon that sacred place.

It seems to some of us to-day as if a grave had opened at our very feet. A companion has fallen—one with whom we have walked the first few miles of the way—playmate, schoolmate, collegemate, brother in Christ. He has gone in the morning of life. Before him lay a future that the world calls great. Broad avenues over which none but the princes of men may pass, stretched beyond him on every hand. Possessing gifts that raised him nearly to the gods, earth's crowns seemed all within his reach. Truly a life of promise was his. Our brother's qualifieations did not end here. Not only was he intellectually strong—not only prepared to cope with odds in gaining for himself the applause of men, but he was possessed as well of those moral traits whieh we love to see in our fellow-beings, and which, when united with mental force, tell mightily for righteousness in our sin-cursed world. In his life, and on his noble face, was written the strong and beautiful autograph of Christian character. The stranger who passed him in the street would turn to look again, while the ready conclusion leaped to his lips, There goes a man.

And now our brother lies stately in death. Truly the tenure of life is uncertain. Again we are brought face to face with the great truth, as we lay this princely one to rest, that we all are moving, some with faster, some with slower step, towards the border land of another world. Again are we reminded that the only real eomfort to the living, the only real hope for the dying, is faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. What balm has infidelity in an hour like this? What comfort is there in the creed that "death ends all"? When shall they who have no faith in God cease to weep for departed friends? Never. In despair they fold the cold hands of elay, and say the forever farewell. No cheering thought to them in yonder eity of the silent. Infidelity weeps at the dying bed, weeps at the grave. Its eyes turn to fountains before every memento of the dead; once bereaved, it passes through the valley of life in a rain of tears. There is no eomfort for bereavement save in the religion of Christ. When Jesus said to Martha: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die," he uttered words of comfort for all time. Relying upon his words we lay our brother away, with the grand confidence that by-and-by we shall meet him, and share with him the glory of a celestial home.

There is also the only hope for the dying in this faith. They who are most eonfident in unbelief while living, are least so in the hour of death. Skeptieal theories and speculations in that time, erumble, like apples of Sodom, to ashes in the grasp. But faith in Jesus dispels the dark of death beds. "He that believeth" comes to the margin of the river with the words of David: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they eomfort me"; or with the sublime exelamation of Paul: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" It was in this faith that our brother passed away. At times during his illness he made arrrangements for his departure with Christian courage, and always looked with calmness into the mouth of the grave.

Again we are reminded by this act of Providenee that we should prepare for the mysterious messenger of heaven. We know not when the pale horse and his rider will pause at our chamber door. In view of the uneertainty of life and the certainty of death, in view of the offers of salvation made to all in God's Book, whieh opens its leathern lips and speaks but one word—"Come," let no one go from this plaee to-day unprepared to die. This day we have to make our peace with God; let us be moved to that great act and pass from this room determined to fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man.

Our brother has gone. No tongue can tell how much he will be missed. No form but his can fill the vacaney in yonder home. He will be sorely missed in the profession he adorned; in the church where he had become a pillar, though yet no thread of silver decked his brow; missed in the eommunity where he lived and was loved; missed in these halls where so often he has raised his rich voice in the melody of song and the eloquenee of speech; missed on our quiet streets and in the more crowded marts of men; missed wherever he was wont to come and go. A cloud has descended upon us to-day, but let us not be dismayed. God knows what is best in depriving earth of a grand charaeter. He has a grand object to attain. Out of this cloud of affliction we may be sure he will raise up blessings, even as he builds his brightest bow of glory on the darkest elouds of a summer sky.

TRIBUTE OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

The W. C. T. U. of Wheaton at their meeting last week adopted the following words of sympathy:

Whereas, We recognize the hand of God in removing from our midst, C. Louis Blanchard, who was so useful, so honorable, so conscientious, and in the W. C. T. U. work he was truly "Our Friend;" and knowing the large vacancy in so many homes and hearts can never be filled; therefore

We, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wheaton, hereby tender our dear sister, Mrs. Mary A. Blanchard, and family, our sincerest sympathy, and pray that God's smiles may soften the stroke which causes the loneliness of loving hearts.

From the Chicago office of the National W. C. T. U. came a rare token of esteem and condolence, a pillow of flowers of large size and beautiful design, with the floral letters:

"Our Friend."
W. C. T. U.

The Chicago W. C. T. U. for whom the departed brother had labored, both in a legal capacity and in public addresses, sent out also a beautiful floral tribute.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden of the College Church, Wheaton, is spending a few weeks in Colorado partly for his health, which has been precarious all winter, although he has labored assiduously in the church, beside assisting in the instruction of the Wesleyan Theological Seminary at Wheaton. Bro. C. W. Hiatt of Oberlin Seminary preached in his place Mar. 9th, and Prof. H. A. Fischer last Sabbath evening, Bro. O. C. Bedford of the Senior class of the Seminary supplying in the morning.

—Rev. John V. Potts, of North Robinson, Ohio, author of several works upon the government of the United Brethren in Christ, has been appointed General Missionary for Tiffin Classis, O., of the Reformed Church, to visit vacant congregations in northern Ohio and establish new ones.

—Rev. W. O. Tobey of the King Street church, Chambersburg, Pa., has been sick for some time. The Highway of Holiness says that he has at length resigned.

—On Friday March 7th Mrs. Hoffman, of Newcastle, Pa., was buried from Dr. Meloy's U. P. church in this city. Though residing in Pennsylvania she retained her membership here, and was here buried. Her love for the Chicago church and estimation of its work was expressed by a bequest of $1,500 to aid it in work for the kingdom of Christ.

—A wonderful work is reported from Lynnville, Iowa, near Grinnell, Iowa, under the preaching of a member of the Friends from the East, and over three hundred have borne witness to a changed life.

—A contest has been begun at Boston over the will of Mrs. Valeria Stone, who bequeathed thousands to educational and benevolent institutions, on the ground that in making the testament, she failed to comply with the wishes of her deceased husband.

—Ben Hogan, the evangelist, is now at work in Dillon, M. T., and in less than a week he secured 150 pledges for temperance, among them fifty who were daily drinkers A reform club has been organized. This man, with no pretensions to classical education, has all winter been telling the story of his own life to the miners and other classes of frontiersmen, and so effective has it been that many hundreds have changed the whole course of their lives.

—Rev. Norman Harris, a returned missionary, died of quinsy, at his residence in Hamilton, N. Y., on Saturday morning March 1st. For nearly forty years he labored in Burmah and was a most devoted and faithful evangelist. His last service for the cause of missions was rendered at Syracuse only two days before his death, where he made an earnest address before the Woman's Missionary Society of Onondaga county. He then appeared to be in vigorous health, and was anticipating an early return to his life work.

—The revival effort at Havanah, N Y., under the direction of the Rev. Edgar Davidson, has resulted in the conversion of more than one hundred persons. Of this number twenty-three persons were recently baptized, several of whom were students in the academy. A number of other students wait to join the churches at their homes.

—Since leaving Fairfield, Neb., Miss Fannie E. Townsley and her assistant, Miss S. J. Holloway, have been in revival meetings with the Baptist churches at Juniata, Beatrice and Tecumseh, Neb., with very blessed results in the reviving of churches, and the conversion of moralists and drunkards alike. They began in February Ashland, in Neb., near Lincoln.

—Dr. A. P. Graves and Mr. Nickle are being wonderfully blessed in Waverly, N. Y., where large numbers are coming out nightly for Christ. At the neighboring village of Hornellsville the pastors have been engaged in union meetings, and Dr. Graves was invited to hold a meeting for railroad men one evening. It was a remarkable meeting, over two hundred staying to the inquiry meeting, and some whole families professing Christ.

LUCILE VERNON.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

PRESS COMMENTS:

"Mr. Clark has a national reputation as an author of music and as a solo singer. His music, like himself, has in it the soul of freedom and the life of love. He has made a unique and splendid book. It strikes directly and powerfully in the direction of the several questions of reform to which it is devoted, and also contains many of those old melodies so essential to the circle of song."—[Religious Telescope, Dayton, O.

"I most heartily thank and congratulate you on its timely appearance and excellent contents."—[Sandy Lake News, Pa.

"If you want to sing a variety of songs on a variety of topics, all of them good and many of them beautiful, send for this cheap volume. It contains a rich variety of songs, hymns and tunes—grave and gay."—[Christian Standard, Cincinnati, O.

"Geo. W. Clark is the author of the 'Liberty Minstrel,' 'Harp of Freedom,' etc., etc., and the great performer of songs which had their influence in ushering in the great day of emancipation which we so long labored and prayed for, and which has given five millions of the down-trodden nominal freedom, and which I trust will soon be to them REAL freedom."—[A. F. Williams, Esq., Farmington, Conn.

"This is one of the most complete books of its class that has ever come under our observation."—[Sabbath Recorder, Alfred Center, N. Y.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandmigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influencee of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies....and other anti-Christian Movements."

Able writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands, and from the different denominations, contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath Observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, pointing out both the evils and the remedy. In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

HOME COMFORTS FOR FARMERS.

The comfort of the farmer's family should not be overlooked. Very old farm-houses and those that are cheaply built for temporary use until a better can be afforded, are often most uncomfortable in severe weather. Windows and doors admit the external air more freely than is required for ventilation. Weather-strips made of India rubber are very effective, but they are not to be had everywhere, and require more of an outlay than is always convenient. A little ingenuity will provide substitutes. For the windows, place small wedges between the upper and lower sashes, to prevent rattling, then paste on strips of brown paper to close all the cracks, using stiff flour paste, or that made from rye meal with a little alum added. It is well to leave one upper sash to be let down as may be required for ventilation. Doors may be made tight by tacking tailor's listing or folded strips of woolen cloth along the sides and tops. The opening at the bottom of doors is usually the largest. For these take pieces of small scantling of the proper length, and cover with old carpet or other convenient fabric, stuffing the side which goes against the door with wool, cotton, or even with hay, to make a sort of cushion. While it is well enough to have the kitchen door open directly into the room in summer, it is very uncomfortable for the inmates in winter. If possible, a storm door which can be closed before the kitchen door is opened, should be provided. This may be made in such a manner as to be taken away in warm weather and stored for future use.

Sleeping rooms in farm-houses are usually cold. Those who suffer from cold feet should not be deterred from making themselves comfortable through fear of being thought "old womanish." If one cannot sleep on account of cold feet, he should warm them. Bottles of hot water will answer, but are not so good as blocks of soap-stone. Blocks of hard wood that have no turpentine, if placed in the stove oven early in the evening, will be found excellent foot warmers. In driving in the country in very cold weather a foot warmer of some kind will add greatly to the comfort of those making the journey.—American Agriculturist.

Thaddeus Stevens used to say that a contented farmer was a rarer creature than a white blackbird. Illustrative of the assertion he used to tell of a certain farmer at whose house he once visited. Mr. Stevens observed that the farmer's crop, which was just ripening, was remarkable beyond anything he had ever seen. "My friend," said Mr. Stevens to the farmer, "this is truly magnificent. There is nothing to be desired in your corn-field this year." "W-e-l-l," responded the farmer, guardedly, "it is purty fair; purty fair. But," and there was a noticeable tinge of sadness, "thar might be a few more cunnels—just a few more cunnels—at the end of the cob."

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

IN BRIEF.

—Miss Noyes reports the entire New Testament committed to memory by a young Chinese girl.

—The report is that 90 per cent of the people of Russia can neither read nor write.

—Seoul and New York, Corea and the United States are now linked by the electric chain. The submarine cable from the coast of Hizen, Japan, to the seaport of Fusan, Corea, was completed early in January, and telegraphic offices, with the latest equipments and apparatus, will be ready for business February 28th. An industrial exposition is to be held in the capital next year, and English merchants are soon to open commercial houses. Only a few Americans have thus far ventured on Corean soil.

—A well-known member of the Governor's Council, at a late public dinner, overheard one of the colored attendants ask another: "Whose that gemmen, Sam?" And Sam responded: "Dat's Purfessor F." Then the other queried: "How did ye know he was a perfessor?" To which Sam replied with dignity: "Oh, all dese yere purfessors is polished off on top."

—The vice of gambling was recently so prevalent among the students of a leading college in the Eastern part of this country that the faculty were compelled to take summary measures of cure. It was found that one of the students had lost every dollar in his possession, every article of furniture in his room, and every stitch of clothing on his person; and that another student was in reality a professional gambler, who had entered the institution for the sole purpose of fleecing the youths.—Harper's Weekly.

—Mr. Vanderbilt himself claims that he is the richest man in the world. A year ago the duke of Westminster was estimated to be worth $200,000,000, mostly in houses and lands that yielded him about 2 per cent. Vanderbilt's balance-sheet of January 1, 1884, showed a balance to his credit of $201,332,413, upon which he derives an interest of 6 per cent. His income is therefore a little over $12,000,000 a year, or almost as large as the soldiers will each enjoy after all the proposed pension bills are passed.

—It was told at a Congregational meeting at Northampton of a Yale College pastor, Mr. Fitch, whose diffidence always prevented him from making an extempore speech, that one night, when some bad boys broke his windows, he arose and went forth to upbraid them; but, after a few words, he could find no language in which to express himself, and so he remarked: "Young gentlemen, I find I have left the notes of what I intended to say on my study table; but if you will reassemble at this place to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock, I will then express my thoughts to you as I proposed to do when I came out."

—An object lesson in the transmutation of virtues is conveyed in this paragraph from an exchange: "Tennyson can take a worthless sheet of paper, and by writing a poem on it make it worth $5,000. That's genius. Vanderbilt can write a few words on a sheet and make it worth $5,000,000. That's capital. The United States can take an ounce and a quarter of gold and stamp upon it an 'eagle bird' and 'twenty dollars.' That's money. The mechanic can take the material worth $5 and make it into a watch worth $100. That's skill. The merchant can take an article worth 25 cents, and sell it for $1. That's business. A lady can purchase a very comfortable bonnet for $10, but she prefers to pay $100. That's foolishness. The ditch-digger works ten hours a day, and shovels out three or four tons of earth a day for $1. That's labor."

The subjoined figures are condensed from an elaborate statement in the Herald relative to the great highway between the sister cities of New York and Brooklyn. They show the financial phase of this great structure, and are indicative of its beneficial influences upon the convenience and growth of the two cities in the future. The cost of the bridge, represented in the bonds of the two cities, is $16,560,000, of which New York will pay $5,000,000 and Brooklyn $11,560,000. These bonds pay rates of interest ranging from 4 to 7 per cent, and mature at periods extending from 1899 to 1924. Brooklyn will pay annually an interest of $679,350, and New York will pay annually $339,675. When the principal and interest of the bonds shall have been paid, the bridge will have cost more than $42,000,000. Revenues from tolls, including foot and car passengers, and vehicles, for the last eight months, has been $205,281, and it is estimated that the same sources, under more perfect arrangements, will hereafter yield an annual revenue of $521,570.

HEREDITARY TAINTS.

SOME REVELATIONS ON A SUBJECT WHICH CONCERNS THE WELFARE OF THE RACE AND THE HAPPINESS OF ALL.

(Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.)

To any one who has studied the laws of life, and especially those which relate to reproduction, an experience such as we are about to relate, will come with special force and interest. The transmission of certain mental traits of prominence, and of certain physical traits of equal prominence, are facts which all acknowledge, but which none can understand. The father may be distinguished—the son, an imbecile; or, the parent may be decrepit and unknown, and the child achieve the highest place possible to humanity. But through it all, there will be certain characteristics which mark the individual as descending from certain ancestors. Too often, indeed, these characteristics are infirmities, and often of a physical nature.

These facts were strikingly brought out during a conversation, which a representative of this paper recently had with Mrs. Carrie D. T. Swift, who is the wife of one of our most prominent citizens. This lady related that she inherited from her parents certain tendencies over which she had no control, and which were in the nature of blood difficulties, assuming the form of rheumatism. Her experience can best be described in her own words. To the writer she said:

"I felt the beginning of this hereditary taint many years ago, in vague pains, which seemed to come unaccountably and at uncalled-for times. They were annoying, exhausting, and interfered not only with my duties, but also totally destroyed my happiness. At first they would be only transient, appearing for a day or two, and then disappearing; then again they would come in such violent forms that it was impossible for me to lift a cup to my mouth. Afterwards, my feet and hands swelled so that it was impossible for me to draw on my shoes or gloves without the greatest effort. I realized what the difficulty was, but seemed powerless to avert it. I finally became so bad that I was confined to the house and to my bed most of the time. My joints pained me continuously and my feet swelled to enormous proportions. Knowing that I inherited this tendency, I had about abandoned hope, when I began the use of a remedy which was recommended to me by a friend as being specially efficient in cases of a similar kind. To my great gratitude I found that it relieved me, restored my appetite, and I am able to say that now I have gained forty pounds in weight, feel perfectly well, and am in the best possible condition, owing wholly to Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure which was the remedy I used."

"No one would ever suspect you had suffered so, Mrs. Swift, to see you now," remarked the reporter.

"That is what all my friends say. Only yesterday an acquaintance of mine whom I had not seen for some time, hesitated, before speaking, and apologized by saying, 'Why, I really did not know you, you have changed so for the better since I last met you, how well you do look.'"

"Have you any objection to giving the name of the party who first mentioned this remedy to you?"

"Not the slightest. It was Mr. R. H. Furman, the photographer."

The newspaper man, after bidding Mrs. Swift good-bye, repaired to the photographic rooms of Mr. Furman, when the following conversation ensued:

"Have you been a sufferer from rheumatism, Mr. Furman?"

"Well, I should think I had."

"For how many years?"

"Twelve or fifteen."

"Did you try to cure it?"

"Yes I tried everything, and, at last, went to the Hot Springs of Arkansas, and nothing seemed to do me any good until I tried Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure."

"And it cured you, did it?"

"Yes, completely."

"And you can cordially recommend it?"

"Yes, indeed, more cordially than anything I have ever known of. It is simply a wonderful medicine. I believe that two-thirds of all cases, both acute and chronic, could be cured as I was cured by the use of this remedy. In fact I know a number of persons who have been in the worst possible condition, and are now completely well wholly through its use."

The statements above made are from sources, the authority of which cannot be questioned. They conclusively prove the value of the preparation named, and show that even hereditary traits can be removed by the use of the proper means.

"I am the Last of Six."

One rainy forenoon, something less than a year ago, a pale, cadaverous youth walked into the store of C. N. Crittenton, New York, and in weak, husky tones, interrupted frequently by a dry hacking cough, stated that he wanted a couple of bottles of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar. "I am the last of six," he said; "the others all died of consumption, and I am going fast. I will try this new remedy, but I have no hope." He did try it, and to some purpose. He took in all twelve bottles, and is to-day in perfect health—lungs sound, cough gone, not a sign of pulmonary disease remaining. Sold by druggists.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting narratives ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The United States Senate debated Friday the resolution to appropriate funds for the suppression of the foot and mouth disease among cattle in Western States, but action was postponed owing to the opposition of Southern Senators on Constitutional grounds. Senator Ingalls created much laughter by the remark that they would soon have to consider the suppression of the foot and mouth disease in the Democratic party, as it never opened its mouth without putting its foot in it.

—Senator Hill has ready a bill to make the postage on newspapers 1 cent per pound. It is claimed that the measure will get through both houses this session, with the indorsement of leading dailies.

—In the Senate, two resolutions were introduced for a Constitutional amendment to make only gold and silver a legal tender for the payment of debts. Three hours were spent Monday in debate on the Mexican treaty, in secret session, and there is every probability of speedy action on the document.

—Thursday the Senate passed, with amendments, the House bill to reinstate Fitz John Porter, the traitor of the second Bull Run battle. The bill returns to the House and requires a two-third vote to bring it up out of turn. The bill authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint General Porter to the position of colonel in the army of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of dismissal, and authorizes the President, in his discretion, to place General Porter on the retired list as of that grade; General Porter, however, to receive no compensation or allowance prior to his appointment under this act.

COUNTRY.

—Abraham Breath, an old resident of Alton, Illinois, who died Wednesday, was one of the sixty men who enrolled themselves to defend Elijah P. Lovejoy in the riots of 1837.

—Peter Schmitz, a wealthy builder of Chicago, who recently killed his second wife at No. 214 Mohawk street, ended his life in jail by choking himself wih a three-quarter inch cord which he held in his hands.

—Fire at Allegan, Mich., Wednesday, destroyed twenty-three stores, Peck's Bank, the Sherman House, and three newspaper offices, involving a total loss of $350,000.

—It is stated that two Scotchmen, recently arrived, carried the germs of the foot and mouth disease in their clothing, as they had been herding infected cattle in Scotland.

—Three thousand copies of the Citizen newspaper of Illion, N. Y., were printed by means of electricity Wednesday night.

—By a vote of 144 to 50 the bill extending the suffrage to women was defeated in the Massachusetts House of Representatives Wednesday.

—Three passengers on the Chicago and Atlantic express were despoiled of their money and watches by two men who entered the coach early Thursday morning at Ada, Ohio, and who held the conductor at bay with revolvers.

—Seven bishops and a number of clergymen participated in the funeral services of Bishop Clarkson at Omaha Thursday, business being suspended during the solemn occasion.

—Estimates place the cattle drive from Texas the coming season in excess of 300,000 head.

—The recent flood destroyed fifty-five bridges between Pittsburg and Cairo, which will cost $210,000 to replace.

—An avalanche from Aspen Mountain, Col., Monday night, last week, buried three Vallejo miners. Two other men are missing.

—A dispatch from Starkville, Miss., March 14, says: On Tuesday afternoon a terrible cyclone passed over this country. Beginning several miles west of this place, it leveled forests, buildings, and fences, and did great damage to live stock, and killed several persons. The full force of the storm struck the college near here, unroofing the dormitory, and blowing down many buildings, including barn and stables.

—Oliver Dyer, sophomore at Yale, handled roughly by R. Bradford Williams (colored), a classmate, in the college games last Saturday, died of his injuries Friday morning.

—The New Orleans Exposition directory is making efforts to secure the colossal steamship Great Eastern to bring a cargo of exhibits from Liverpool, and then serve as a floating hotel while the Exposition remains open.

—Business failures in the United States for the week numbered 186, 25 less than the preceding week, and a decrease of 47 from the corresponding period in 1883. In Canada and its provinces there were 42 failures reported.

—In a riot for the possession of a crossing at Sharpsville, Pa., Friday, between Pennsylvania Railroad employes and those of the Sharpsville Railway, General Manager Prince of the latter line was knocked down and trampled on. Weapons were freely flourished, but the sheriff is now in possession.

—Ferdinand Schueffler and William Denooyer were burned to death in the fire at Grand Rapids, Mich. They were cut off by the flames in the sixth story of a carpet-sweeper factory.

—Reports have reached Springfield, Ill., that the foot and mouth disease has appeared in Effingham county. New cases have occurred in the Owl Creek district in Kansas, and quarantine regulations are being cheerfully complied with. Governor Glick has called a special meeting of the Legislature, to convene March 18.

—The committee investigating the departments of New York City reported to the Legislature at Albany Friday, declaring that they found the officials either dishonest or inefficient, and that County Clerks Butler, Thompson, and Keenan had retained fees illegally amounting to $50,000. The surrogate office they declared to be run for blackmailing purposes, and in most cases they found that the officials in charge only nominally exercised the power deputed to them. The committee has prepared nine bills to obviate the evils, and save the city annually $200,000.

—About 1 o'clock Wednesday morning one of the most appalling mine disasters on record occurred near Pocahontas, Tazewell County, Virginia. At the hour mentioned a gas explosion took place in the Laurel-Creek Mine at that point, where 150 men were employed. Every man of them was instantly killed, and the engines, cars and machinery were shattered into atoms. The disaster is without doubt attributable to the insufficient character of the machinery for carrying off the noxious gases.

FOREIGN.

—The French occupied Bac Ninh, in Tonquin, Wednesday. The victors had seventy wounded, and the Chinese loss was heavy.

—General Graham Thursday defeated the Arabs under Osman Digna after a stubborn fight of two and one-half hours' duration. The rebels fought with such desperation that they one time broke the second British square. The rebel loss is estimated at 4,000 killed and 6,000 wounded.

—There was an explosion Wednesday night in a hotel at Fulham, a suburb of London. It is believed to be another Fenian dynamitc outrage. A box containing four packages, apparently cartridges, was found on the premises. One man was blown to pieces.

—Seventy picked detectives of London are receiving instructions for the pursuit of dynamiters. The Invincibles of Paris have selected four men to take the life of McDermott, the informer. The police of Vienna and Pesth have discovered an extensive plot. A policeman at the capital of Moravia was murdered by anarchists.

FOLLY.

It's all folly to pay $50 or a $100 for seven degrees in Freemasonry in the Lodge and Chapter when you can send a dollar to the National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, and get the whole thing by return mail, without being hoodwinked and haltered or having to "put up refreshments" after tedious "initiations."

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA

This will be recognized as the most important literary announcement I have ever made. All previous undertakings, successes, and failures have been preparation for this. THE MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA will be the most comprehensive single work of reference ever undertaken in the English language. It will include:

AN ENGLISH DICTIONARY,

based upon the new "Imperial Dictionary," recently published in England. The "Imperial" is very much larger than either Webster's or Worcester's Unabridged Dictionary; and, being many years more recent in its compilation, its editors had, of course, the benefit of all that scholarship had gained by either Webster or Worcester. It will be thoroughly revised and enlarged (rather than abridged) BY ITS FORMER CHIEF EDITOR.

SIX OTHER LANGUAGES.

It will also include a concise dictionary of the six other principal literary languages of the world—GREEK, LATIN, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH.

A CYCLOPEDIA.

Its cyclopedia features will be based upon "Chamber's Encyclopedia," but will be very much more comprehensive, covering more thoroughly than any other single work heretofore published all departments of human knowledge usually comprehended in a Cyclopedia or Library of Universal Knowledge.

OVER 5,000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

It will be fully illustrated, including more than 5,000 wood-cuts and reproductions, and such numerous maps as will constitute a complete atlas of the world, ancient and modern, sacred and political.

ONE ALPHABET.

The entire contents of THE MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA will be included in one alphabetical arrangement, thus giving the utmost facility for reference.

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF.

The former Editor-in-Chief of "The Library of Universal Knowledge," REV. RICHARD GLEASON GREENE, will have charge of the work, his principal Associate being JAMES HUNTER, formerly of Glasgow, Scotland, where for nearly ten years he was principal editor of the new "Imperial Dictionary," and more recently, in this country, Editor of the "Supplement to Worcester's Unabridged Dictionary." The scholarship and skill of these trained cyclopedists will be supplemented by other experienced workers from the former editorial staffs of "The Library of Universal Knowledge" and of Appleton's and Johnson's Cyclopedias, and by many others.

PRICE.

THE MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA will be published in convenient, double-column octavo volumes, of about 800 pages each, at the price of $1.25 per volume, cloth binding, and will probably be completed in twenty volumes. There will also be a cheaper edition, probably $15 for the set.

with more detailed prospectus, will be ready in a few days, and will be sent free upon application, also, large catalogue of standard books, at lower prices than ever before known. NOT sold by dealers—prices too low. Books sent for examination before payment, on evidence of good faith.

THE ADDRESSES AT WASHINGTON have formed an important part of the Cynosure for several numbers. No convention has furnished more able or varied discussion of reform topics for our columns. In the present number the valuable and interesting article from our English contributor, Rev. John Boyes, and the earnest protest of Dr. Geo. B. Cheever that the world needs an example of a nation emphatically Christian,, will be read with avidity. Prof. Lumry discusses the question of money and banks, and Gen. Phelps has space for his opinion on prohibition, which we sincerely hope he may change before the November election. We are able to promise for next number a fine portrait of William Wirt, the greatest of Attorney Generals, and first Anti-masonic candidate for President. The articles that will accompany it will reveal something of the history of that nomination not generally known. We shall soon be ready for a fine Birney number also, with portrait and sketch.

To get two-month subscribers for 25 cents will not be found a difficult work, if you fail in securing a yearly subscription. Each copy of the Cynosure is equal to an ordinary pamphlet of 80 pages. Eight such pamphlets for a quarter of a dollar is not extravagance by far. Let every reader of this paper present this matter to his neighbors.

The National Republican committee are making their final arrangements for a place of meeting. The Exposition building will be again utilized, only the north end will be fitted up instead of the south as in 1880, where two nominating conventions were held in the same place. The accommodations will be for several thousand less than when Garfield was nominated, the managers perhaps thinking that the absence of a great war of factions will reduce the attendance, and remembering that several other national meetings are to be held here. The anti-monopolists have called their convention here, which makes the fourth national nominating convention which Chicago will be happy to entertain this year.

The intense and bitter partisan strife at the last Republican convention is yet remembered in Chicago by its scars, and the names appointed on the local committee for the next convention have been scanned with some alarm, when it is announced that three-fourths are Logan men. The Illinois Senator may satisfy the Masonic and Grand Army lodges, but it is said that the business men of the city are very generally opposed to him. It may have some significance in this respect that a call was issued Saturday, signed by fifty of the substantial business men of Chicago for the organization of an "Independent Republican Association" to assert independence of action and patriotism at the polls and to demand administrative reform and the "total removal of the spoils system and 'bossism' from public life." This is the strongest kind of an anti-Logan movement, and springs up among men whose demands cannot be safely ignored.

Harper's Weekly prints two pictures "To-day" and "To-morrow." One is of a young lady in splendid costume engaging with delight in the dance; in the other the same person, in plainest garb pays her devotions at the altar prayer-book in hand. The absurdity of much of the observance of Lent is thus set forth with the keenest irony. But not too severely. The Washington dispatches tell of a mid-Lent masked ball held at the British legation, and speak of it as the first in our capital, though a common occurrence in Catholic countries. What a hollow mockery of religion, which condenses the penitence and humiliation of a year into a single month and cannot endure even so brief a season of abstemious life without a masquerade in the middle! But to the same low and soulless condition would all our churches come should they follow the leaders who mark the callender for Easter, Christmas and the rest.

The alarm of the past fortnight over what was feared might be a cattle epidemic is gradually subsiding. The animals attacked in Illinois and Kansas have been examined by experienced surgeons who report that the dreaded "foot-and-mouth" disease has not shown itself. In Kansas they are positive that the source of the trouble is not contagious disease, nor lack of care, nor alkali water, but ergot. The hay was found to contain a large amount of wild rye which was full of ergot, which is a diseased condition of the germen of grasses, and in considerable quantities is poisonous to animals. The theory of the attack is that the ergot acted by contracting the blood-vessels, retarding the circulation in the extremities, and causing the feet to freeze. This decision will be hailed by the thousands who have heard with anxiety of this threatened attack upon a great source of the wealth of the country.

Secretary Teller of the Interior Department sent last week to the Senate, in response to a resolution, a communication respecting the fencing in of government lands in the territories by cattle grazers. It is ascertained that many million acres of the public lands are thus illegally enclosed, preventing settlement and interfering with public travel. Among the number of those named are several English and Scotch companies. A large number of cases are found west of the one hundredth meridian (which is about the meridian of Fort Dodge in Kansas and Fort Pierre in Dakota) where the enclosures range from a thousand acres and upwards. The friends of the small farmer in Congress must be in haste to secure what little is left of the public domain for the the actual settler. The reservation of what remains for settlement under the homestead act cannot be long delayed if it is to effect anything useful. But it is a question whether Congress can drive those land monopolists off from the tracts they have attempted to steal. Our government has seldom succeeded in preventing them from shamefully robbing the Indians of their reservations. Much more are they secure in fencing in lands unoccupied where no claimant can raise a voice against them. This matter throws a side light of experience upon the theories of Henry George. We shall see what protection government ownership of land is against the encroachments of monopoly.

Although the New York legislature has by a vote of 91 to 63 decided against submitting a prohibition amendment to the popular vote, the friends of temperance may heartily rejoice in the passage of an act providing for instruction in the public schools in respect to the liquor business. The new law provides "for instructing all pupils, in all schools supported by public money or under State control, in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics upon the human system." A knowledge of the same branches is required also of all teachers, and they must pass examination upon them to secure certificates. Vermont, Michigan and New Hampshire already have similar laws, and are rearing voters who shall remand the liquor traffic to its proper and fearful abode.

THE WORKING CLASSES OF ENGLAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES, A. M.

The various phases through which public opinion is passing in relation to the masses, may be indicated by a few recent events. To meet the ever changing conditions of social life and thought, new methods of work are being constantly suggested and tried. The Rev. Stopford Brooke, of London, is trying the experiment of holding secular services on a new principle in his church on week evenings. He says that he has long felt that a temperance evening should not be wholly occupied with temperance talk, but should take into itself, as in harmony with it, the interests of science, art and literature. The first evening so spent, James Bryce, Esq., M. P., delivered a very instructive lecture entitled, "A visit to Mau Mau, the principal fire lake of the great volcano of Kilauea, in Hawaii." "Temperance songs, recitations, and addresses were given during the evening, and ample opportunities were afforded for signing the pledge. The method, though novel, is deserving the attention of ministers and churches.

A few evenings ago, Mr. Broadhurst, M. P., at the opening of a workmen's club, to be conducted on temperance principles, said, that he thought any sensible man would prefer spending his time in an institution like that, rather than at the bar of a public-house. He did not speak as a teetotaler because he was not one; but he maintained that if a man required alcohol he should have it at home. If a man told him that alcohol was necessary to sustain physical exertion, he should say that his own experience was against it. Up to ten years ago he had worked as a journeyman stone-mason at some of the largest buildings in the country, and though his work was hard, he found he could get through it much better during the day without the beer, and left off work in the evening much stronger and less tired than if he had drank beer during his working hours. While his work at the present time was of a different nature, it was no less arduous, and he could express his honest belief that it would be impossible for him to sustain himself during the usual hard day's work of a member of Parliament if he was not almost a teetotaler. One of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the working people, so far as the skilled mechanic was concerned was the drink; for the workmen who spend their time at the public-houses are always a drag and a hindrance to every forward movement undertaken on their behalf. Most of the great struggles they had passed through would have been much easier won if they had been sober. With sobriety they had advantages which, if utilized, would make them masters of the future destinies of this great country. His words ought to be carefully weighed by working men everywhere.

M. Clemenceau is on a visit to this country to make a personal examination of the homes and modes of life of the working classes, with a view to improve the condition of the working classes of Paris. He is evidently struck with the absence of police supervision. In English towns perfect liberty is given to the most immature workman in search of employment, with the slight exceptions that arise from the working of the Factory Acts. The wisdom of this freedom has been questioned by some who think that a restraint on private liberty is better than the almost universal license which is accorded, and the consequent misery sometimes entailed thereby. It is however difficult to draw the boundary line; and probably the present liberty is the lesser of the two evils.

Mr. George of America, is in this country profcssedly trying to enlighten the working classes on the subject of property. To us it seems evident that Mr. George, in his efforts to make it appear that it is wrong for the landowners to retain their possessions, and that property ought to be wrested from them and handed over to the people, is either in the dark himself, or his moral nature has been fearfully perverted. His theories carried out would land the world in anarchy and roll back the civilization of the globe. When lecturing at Birmingham a few days ago, a gentleman rose and said: "Mr. George, you can go back to America and tell them to restore the land to the Red Indians." The remark suggested a new phase of thought to many present and elicited the applause of the audience.

Canon Liddon, the other Sunday afternoon, in preaching before the University of Cambridge, dissussed the rights of property. He affirmed that human society is made up of inequalities—inequalities of means, influence, education, social position, and opportunity. He reminded the undergraduates that there were great inequalities existing among themselves, and glanced at other manifest differences in the social position, opportunities, privileges of men. This difference he attributed to the simple fact that God had made men to differ; and that, therefore, attempts at the equal distribution of property, are in conflict with the original facts of human nature; or, in other words, with the will of God. He earnestly rebutted the charge so often made, that the church is always upholding privilege against right, and wealth against poverty. He said that wherever Christianity is really believed and acted on, it tends to lessen the general inequalities of life, its charities throw bridges over the abysses which separate classes, and that its spirit of self-sacrifice prompts the free abandonment of wealth and station for the sake of others.

Our convictions are more in harmony with the teachings of Canon Liddon than with those of Mr. George. An Irishman, some time ago, unconsciously hit the right nail on the head, when an orator of Mr. George's type asked, "Is not one man as good as another?" when Pat excitedly shouted out, "And sure he is, and a grate dale better."

Grimsby, England, Feb. 26, 1884.

ENGLAND'S OPPORTUNITY AND GOD'S WORD.

BY REV. GEORGE B. CHEEVER, D. D.

We are all watching with the deepest anxiety the progress of the conflict in Egypt, and we are more than ever indignant at the vacillating policy of England. Alas, what amazing opportunities for the victory of great principles have been sacrificed! And with what tardy and insufficient driblets of regiments have the British Ministry dallied and hesitated and invited defeat, when they might have sent an army of twenty thousand, with a rapidity and power of justice that in the name of God would have swept the forces and the territory of the false prophet and his slave-holding tribes like a cyclone!

If only a year ago, when it was proposed as expedient, after the great victories against Arabi Bey, to withdraw the British troops, Mr. Gladstone had declared plainly that England had a moral purpose, and not merely commercial, or bond-holding, in Egypt; and that her government and people were determined to keep possession of the country so wonderfully, by the providence of God, placed at their disposal, until freedom of the Bible and of religious opinions, the confession of Christ without persecution, and the security of social and civil rights under God's law were established, and slavery abolished,—then there would have been neither massacre nor defeat; but rather the whole Musselman world would have quailed before such an announcement, with a disciplined, victorious army behind it. No such fanatic as El Mahdi could have gained a foothold or followers. The right arm of the Turkish Sultan, with the Koran, would have withered, and "the counsels of the wise councillors of Pharaoh become brutish, because of the shaking of the hand of the Lord of hosts over Egypt."

The civilized nations of the earth would have acclaimed with joy the lifting up of such a banner of truth and freedom. "For the extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the land, and in mercy shall the throne be established; judging and seeking judgment, and hastening righteousness. Behold the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it. There shall be an altar to the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land. For they shall cry out unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a Saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them." Isa. 16th and 19th.

Gen. Gordon is said to be a Christian and a believer in prophecy. We know not how that may be, nor whether, having been left by the British Ministry to go to Khartoum without an army near enough to back him and enforce his purposes, he is at this moment alive or in safety. But his diplomacy in regard to slavery is not decisive or fearless. There should have been no concealment as to the intentions of England to abolish slavery; nor need there have been, had she sent an army in the name of that Christianity which England boasts to be the common law of her own Constitution and people, and if so the common law of all her armies, colonies and conquests; with such a position she would have stood acknowledged among the nations as the foremost kingdom of the world—the only kingdom whose mission and work is what it ought to be, that of Christian freedom, justice and benevolence for all mankind.

England has had the offer in the providence of God that the Jews once had and rejected, of being the kingdom of a royal priesthood for all nations. We of the United States, her descendants, have cut ourselves off from a position of such privilege and glory by excommunicating the Bible and the name of God from the Constitution,—have made ourselves eunuchs, not for the kingdom of heaven's sake, but for the despotism of a godless democracy. As the Jews made a calf in their day, and said, "These be thy gods O, Israel," so we in ours have taken the battered Dagon of the Philistines, absolved of his tail, and set him in his place again; the deity, in fact, of a Nihilistic socialism, and our danger now is between the Charybdis of Romanism and the Irish in league against our liberties on one side, and the Scylla of a political and civil atheism and renunciation of God's law on the other.

Truly the one thing now that earth needs, after all the preparations so vast and mighty that God in his providence and by man's science has made, and all the successes of the missionary enterprise, by the outpouring of his Spirit with the free proclamation of his Word, is the example of some one Christian nation, that God has girded with power and influence, unfurling the banner of his truth, and legislating and acting in his name.

But I could fill a volume with such romantic suppositions. God be praised for the assurance that the romance will one day be a reality, and that from the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, the Lord's name shall be praised among all nations!

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

It is a noticeable fact that very few Christians seem to read Revelation—the opening and closing chapters perhaps excepted—as they read other parts of Scripture, "for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." To them it is a land of unfathomable mystery, and every commentator who offers to lead them through it but a blind guide darkening counsel by words without knowledge, till they settle down into the fixed belief that "Revelation was never intended to be understood;" —as if all the use of that strange panorama, grander and more vastly comprehensive than was ever unrolled to the eye of prophet before, is simply to dazzle and mystify! But can it be? Is this God's way? Has he placed in the hands of his church a sealed history of all her future to the end of time, forewarning her of mysterious dangers and deadly foes, and only when those dangers are forever passed and those foes forever conquered permitting the seals to be opened? Yet many intelligent Christian people extricate themselves from the quandary by saying that "these things can only be understood through their fulfilment." And either mode of reasoning is simply jumping from one bog into another. Would it not be more honoring to God to think that when he said to John, "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book," he meant exactly what he said?—that there was nothing in its pages which it did not behoove his church to know and understand; and if needful for the church, why not for the individual Christian?

I remember hearing it stated by a good and learned minister who had labored among the freedmen of the South, that Daniel and Revelation were their favorite portions of the Bible because, as they naively said, "they could understand them best." Let us not smile at these simple souls, but remember that he is nearest eternal truth who approaches its mysteries with the spirit of a little child. And is not this the very point where we err? We think of Revelation as a hard book full of abstruse symbols having in connection with the common duties of daily life, when the truth is that divested of narrow interpretations, and studied more in a spiritual and less in a literal sense, it is divinely simple and vitally practical—no book in the Bible more so. We are not obliged to understand the exact time covered in prophetical language by a month, a day, or a year, before we can find stimulus and warning in the fate of the Mystic Babylon—provided we remember that it is not Rome alone she typifies but every church which has left her work of saving souls for the power and ease and luxury which the world is always ready to offer as the price of its unholy fellowship; or to recognize in the Beast and its shadowy Image one vast world Force which shifts its form to suit different ages, but is always essentially one and the same.

In the pressure of daily temptations, in hours of trial and discouragement when the flesh is weak and the spirit fails, and we seem to stand as forlorn hopes for all the shafts of the enemy, how inspiring its vivid pictures of conflict and victory! The attempt to narrow down the scenes in Revelation to a particular time or precise locality has robbed us of much of the spiritual benefit it was designed to impart. Rome is wherever we find her spirit manifested, and we meet the terrible Beast in every anti-Christian force now working in society. Those dark powers are powers of the air, their range is the entire earth; and in one form or another the weakest Christian must meet them every day of his life.

One thought more. It is possible that we are standing on the threshold of that last mighty conflict when these powers of sin will combine all their forces. There are signs of the times which seem to point that way, even to what has seemed heretofore the most improbable of unions, popery and the lodge. Are we prepared for it? The only proof that we are, lies in the fact that we are now standing at our posts and not turning our backs to the enemy. If so, for us is the promise:—"Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world."

SECRET ORDERS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

A contributor of the New York Examiner, "Escott Holt," has observed the financial and spiritual ruin which the secret lodge system is bringing upon the colored people of the South and writes thus of them:

"In a letter written some months ago I noticed the very large number of secret orders, burial and benefit societies growing up among the colored people in Washington. Since that time, I find that this state of things is pretty general throughout the South. In the town of Paris, Ky., for example, there are about 1,500 colored people, and among them, seven societies of as many different orders. The exact amount of all the contributions for church and also for lodge purposes has been ascertained; and the former does not amount to one-third of the latter. A large portion of the means of an indigent class struggling to attain comfort is wasted on ceremony and regalia. The freedmen are impoverished by lodgery. The few men of property among them owe it to their race to devote their superfluity to the education of youth. In the present condition of the freedmen, scarfs, badges, gilt staves, and pompous ceremonies have for them peculiar attractions. The effect upon them of familiarity with empty and meaningless ceremonials, I am told by ministers, is to undermine gradually their faith in the reality of religion. The church falls, little by little, in their estimation, to the level of the lodge; and the once devout worshipers are transformed into different lookers-on. For these manifest evils, there is no compensation in the charity features of the secret societies. The amounts collected are mostly expended in rents, furniture, banners, regalia and the thousand fripperies of procession days; they are ridiculously large when compared with the trifling sum doled out in charity. To organize a secret society for charity is as absurd as to burn a house to roast a pig—a culinary method charged by Tom Hood upon the Chinese. The evil of secret societies among the freedmen is so widespread, I have thought it well to call to it the attention of ministers laboring among that class."

Rev. Rufus Perry of the National Monitor, organ of the colored Baptist churches, adds this testimony to the above:

"We must confess that in the above there is too much truth. We often meet women in our post office here, sending registered letters to the different societies which they had joined before coming North to earn a living. They are members, generally, of some church in the South, but we seldom see anything going to the church; it is all to the societies. This results from false teaching and bad example. If the church of God cannot meet the needs of humanity without a supplement of 'lodgery,' the church is a miserable failure. An aspirant for the ministry a part of whose faith is lodgery, should never be 'passed' till he shall have been purged of all such worldliness. The church is the light of the world. It is the salt of the earth. The man or woman that cannot trust it in health, in sickness and in death, has no business in it."

THE SONG OF FREEMEN.

REMARKS AND SONG OF GEO. W. CKARK AT THE OPENING OF THE AMERICAN AND PROHIBITION CONVENTION, WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 20, 1884.

I used to think if I could live to see the slave power and the rum power overthrown and these great crimes against God and man prohibited and done away with throughout the country, the millineum would soon dawn upon the world, and I should feel like good old Simeon—"Now Lord, let thy servant depart in peace for mine eyes have seen this great salvation."

But I now see still further and behold other great and threatcning evils to be grappled with and overthrown as well, beforc that glorious day shall shed its benign rays upon the earth. The work of true Christian reformers will never be complete until every form of tyranny and oppression over the bodies, minds and souls of men and women, too,—shall be overthrown and every unauthorized, unholy and unsanctified altar shall be cast down and demolished, and mankind and womankind shall realize that full and perfect freedom of which the poet sang when he said:

"He is a freeman whom the Truth makes free
And all slaves beside!"

Then mankind shall not be divided up, warped up, and bound up, and hooped up into Odd-fellows clans, Masonic clans, Mormon clans, Ku-Klux-clans, whisky clans, etc., etc.: and instead of selfish rascally "rings," we shall have a righteous, loyal and a royal brotherhood. Instead of artificial, superficial and hollow shams, we shall have a true and generous nobility; and instead of heartless machinehood we shall have an untrammeled, wholesouled manhood.

"Nature's own nobleman,
Friendly and frank—
The man with his heart in his hand!"

And for this complete freedom I labor and wait—I pray and vote, and for this I sing—

A voice has gone forth and the land is awake!
Our true men shall gather from ocean to lake;
Our cause is as pure as the earth ever saw,
And our faith we will pledge in the thrilling huzzah!

Let them blacken our names and pursue us with ill—
We bow at thine Altar, sweet Liberty still;
Then rally, then rally! come one and come all,
With harness well girded and echo the call.

Thy hilltops, New England, shall leap at the cry;
And the prairie and far distant West shall reply,
It shall roll o'er the land till the farthermost glen
Gives back the glad summons again and again.

The Ku-Klux shall hear in their conclaves of blood,
And read on their walls the hand-writing of God;
Niagara's torrent shall thunder it forth;
It shall burn in the sentinel Star of the North.

It shall blaze in the lightning and speak in the thunder,
Till all human fetters are riven assunder;
And Freedom her rights has triumphantly won,
And our country her garments of beauty put on.

The forests shall know it and lift up their voice,
And bid the green prairies and valley's rejoice;
And the Father of Waters join Mexico's sea
In the Anthem of Nature for millions set free.
Then huzzah! then huzzah!
Truth's glittering falchion for FREEDOM WE DRAW!

WINDY WORDS.—The Socialists and Communists of America, of which there are scarcely more than a baker's dozen, manage to make considerable noise nevertheless. They are accustomed, whenever their brethern in Europe commit some terrible crime, to assemble and feast and crow over it. So in the instance of the late Vienna outrages. A meeting was called lately at Irving Hall, New York, at which about one thousand persons were present. A large red flag was conspicuous. On it was inscribed, "No God, no Master." Speeches were made by their prominent men, and resolutions were passed approving the murderous conduct of the Vienna assassins. The latter were addressed as follows: "Brothers, your cause is that of the oppressed against the oppressor. That cause is a holy cause—not only of Austria, but of all countries. Brothers, we approve your action; we approve your methods. Between you and your oppressors there can be no truce. Kill, destroy, annihilate, assassinate, even to the germ of your aristocracy." Dogs that always bark never bite, and free speech is the safety-valve for the escape of a good deal of superfluous wickedness in the body politic and religions of this country.—Lutheran Standard.

CARDINAL M'CABE ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Cardinal M'Cabe, in the course of a pastoral, read in all the Catholic churches of Dublin on Sunday, strongly denounced secret societies. His Eminence said,—"Secret societies, which seem to possess a fatal charm for our people, have from time to time drawn thousands of misguided youths within the fatal circle where was no escape. Wickedness and a life of crime, often terminated by death from a confederate's hands, seem to be the sole choice given them. Few who are weak enough to yield to the temptation are strong enough to risk the penalty of death from refusal to obey a wicked command, and when the day of retribution comes on these societies and the hand of justice is on the shoulder of the victim he may choose between the rope of the public executioner and the infamy of the informer. We have lately seen in this city of ours lamentable illustrations of these truths. Will these scenes be again witnessed? To answer this question we may ask another—Will the reign of drunkenness prevail? If so the gibbet will have its victims and the emigrant ships will have their cargoes of degraded, self-exiled informers."—Belfast Witness.

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

CHAPTER IV.—Wherein the lecture is reported.

Uncle Job found but little difficulty in gaining consent to use the church for an Anti-masonic meeting.

This was a matter of surprise and comment to many persons, both in and outside of its membership. Had Mrs. Hornely or Mrs. Thompson been questioned as to the wherefore, they would probably refer the inquirer to a promise found in Matt. 18: 19. With few exceptions, Uncle Job, who was a general favorite notwithstanding his "up and down way," had received the answer, "I don't care. You may have it for all me;" and so the meeting was arranged for Friday evening.

During the day conspicuous posters met the eye in every available place which read as follows:

LECTURE

AT THE CHURCH TO-NIGHT!

Subject:

MASONRY A FOE TO THE CHURCH OF CHRIST!

Come everybody!

As Uncle Job was returning home, paste-bucket in hand, he remarked to Mr. Hornely with whom, he stopped a few minutes to chat, "There! I reckon I've done all I could. I only hope they won't tear 'em off till they're read. This meetin' is a goin' to be the beginnin' o' better days. I feel it in my bones. I'll jes' step in an' recommend Elder Lowly to keep a stiff upper lip when the howlin' begins, fur from the appearance o' things its a goin' to be loud. The saloonies promise us all sorts o' fun, but as I tell 'em 'a barkin' dog never bites.' Mark says to me this mornin', says he, 'You ain't a goin' up there to-night without bein' armed?' But I says to him, 'I'd ruther have the protection that the prayers o' them 'ere wimmin that's a goin' to pray in the vestry through the lecture 'll bring me than all the six-shooters in the State.' I tell you, brother Hornely, the Lord is a goin' to fight this 'ere battle—now you see!"

"You think there will be a good turn-out?"

"Course there will. What made the house full last night at prayer meetin' if they wa'n't expectin' suthin' be said about this 'ere. Dreadful sorry Elder Kemp won't lend a hand, but that can't be helped as I see. We've got to handspike this 'ere thing that's a blockadin' the track, Elder or no Elder, or the old engine 'll stand stock still as it's been a doin' these years,"— and Uncle Job sat down his bucket and went in quest of the lecturer to satisfy himself that that person's courage was adequate for coming emergencies.

Evening came. Long before the appointed time for the lecture to begin, every seat in the church was filled. Outside the door stood a group of men and boys popularly termed "rowdies," among whom was Mr. Vallance and Uncle Job's stalwart son, Mark. In answer to a question asked by one of the party, Mr. Vallance said, "Yes, it's all right. I got that fool Dan Thompson to get a lot on hand, and they're around somewhere."

Mark Dee raised his eyebrows a little, and presently remarked, "You don't want to go to raisin' Ned to-night, boys. Let 'em have it all their own way;" to which piece of advice no answer being vouchsafed he entered the house, and beckoning Daniel Thompson to his side whispered something in his ear. The answer was evidently satisfactory, for Mark Dee with difficulty restrained himself from laughing aloud.

Still the people came. Farm wagons stood at the door loaded with passengers representing districts five, seven, and even nine miles distant. Presently a little stir bespoke the arrival of the speaker, a calm, quiet man, in appearance very like Mr. Hornely, who accompanied him into the pulpit and introduced him to the assemblage as a "Watchman in Zion," and added a few simple words of prayer for help for the speaker in sounding a note of alarm concerning one of the foes of the church, and for the hearer in accepting the same. Many a head was bowed that would otherwise have been held erect simply because Mr. Hornely's religion was held to be genuine. The voice of the speaker continued the prayer. Like one who, from oft communing with Deity comes with assurance before the throne, did he pour out his soul before his Maker; and when he arose and began to speak, though the words were commonplace enough, an undefinable feeling took possession of the audience; a feeling partly of confidence in the speaker, partly of awe as though he were invested with supernatural power.

A stillness as of death pervaded the house as he portrayed the lodge in its anti-Christian character. A half hour passed by—an hour of attentive listening, and then at the utterance of some bold assertion, a muttered oath from Mr. Vallance's party which occupied a position near the door, followed by the distinctly audible remark, "It's about time this thing was wound up," caused some diversion.

The remark was followed by some hissing, which soon became general among that class of men all over the house, and quite a number of order-loving listeners arose to leave. At this juncture the attention of all was attracted towards an individual in the rear of the house who sprang upon a seat singing the words,—

"There are powers that move in darkness like the dragons of the pit,
They are wily as the serpent and have all the serpent's wit,
But will find their heads of venom and will surely crush them yet,
For the truth goes marching on."

Instead of the chorus the singer took up another verse,—

"Let the weaklings fly in terror, let the scheming turn aghast,
We will nail Jehovah's banner to the wildly rolling mast,
And we'll stand like men around it, till we hear His trumpet blast,— Let the truth go marching on."

Why should such sentiments at such a time, even sung by a voice of wonderful power and sweetness, have the effect of quieting the turbulent element in that assemblage? But such was its immediate effect, and when the singer sat down, a gentleman in another part of the room arose and, in a tone which showed power of command, uttered a few scathing words of rebuke so adroitly applied that when he appealed to "this intelligent audience" not to allow the speaker to be maltreated, but hear him to the end, those to whom the former words applied immediately classed themselves with those to whom the latter were spoken and nothing more of a disturbing character took place.

The lecture was finished and Judge B. again arose, remarking that many of them had come some distance to hear the speaker Would it be possible to hear the subject continued on the following evening? His engaging manner, aided by the dignity of his office, won aquiescence to his request from even Mr. Gillman, who had said to himself more than once that evening, "They won't get the house for to-morrow night. No sir!" And so the meeting closed. Uncle Job found his way to the side of Judge B., whose hand he grasped in an emphatic manner, remarking, "It's plain as day the Lord sent you here to-night, Jedge. Those wimmen have been in the vestry all evenin' prayin' the Lord would let this meetin' go on all right. An' where's that fellow that sang so grand? I never was so glad in my life."

Mr. Thompson unconsciously found himself one of the Anti-masonic party who gathered around the speaker ere they left the church, and he there acknowledged to his old friend, Judge B., that the "shock of enlightenment" he had that evening received would preclude his future fellowship with "the unfruitful works of darkness."

Carrie walked home that evening with her sister and Tom. To the latter's bantering question as to where Mr. Vallance was, she replied somewhat crossly that she neither knew nor cared.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Lockport, Mar. 21st, 1884.

Two days of almost incessant storm of snow and rain kept me very quiet at Bro. P. D. Miller's on the 19th and 20th insts. It is a good place for an Anti-mason to "get aground," and I put in the time writing out my thoughts and opinions of the secret brotherhoods. Last evening I preached for Bro. Marks at Newfane. This young and faithful pastor in the Free Methodist connection is one of those choice spirits that it always does one good to meet. Modest and retiring, almost to a fault, he evidently underestimates his own ability; but when the truth is to be spoken, however unpopular, he never hesitates. By his blameless life and faithful teachings he has won the hearts of the people, whom he is laboring to bring to Christ, or to "build up in the most holy faith."

I find some interest here in our cause, and the approaching county convention, but should the roads continue as they are we can hardly expect many to attend from the country. I have not been able to find the "agent and colporteur for New York," but learn that after waiting two days in the hope of seeing me, he started out with the remark that he "would do the work himself and not wait for somebody else to help him." I feel special interest in men of that kind of grit, and particularly so in the New York agent.

I expect to take the next train for Holly or Albion and preach and lecture in one or both of these places, before returning to the convention here on the 25th and 26th insts. J. P. Stoddard.

FROM WESTERN NEW YORK.

Ellington, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Mar. 21, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—Work in western New York is moving right along. Friends used to ask the question: "Can we ever banish Masonry?" Masons of to-day may well ask, Can we ever banish Anti-masonry?

I have had the pleasure of meeting with some Auti-masons of the old stamp since coming to this county. Father Abel Blowers of Fredonia has attained the ripe old age of 85 years. He has been opposed to secret societies for seventy years. His zeal for the truth has not abated as he has advanced, but rather he seems to "renew his strength as the eagle." He assisted me much while at Fredonia, in meetings, etc. He thinks if the American and Prohibition parties unite that ex-Senator Pomeroy will be our next President. God grant that they may, for his own name's sake.

Moses Ferrin, at whose home I am writing, is equal in zeal and age to Father Blowers. Father Ferrin has done much for the Cynosure. He is known to all in town and for many miles around as the Cynosure man. He is away now publishing a meeting which we expect to hold in the Methodist church this evening. Mother Mather, known to readers of the Cynosure as a witness of the abduction of Morgan, is still living, and tells her story with as much enthusiasm as ever.

Brethren Anderson, Clapp, Luce and others are contending nobly for the faith here; time and space will not permit me to speak further of their work. I go from here to Lockport, where I hope to meet with friends in a county convention. W. B. Stoddard.

IN AND ABOUT CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

Fayetteville, Pa., March 8, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—I left Washington on the 5th and came to Chambersburg. I found nearly all the churches engaged in revival work, with many hopeful conversions. Among them the King Street church has not been unmindful of its high calling, but has been continuing meetings for nearly two months with unceasing and deepening interest. Their able and excellent pastor, Rev. W. O. Tobey, has, in consequence of continued ill health, commencing with severe sickness last fall, felt constrained to resign his pastorate and the editorial management of the United Brethren in Christ, which he has ably conducted. The paper will continue to be issued by Bro. J. K. Graybill, and will, as heretofore, faithfully and earnestly protest against the abominations of the lodge and the wicked subserviency of the church to its control.

The meetings in the King Street church have been conducted by Bro. J. E. Wolfe, an evangelist who has been eminently successful both here and elsewhere. He has not failed to bear testimony against the lodge, of the inside of which he had personal knowledge before he found the Lord. He is expecting to make his home in Chambersburg, but will continue to labor as an evangelist Meanwhile the King Street church has called Rev. Keiter of Martinsburg, W. Va., to be their pastor, and it is expected that he will soon commence his labors.

It is generally believed that since our convention a year ago, and the expositions at Chambersburg and at this place, the Masonic influence has manifestly declined, but the Odd-fellows and Grand Army of the Republic have been very active. Recently the latter held a fair at this place, at which they disposed of many articles, including cabinet organs, by lottery, realizing about $400 net proceeds. With this and other funds they expect to erect a hall in this place and hope for controlling influence. Inasmuch as their lottery was in plain violation of the laws of the State, it remains to be seen how far honorable and law-abiding citizens will give them their support. Although the continuance of the religious meetings with absorbing interest is not favorable to political organization, yet such organization is favored and will be heartily engaged in. The people of this (Franklin) county gave last fall over 800 votes for a third party Prohibition candidate, and such men will uot be likely to go back on their record. H. H. Hinman.

FROM WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburg, Pa., Mar. 14, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—I lectured last night in the Chartiers U. P. church at Cannonsburg, twenty miles south-east of here in Washington county. There was a fair audience, more than half ladies, and excellent attention. It was the first anti-secrecy lecture ever given in this place. I was glad to find that the pastors of the two U. P. churches, Revs. Speer and Smiley, are in hearty sympathy with our reform, and that the pastor of the Presbyterian church did not hesitate to express his decided opposition to the whole system of secretism. The pastor of the M. E. church is reputed to be a Mason.

I had the pleasure of a brief reply from the leading physician of the place, who stands high in the order. The only thing he insisted on was that cripples could be made Masons, and gave an instance of a wealthy citizen whose limbs were not quite symmetrical, who is a member of the lodge. It was in vain that I quoted three authors on Masonic law in opposition to his position; he held that Pennsylvania Masons were "a law unto themselves."

Washington county is a very interesting region. With a soil of great natural fertility, abounding in coal and with many other natural advantages it was one of the first to be settled west of the mountains, and is still increasing in wealth and population. Last night the sky was lighted up by the burning gas well in the west part of the county. It is proposed to convey this natural gas in pipes to this city for the purposes of illumination and fuel, and the work is under way.

In this county was born Hon. Joseph Ritner, and from here he went to fill the office of Governor of the State.

Here still lives Dr. Alfred Creigh, author of "Masonry and Anti-masonry in Pennsylvania," and several other works. He stands high in the fraternity and is supported by their funds. Washington Lodge No. 164, which is in the main the subject of his history, was organized "A. L. 5892" (1792), and was one of the first west of the mountains. It was strong and very arrogant, as will be seen by the following resolution as reported in the above work, page 54. It seems that the Synod of Pittsburg had appointed a committee to inquire whether members of the Masonic fraternity ought to be received into the church. At this the lodge took offence and

> "Resolved, That as Masons we consider every man our enemy in private life, who wantonly attacks our ancient and honorable institution; and we pledge ourselves in the most solemn manner to withdraw our support and aid from any person who professes himself unfriendly, or uses any direct or indirect means to injure the fraternity or our sacred order."

Such a resolution needs no comment. It is intolerance intensified. And it is worthy of remark that just ten years later, in 1832, this lodge, together with nearly every other in the State, went down under the condemnation of public sentiment. It surrendered its charter and was in suspended animation till 1845; since which it has never become so strong and arrogant as before its fall, though the spirit remains the same.

I find here in Pittsburg much interest in prohibition. The Prohibition Banner of the 14th publishes a list of two hundred men and women chosen to provide for the entertainment of the convention of May 21st. It endorses the action of the Ohio Prohibition convention in nominating Gideon T. Stewart of Ohio as their candidate for the Presidency, and also endorses woman suffrage. I sincerely desire that this convention may nominate our prohibition candidate, S. C. Pomeroy, but if they will not, I know of no better man in their ranks than Mr. Stewart.

I was saddened to find that staunch reformer, Dr. A. M. Milligan, prostrated by debility, and Prof. Sloane but slowly recovering from his long illness. May the Lord in his mercy restore these stalwart veterans to physical strength. Yours in Christ, H. H. Hinman.

STARRY AGAIN ON THE PLATFORM.

Washington, Iowa, Mar. 17.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—To encourage others in their work against secret lodges, we send you notice of the work lately done among us. Mr. S. E. Starry has been with us the past week showing us how Masons are made. Five nights he lectured and worked the degrees in crowded school-houses in the vicinity, the sixth night finishing up in the city in Music Hall, which was filled with an attentive audience to see him work the sublime degree of a Master Mason. After working the degree, he requested the Masons present (being many), to deny the expose made if not true. No response. He insisted, saying it was due the audience and fraternity to deny if not fairly represented. But when they would not speak, he told them they were like Pat in the well, when the bucket fell on his head and Jimmy ou the outside asked if he was dead. Pat answered, "Not dead, but utterly spaachless."

However, next morning on his departure, Mr. Starry was attacked by the Masons, called a liar and a perjured villain. Mr. Starry in a gentle, quiet way told them he was not there to fight or be scared, but to talk and do them good.

What greater evidence do we need than such underhanded attacks that Mr. Starry's expose was true? We feel that Mr. Starry has done us good, arousing the Anti-masons as well as the Masons. We say to others, send for Starry—he will do you good. T. C. Maughlin.

FEBRUARY WORK IN WISCONSIN.

"I find that for the month of February I traveled 343 miles and visited 104 families and delivered 11 sermons or lectures.

I had a great time in Hortonville. The church is owned in partnership by Free Baptists and Congregationalists. The Free Baptists occupying it all the time. The minister is an Odd-fellow. They tried every way to keep me out of the church, but the Congregational trustee said I could have it for sure; and I did. In the afternoon of that day, Monday, the leading Odd fellow came and offered me their hall to lecture in, but I told them I could not accept it, as it had been given out to be in the church, aud I had no chance to change the notice. So we held the first lecture in the church. Then I got a letter that I must leave that place before Tuesday, 7 o'clock P. M., unless I wished to engage in the egg business; but I held my lecture Tuesday evening all the same. They succeeded in keeping a good many away, but I paid them off by going to every house and leaving tracts and papers; so I got them all reached better than if they had attended the lectures. It was quite stormy both nights.

Brother Griffin did everything he could to help me, and so did his wife and son, who lives in Vineland. I had a very precious time with them all and also the Baptist minister iu Vineland. The Baptist minister in Hortonville attended the lecture ou Monday evening, but he was not out Tuesday. Isaac Bancroft.

COLPORTEUR WORK IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

Sparta, Ill.

Having been requested by the Executive Committee aud several friends of the cause to report some incidents connected with my work, I will comply.

A Mason affirmed that Masonry cannot be revealed, but acknowledged Wm. Morgan was kidnapped for telling something. When asked if that "something" was true, he said, "There is something about Masonry ont siders need not expect to understand or find out."

Another Mason said, "Freemasonry is not a religion, but I think if a man keeps the precepts of Masonry as they are taught by Mackey, Morris, Sickels and such men, he will go to heaven." He was informed that there was no other way under heaven whereby we can be saved, save through the name of Christ Jesus, and that name was not acknowledged in Blue Lodge Masonry.

An Odd-fellow asked where I thought the first secret societies were held, and where we had the first account of secrecy if not in the Bible. I said the first account I could find was in Milton's Paradise Lost, where the evil spirits "In close recess and secret conclave sat." Another Odd-fellow, not knowing my business, and speaking of another individual with whom hs was having some difficulty, said, "I saved him from the penitentiary. He was selling whisky without license and I warned him of it. I was bound to for we were brother Odd-fellows."

A "but" Mason said, "I don't belong to the lodge, but you folks don't know what you are talking about. You don't know anything about Masoury." He was handed Mackey's manual and asked if by reading that book one might not learn a little of it. He concluded they might.

A jack Mason said, "I don't think there is anything wrong in Masonry, though I never belonged to a lodge. It is a benevolent and Christian institution." He was asked to examine Ronayne's Hand Book and see if there was any Christ there. He said it was wrong. He was next handed Finney on Masonry. He said it was downright falsehood. I then handed him Mackey's Manual, telling him if he could find Christ there, even in the prayers, I would forever hold my peace on that point of the contest. He said Mackey either wanted to blind the world or he did not know what he was talking about.

As may be seen I meet with every class of opposition, but I find the most provoking are those that say they believe it is wrong, etc., but say, Preach Christ; the love of God will drive these things out. Christ always cast out the evil spirits first and then healed those possessed. O that the ministers of God and all the church of God would waken up on this subject and have courage to say, There shall not enter therein anything that defileth or worketh abominations or maketh a lie.

JOHN K. HUNTER.

NOTE.—Bro. Hunter, during the time he was at work from Nov. 1st to March 1st, was engaged 89 days, visited 511 houses, lectured 6 times, and distributed some 5,000 pages of tracts. Rev. D. S. Faris of Sparta, writes of Bro. Hunter's work:

"We have now just got to understand how the work is to be done. I think that with the experience we have gained Mr. H. could likely carry on the work by himself. We are indeed grateful to the committee for the great work they have helped us to do here. This will keep up the influence of our State convention and not let it pass away in smoke."

LITERARY.

THE CROWN OF WILD OLIVES, three lectures on Work, Traffic and War; SESAME AND LILIES, two lectures: I. Of Kings' Treasuries, II. Of Queens' Gardens; ETHICS of the DUST, ten lectures to little Housewives on the Elements of Crystallization. By John Ruskin. Pages 102, 87 and 258. John B. Alden, New York.

Common readers in America are too little acquainted with the splendid and forcible style of John Ruskin, the most eloquent and original of all writers upon art. Some of his later works have been republished for us in cheap form, but so unattractive as to almost repel the reader from the glowing and wonderful thoughts within. Not so the three little works above with their chaste covers reflecting the spirit of the pages they enclose, and yet at such a price it is hardly worth mentioning—25c. each. We cannot forbear printing a few sentences from the lecture on Work: "Has not the man who has worked for the money a right to use it as he best can? No; in this respect money is now exactly what mountain promontories over public roads were in old times. The barons fought for them fairly: the strongest and cunningest got them; then fortified them; and made every one who passed below pay toll. Well, capital now is exactly what crags were then. Men fight fairly (we will, at least, grant so much, though it is more than we ought), for their money; but once having got it, the fortified millionaire can make everybody who passes below pay toll to his million, and build another tower of his money castle. And I tell you, the poor vagrants by the roadside suffer now quite as much from the bag-baron as ever they did from the crag-baron. Bags and crags have just the same result on rags." These lectures are replete with noble, just and pious sentiments, which should be well read in American homes.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY with Miscellanies for Candidates, by James W. Kimball, author of "Heaven," "How to see Jesus," "Encouragements to Faith," etc. Publisher, J. A. Whipple, 9 Hamilton Place, Boston, Mass. Price $1.00.

This is a book to be put into the hands of every student of theology, with the prayer for its honest words for a spiritual ministry, men with a passion for saving souls, full of the Holy Ghost and power. It is not a formal treatise on homiletics, but as the title indicates, a collection of miscellaneous articles bearing upon the work of the ministry and the qualifications, in a broad sense, necessary to the successful discharge of the duties of the sacred office. These chapters are of a practical character well calculated to quicken the spiritual life of the believer and qualify him for successful work for the Master. The author's style is free, easy and pleasing, but lacks somewhat in illustration, with which it would have been more forcible. It is a book we can very heartily commend, and though apparently written for the clergy, we think it cannot fail to be of great good to all classes of Christian readers. We need more such books.

The Century for April will be read with unwonted interest. E. V. Smalley continues his articles on Washington City, giving us something of the history and description of the White House and its inmates. One of the President's wives, he says, lived in seclusion, devoted herself to domestic duties, and made butter with her own hands from the milk of a favorite cow. Mr. Smalley is loth to do justice to the noble Lucy B. Hayes. Dr. William Hays Ward, editor of the Independent, takes up evidently a labor of love in writing of Sidney Lanier, the Southern poet, who died in 1881 in Baltimore. Two portraits of Lanier are printed in the Century. Dr. Ward refers thus beautifully to Lanier's poetical inspiration: "The intense sacredness with which Lanier invested Art held him thrall to the highest ethical ideas. To him the most beautiful thing of all was the Right. He loved the words 'the beauty of holiness,' and it pleased him to reverse the phrase and call it 'the holiness of beauty.' When I read Lanier I think of two writers, Milton and Ruskin. These two men, more than any other great English writers, are dominated by this." Few will omit to read George Alfred Townsend's story of Wilkes Booth the assassin. The best illustrated numbers are a second paper on "Notes on the Exile of Dante," "New York City Hall," "Among the Magdalen Islands," and "Progress in Fish Culture."

"From Log Cabin to White House," being Mr. Thayer's biography of President Garfield, continues to meet with an extraordinary sale in England. His authorized publishers, Hodder and Stoughton, have already issued 110,000 copies, and recently two other rival publishers have printed editions of 10,000 each. It has also been translated into German, French, Italian and Dutch, the aggregate publication in all the languages exceeding 200,000. Mr. Thayer's latest work, "Surveyor Boy and President," being the life of Washington published last autumn, fully sustains his high reputation as a brilliant and instructive writer for young people. Both of the works named and also his "Pioneer Boy," or life of Lincoln are now issued by Mr. John B. Alden, at the extremely low prices for which he has become famous.

The fact that Mr. John Morley once wrote a book in which he spelled God throughout with a small g is literally true, and it moreover cost him his nomination for Parliament at Nottingham in 1880. But it is due to Mr. Morley to give his explanation of the matter, as it appears in a letter to a friend of his, which is here for the first time made public. "As to the peculiarity," says Mr. Morley, "of the printing of the name to which you refer (god for God), it is quite true that in one of my books I did adopt it. I did so for reasons of a speculative kind which I need not now explain. But what happened? I soon found that I had thus hurt the religious sentiment of good men and women, and as this is the last thing that I have ever desired to go out of my way to do, I took the first opportunity of correcting my error of judgment. In the second edition of the book the peculiarity in question was removed."

CORRESPONDENCE.

"I AND I."

TROY, Ill.

While Rev. Thomas Harrison the celebrated revivalist, was holding meetings in St. Louis, he came out one Saturday and preached in a town near us, and the church authorities charged 25 cents admittance from each of those who heard him. A high Mason in our town condemns the charging for admittance in unmeasured terms. Among other things he said: "If I never hear the Gospel till I pay at the door to hear it, I'll never hear it."

Query: Didn't that man pay something at the door to get to hear about Hiram Abiff? Doesn't he continue to pay monthly or quarterly to hear the silly mummeries of Masonry over and over? Would not the non-payment of said dues shut him out of the lodge? If so, that man values Masonry above the Gospel. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Mark you: he said The Gospel. No spurious stuff he was talking about, and would not pay to hear: it was the Gospel.

Wonder if that brother, when he is telling young men of the glories of lodgery, ever tells them that one of the good things of Masonry is, it fleeces young men well at the door of entrance? R. W. LAUGHLIN.

THE LIGHT TURNED ON.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

It is sometimes curious to see how men will unwittingly denounce as evil, and as tending only to harm, the secret combinations of men, when if you were to ask them directly, Are these things wrong? they would either answer no, or keep silent.

A good illustration of this has been been seen here in Washington, by those who have read the papers carefully for a week past. The National Republican, March 12th, of this city, gave an account of an unsuccessful attempt made by one of its reporters to ascertain the number of criminals and the crimes committed in the District for the last three months.

After some trouble, going from place to place, the reporter at last found that the book containing the desired information, the "Blotter," as it is called, although printed at the public expense and containing matter in which the public ought to be and are interested, "Is not a public record." This announcement from Major Dye, Chief of Police, very naturally created some curiosity as to the contents of the "Blotter." Knowing very well that the book is a public record, and that it ought to be open to public inspection, the reporter inquired as to why he could not see the book, and received the reply that, "There are some things in it we don't want published. The publication of some things there would defeat justice." This book is supposed to contain only facts about crimes and the criminals, and it is hard for the ordinary mind to see how justice would be defeated by these facts being made public.

The Republican has been trying to bring to light some of the secret doings of the authorities here. Among other things of importance is the following, to be found in the Republican of March 14th, and given to a reporter of that paper by a prominent lawyer of this city:

"About two months ago a man named Eustice O'Brien was convicted in the police court of managing a policy shop. He was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $500, the severest sentence ever imposed, and the full extent of the law. The case was appealed to the criminal court, and his bond fixed at $1,000. The highest penalty was imposed because it was said that O'Brien was the person who had been mainly instrumental in reviving policy playing in the district after it had been 'effectually suppressed.'"

After giving one instance of this man O'Brien's defeating justice, he says, "On another occasion he informed his confederates that they must hurry up with their work in overlooking policy books in a certain house as within a half hour the police would raid the place, and that they should be out within ten minutes, so as to give fifteen or or twenty minutes interval between their departure and the police raid. His confederates left under his directions, and at the time designated the police raided the premises but found no one there."

To those who are acquainted with the workings of secret societies the above quotation needs no explanation. The following is clipped from the Republican of the 18th: "The days of star chamber, dark lantern government in this city are numbered. The system under which such gross abuses of power is possible is repugnant to republican institutions, and must give way before the torrent of popular disapproval which has only just fairly set in. The light will be turned upon every department of the district government."

We are certainly glad to see the above statement, and sincerely hope that the work thus begun may be carried on to victory; but does the Republican realize that they are thus waging war against an institution powerful enough to murder a Lincoln, assassinate a Garfield and cover up star route frauds, and yet go unpunished? Such we believe to be the fact. The police of the district in these things reported against them, and for which they are condemned, are but putting into practice the principles of Masonry. Oh, that the curtain might be lifted and men could see the crimes that are committed by the sanction of that institution! But I close with a clipping from the editorial page of the Republican of March 19:

"When the police department or the health department unlawfully closed their records to the public it was unquestionably an invasion of the reasonable rights of the citizens of this community. But it must be confessed that they had incitement thereto in the bad example of the supreme governing power of the district. When the commissioners shrond their proceedings in impenetrable secrecy it is not much to be wondered at that subordinate officials conclude to copy their methods. There never has been any good reason justifying the un-American and unrepublican system that has grown up step by step here in the administration of district affairs. Owing no responsibility to the people they govern, and whose money they annually gather and spend, the commissioners have magnified their powers until ther seems to be no reason for the exercise of their functions except such as proceed from their own wills. There is no sympathy of purpose between the governors and the governed."

O. C. BAILEY.

THE PRAYING BAND.

Ever since I ignored the teachings of Free and Accepted Masonry, by seceding from its unhallowed fellowship in 1827, I have felt somewhat the necessity of "effectual, fervent prayer" to be offered unto God in the name of the Saviour, for its successful overthrow, and for wisdom from on high to be given to meet its treacherous and slimy reasonings. Notwithstanding I am glad and thankful to you for your kindness in forwarding to me the resolution adopted at the Convention of Illinois at Sparta, and the arguments presented in favor of its being carried out practically by each member of the Association, because it acted upon my mind as a new stimulus to faithfulness in prayer and fervency in Christian zeal for the accomplishment of the so much coveted overthrow of secretism.

Some few years ago, of the many invited to meet to pray for the success of the reform for the overthrow of secret societies in El Paso and elsewhere, there were five that responded to the invitation. But some two years since two were removed by death, and another has moved away, and the two remaining still call upon God daily as bowed around the family altar, for him to remember the tried and sometimes the abused and misrepresented ones, called of God to take a more active part in labors to convince the unconvinced in various portions of our country and to rally the hosts of God's elect, leading them on by precept and example to "endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ." Yes, my brother, those are remembered in particular, and all other workers in general who comply with the injunction, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand."

WM. A. BARTLETT, El Paso, Ill.

Your kind note calling my attention to the importance of earnest prayer, in concert with others who are laboring and praying for a complete and permanent reform in the churches of Christ on the question of all secretism, intemperance, and I will add, every habit that is demoralizing, I have thoughtfully read, and assure you that I am heartily in sympathy with you in your good work, and my daily yrayer is, that not only the above mentioned evils may be speedily put down, but everything in opposition to the final triumph Christ's kingdom on earth. I am in my eighty-second year and my work is nearly done, but I can, and love to pray, knowing by happy experience that God hears the prayer of faith, therefore, dear brother, toil on, trusting in God who says, "They shall not be ashamed that wait for me"

E. W. Towne, Cobden, Ill.

BOSTON PROHIBITIONISTS.

Arlington Heights, Mass., Feb. 22, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—I have just returned from the meeting of the Citizens Law and Order League of Boston and sundry reflections are suggested, it seems to me by the Spirit of truth and wisdom. Here were quite a number of Boston's received and recognized leaders. Some of them felt and expressed the humiliation of the situation, and would rejoice if some one came to do for them in the matter what they could not do as individuals. I received a circular, sent as a personal invitation to attend this convention.

When the day came, at some inconvenience, I proceeded to Tremont Temple, and had handed to me a programme inclosing two circulars asking money. About half an hour after the time a number of gentlemen came to the platform and the meeting began. The presiding officer said, "Since the President and Vice President are not present, you will have to put up with me." And would to God, judging by my impression, that the people had such men and only such men untrammeled and fairly enlightened to put up with. He and many of those present are the very cream of the best of old Boston, whatever we may fear of the direction in which they are led and going.

The chairman called for prayer. The call was read by the secretary, and he gave some remarks on the work of central league, emphasizing the want of money. Then a Mr. Johnson was called upon, and he said he had spoken the night before in a large hall, and if any who could not hear him would raise the hand he "would govern himself accordingly" His main feature was the reading of the Massachusetts law and the statement that no liquor seller keeps it. There were also reports of the branch leagues.

One great and emphatic point made was the defiance of law; yet all on the low ground of human authority. A higher law man could not relish; but let that go, and also the great difficulty of fixing authority in mere human basis. Dr. Ellis, successor of Dr. Lorimer the Freemason, Dr. Brooks and others expressed their sense of it. They do not know that their mouths are dumb and sealed and they dare not be a Daniel in the matter of the constant, great, dreadful and persistent defiance of all law, human and divine, implied and expressed, by the existence and toleration of the great Masonic temple only a few blocks south of where they were then speaking, and a little farther is another great building put up by the I. O. O. F. But these ministers and nearly all the rest, so far as I know, are but dumb dogs on this dreadful and giant evil. Nay, more, have often been so accommodating as to say, "I have no word of rebuke for secret societies and don't care about it one way or another." Ah, friends, if you sow the wind you will reap the whirlwind, and God only knows if the terrible calamities through which we are and have been passing are but the preliminaries of the same in many directions. A saying of my boyhood was, "If you require a man to lie for you he will also lie for himself." If you allow the tyler with drawn sword to keep the public out with an epithet intended to degrade, where is your right to prevent the liquor seller's screens?

There was much deploring the inefficiency, faithlessness and collusion of the police; and one gentleman in the body of the hall addressed Dr. Ellis and said, "You cannot enforce the law against liquor selling in Boston while a certain officer (I did not hear his name), is in power, for he had tried it;" and the audience said, "Turn him out!" Aye! turn him out of office. Yes, yes! but does he belong to the lodge?

I was present at the memorable meeting of the N. C. A. in Boston, and I know how distinct and emphatic, nay, imperative requisition was made and enforced to hire policemen in large numbers for the hall, and then we found these men and officers were in distinct collusion with the well-dressed but ill-mannered "lewd fellows of the baser sort," who persisted in disturbing the meeting, and preventing free speech and the liberty of the citizen.

I have had other experience of the guardians of the public safety, especially when the lodge is concerned. I had the wickedness to engage and pay for a hall, and distribute bills and notices that an agent of the N. C. A. might lecture and I was made the mark for an egg. Another egg that I found with some cayenne pepper in my overturned carriage (from which, after abusing, they had taken my innocent horse), was worse. A man, or thing like a man, was at my carriage when I innocently went to the shed, but ran and ran. Would that he were running yet, were he but the symbol of all secret lodges! Then I after found that the policeman of the town was a Mason of thirty years standing, and though he was the tool of the lodge, I took him to be of the better kind of Masons. He was unable or unwilling to protect the lecturer and myself from the following of the mob, but seemed to be there to let them annoy but not shed blood. About the police other things could be told. I have seen them take potions from the dram-sellers, and what can you hope from them?

With most earnest desires and prayers for the coming of the kingdom which is righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, I remain in him who said nothing in secret.

Geo. Juchan.

MR. MOFFAT'S LINE OF ARGUMENT.

In the remarks made by Mr. Moffat in the Cynosure of March 13th, the line of argument is very evident, viz.: that a "million of American citizens," or all the people of the whole world, may set up their opinions against the moral law, and encourage breaches of trust, and cold-blooded attempts at murder. Wiser than John the Baptist, the greatest man of woman born, who taught soldiers to be content with their wages, Mr. Moffat teaches them to take the life (and why not the property?) of those whose lives are entrusted to their keeping, in certain cases, if they think proper, and are likely to be sustained by a million or so of people, more or less.

Mr. Moffat seems to think that it is ridiculous to compare one violation of the decalogue with another; yet he who breaks one link severs the whole chain. The violations of the moral law are not matters of choice; they are all criminal.

Mr. Moffat's error is coming to be a common one, or we should not trouble him or the reader with these comments. It is this: that the voice of the people is better than the voice of God. One million of people out of fifty millions may sanction crime! The people, according to his views, may vote to set aside the moral law; may put the ten commandments to vote, or abolish them, or amend them. They may add to them, if they choose, an eleventh commandment prohibiting, like Mahomet the prophet, the manufacture or use of liquor. They may, like the infallible Pope, reform the sacrament by leaving out the wine, or by substituting colored water, or Malaga grapes, the "fruit of the vine," in its place. For the people are omnipotent, according to Mr. Moffat's line of argument, and can vote to do anything they please. They may set aside their own laws as well as the moral law, and make lynch law the supreme controlling power of the country.

This is very unsafe advice, it seems to me, for a people who wish to preserve their liberties. It is much safer for us to sustain our laws and our courts of justice, however weak they may be, than to look to the absurd and wicked impulses of an ignorant military man for asserting our rights.

Honest indignation, openly expressed, like that of friend Moffat, I like to see; but I wish to see it always on the right track. There is no shorter or speedier track to imperial power than to set aside our laws, our courts, and the moral law in favor of soldiers, as Mr. Moffat would do. We have had only too much glorification of soldiers at the expense of law and good sense already. Many, very many of our citizens, at least a million of them, seem more disposed to glorify their dubious achievements in war, than to repent in humility for the crime of slavery, and to maintain the laws, the order, and the institutions of liberty and peace.

Hence we speak for law and order instead of for Sergeant Mason.

It will be seen from this article, that though I am an Anti-mason, yet I am not a prohibitionist, believing that the prohibition movement is running counter to divine revelation. Nor have I any faith in the efficacy of a reform movement that turns away from the frowning battlements of the lodge, a great public evil, and directs its force against personal bad habits. The prohibition movement will be favored by the lodge as a means of diverting attack from itself; an object which it is more likely to effect than to accomplish any desirable reform. The anti-lodge movement has been diverted once from its object to give way to another. That mistake should not be made again.

Mr. Moffat offers as an excuse for murder the fact that our courts fail to secure to us law and justice. But who has done more towards destroying the credit of our courts of justice than the party in power, with which he seems to have acted, which has disparaged all law and justice by appeals to the Masonic lodge, and under whose administration the action of the courts in the cases of General Porter and Sergeant Mason has been annulled and set at naught? It is by Masonic politicians, elected by "the people," that our courts of law are being disparaged and weakened, and brought into contempt. They relax the wholesome vigor of the law for the sake of gaining the affections of "the people." Under their Masonic rule assassins are being brought into vogue as the instruments for executing law and justice; and our friend Moffat pleads for this state of things! The courts turned aside from prosecuting Jefferson Davis, and how many of those "people" who sustain Sergeant Mason are there who did not wish that some assassin might have "put off Davis from the face of the earth."

Mr. Moffat is from Iowa, and we have no doubt that he goes with "the people" who would abolish hard-drinking by a Constitutional enactment. And such is very often the case with temperance people; they make drinking a crime, while murder, or any other violation of the Commandments, they look upon as a mere pardonable offence, or even with favor! They are like the Romanist of Mexico, who would not eat meat on Friday for the whole world; but would have no compunction at all for killing a heretic on that day In the Mexican republic meat is prohibited on Fridays, while in our own Republic wine is prohibited every day; and thus the kingdom of heaven in these western world republics, the patterns of the Universe, is made to depend upon meats and drinks!

It is my opinion that such people, no matter whether one million or more, can never reform any country. What we need for effecting a reform is a people who will resolve to limit the aggressions of the Masonic lodge, and restore our churches, our legislatures, our schools, and our courts of law to something of their original purity and vigor. But the people who are to do this will not be admirers of Sergeant Mason, nor will they be spending their time over personal vices while the life of the Republic stands in imminent peril.

Bible Lessons.

LESSON I.—April 6, 1884.—Paul's Third Missionary Journey —Acts 18: 23-28; 19: 1-7.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them.—Acts 19: 6.

"He departed." On his third great missionary journey, about 54 A. D. He probably went first to Tarsus, then in a northwest direction through Galatia; and then, turning southwest, journeyed through Phrygia and so to Ephesus, where for a long period he had his abode.—Revision Com. From this time Silas left Paul and went with Peter. —Lewin. But Timothy was still Paul's companion.—Peloubet.

"Knowing only the baptism of John." That is, knowing no other baptism. He knew, probably, that the Christians were baptized, but knew nothing of any difference between their baptism and that which John employed.—Abbott. He had probably never heard, or even if he had heard, only dimly comprehended the signification of the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost. Indeed, these disciples of John the Baptist (19: 2, 3) may even have been in total ignorance respecting the person and office of the Holy Spirit, although John himself had taught that Christ would baptize with the Spirit (Matt. 3: 11). This notice is interesting, as showing that John's influence was not confined to the Jordan, or to his own lifetime.—Revision Com.

"For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly." His special training in Alexandria, coupled with his great knowledge of the Old Testament Scriptures, eminently fitted the eloquent convert for the peculiar controversy which the Jewish frequenters of the synagogue delighted in. It was perhaps the knowledge of that bitter, hostile spirit to Jesus of Nazareth on the part of his countrymen at Corinth, which led Apollos, conscious of his powers in such controversies, to desire this Corinthian mission. He preached and taught with such marked success, that his name was used at Corinth as the watchword of a party (1 Cor. 1: 12).—Revision Com.

"And finding certain disciples." That there was at this time no Christian church in Ephesus, is indicated by the fact that Paul preached in the synagogue (ver. 8). I believe, then, that as a result of the preaching of Paul and Apollos, a few Jews had accepted the truth that Jesus is the Messiah, and had been baptized as a symbol of repentance, perhaps by Apollos, certainly with a baptism like that of John; that insomuch as they accepted Jesus as the Messiah, they are recognized as disciples, i. e., pupils, though ignorant of some of the fundamental principles of Christian theology; that they received no further instruction from Apollos, who proceeded immediately to Greece, nor from Aquila and Priscilla, who were not rabbis, and had no opportunity to teach what they knew publicly in the synagogue, and who, for aught that appears in the narrative, had never met these disciples.—Abbott.

"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" The more accurate rendering is far more emphatic and clear, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" Did its mighty influence in any way affect you at the time of your baptism? We are left to conjecture what prompted the question. The most natural explanation is, that St. Paul noticed in them, as they attended the meetings of the church, a want of spiritual gifts, perhaps also a want of the peace and joy and brightness that showed itself in others; they presented the features of a rigorous asceticism like that of the Therapeutæ, the outward signs of repentance and mortification, but something was manifestly lacking for their spiritual completeness.—Plumptre.

"We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Again here the more accurate translation of the original Greek guides us to the true interpretation of the answer of these followers of the Baptist, "On the contrary, we did not (at the time of our baptism) so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost was given." Dean Alford renders, "We did not so much as hear him mentioned." The words as rendered in the English version are certainly likely to mislead. No Jew—and the majority, though perhaps not all, of John's disciples would have been Jews —but had heard of the Holy Spirit (see, for instance, such well-known passages as 2 Sam. 23: 2, 3, where the "Spirit of the Lord" and the "God of Israel" are interchangeable terms; compare, too, Isa. 63: 10, 11, 14, and 61: 1, and a vast number of similar passages). No Israelite could possibly have been unfamiliar with the name of the Holy Spirit. "They could not have followed either Moses or John the Baptist," says Bengel, "without hearing of the Holy Ghost." But they were doubtless ignorant that the Holy Ghost was already given, that his mighty influence was no longer confined, as under the old dispensation, to a few favored individuals. They were ignorant of the first Christian Pentecost and its marvels. They knew nothing of his miraculous influences. It is not probable that they shared at all in the life of the Christian brotherhood.—Schaff.

"They spake with tongues, and prophesied." I believe the event related in our text to have been a sudden and powerful inspiration of the Holy Spirit, by which the disciples uttered, not of their minds, but as mouthpieces of the Spirit, the praises of God in various languages, hitherto, and possibly at the time itself, unknown to them. How is this related to the speaking with tongues afterwards spoken of by St. Paul (1 Cor. 14)? I answer that they were one and the same thing.—Alford.

ILLUSTRATIVE.

"A modern Apollos." Analogous to this story of Apollos are some incidents in the experience of modern missionaries in foreign lands. Dr. Chamberlain, of the Reformed (Dutch) Mission, has narrated such an one to me. A Hindoo purchased a Bible from a native who had bought it from a mission station; the purchaser was converted, with his wife, by reading the Bible; they gathered the villagers together and read it aloud to them, organized a quasi Christian church, without, however, baptism or the Lord's supper, the necessity and nature of which they did not understand. He became known far and near as "the man with the book." His church, some seven or eight years thereafter, was found by some missionaries during a missionary journey through the country, and after being more perfectly instructed in the Christian doctrine, was received by them into the visible communion of saints."—Lyman Abbott.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

CHRISTIANITY AND SECRECY VITALLY OPPOSED TO EACH OTHER.

1. Knowledge of the Scriptures is power. V. 24. Apollos was not only "eloquent" but "mighty in the Scriptures." The study of the Bible expands and develops the noblest faculties of the human mind. This has been proved over and over. In the dark ages, before the invention of printing, the Bible was a rare book, locked up in a dead language that few persons could read; but the translation of it into the language of the people by Luther, Wycliffe and others, gave a vast impetus to learning and literature. It contains the oldest and grandest writings in the world. It teaches great truths that the wisest heathens only dimly dreamed of. Patrick Henry was a student of the Bible and attributed much of his wonderful success as an orator to close study of its sublime and eloquent passages. To cast it out of our public schools is to cast out the corner-stone of our liberties, the fountain of our laws, and check our greatest spring of mental power.

2. Christianity never teaches its truths secretly, but always publicly. V. 28. If any society or organization of men ever had what would seem a reasonable excuse for teaching their doctrines in secret they were the early Christians. But though beset on every side by deadly enemies, their meetings never safe from spies and informers; knowing that when taken before the magistrates, dungeons, stripes and death in the most horrible form conceivable awaited them, they always followed the example of their divine Founder and "spake openly to the world." The defenders of Masonry often assert that secrecy is essential to its existence. This is true. The reason is because Masonry is throughout a system of falsehood, and if it should do as Christianity does, and invite free and open investigation, it would very soon be swept from the earth. The common sense of mankind would universally reject it.

3. The Holy Spirit can only come where Christ is known and loved. Vs. 1–6. These disciples received the Holy Ghost the moment they believed and were baptized in the name of Jesus. We cannot expect that God will send his Holy Spirit where the name of his Son is despised or ignored; and on this principle we know that he will not visit a liquor saloon reeking with vileness and profanity, any more than we would visit a place where the name of our dearest friend was being constantly scorned and contemned. Nor can he visit a secret lodge where Christ's name is left out to please Jews, deists and Mohammedans. Christians who attend the lodge, and churches that have fellowship with it, must forego his presence, and without it they can never convert the world, or do any great thing for God.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Were the early disciples close students of the Bible? Acts 7; 17: 2; 8: 35. Were they probably taught in their youth to love it? Deut. 6: 6, 7. What made the early Christians dare to proclaim the truth so openly? Ps. 91. What spirit rules the lodge according to 1 John 4: 2, 3; Eph. 2: 2. Then why can we not expect that Christians who attend it will receive the Holy Spirit? 2 Cor. 6: 14–16.

SPECIAL.—To those who may have had their paper stopped much to their surprise, we wish to say that at this season of the year when there are many subscriptions received for renewal, and there are a number of changes to make on our mail list, there is danger of clerical errors, and if any of our subscribers should not receive the Cynosure as they expect, we would be grateful if they would send us a postal card notifying us that they wish their subscription continued, and we will be pleased to make the correction at once.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST.

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

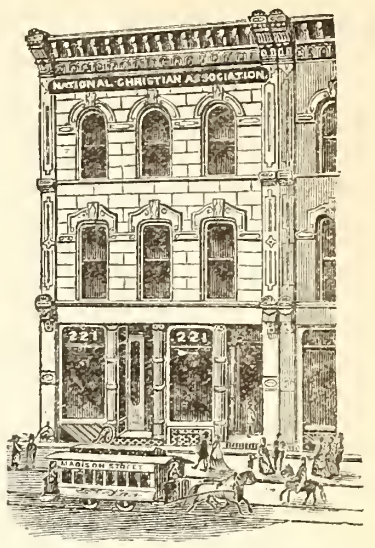
Baptist churches: N. Abington, Pa.; Menomonie, Mondovi, Waubeck and Spring Prairie, Wis.; Wheaton, Ill.; Perry, N. Y.; Spring Creek, near Burlington, Iowa; Lima, Ind.; Constableville, N. Y. The "Good Will Association" of Mobile, Ala., comprising some twenty-five colored Baptist churches; Bridgewater Baptist Association, Pa.; Old Tebo Baptist, near Leesville, Henry Co., Mo.; Hoopeston, Ill; Esmen, Ill.

Congregational churches: 1st of Oberlin, O.; Tonica, Crystal Lake, Union and Big Woods, Ill.; Solsbury, Ind.; Congregational Methodist Maplewood, Mass.

Independent churches in Lowell, Countryman school house near Lindenwood, Marengo and Streator, Ill.; Berea and Camp Nelson, Ky; Ustick, Ill.; Clarksburg, Kansas; State Association of Ministers and Churches of Christ in Kentucky.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS



Who depend on voluntary contributions of Christian people in whole or in part for their support:

J. F. BROWNE, Berea, Ky.
ELI TAPLEY, Columbus, Miss.
J. F. GALLOWAY, Okahumka, Florida.
WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1884.

The American Reformer has a very handsome notice of the Washington Conventions—the American-Prohibition and the Woman Suffrage.

The New Congregational Creed.—We shall try and consider this next week. But it seems to the Cynosure that what is wanted is a new practice rather than a new creed. Dr. W. W. Patton, one of the new creed-makers and a professed Anti-mason, helped organize some Masons into a Congregational church, who had violated the laws of their own United Brethren church, by clandestinely joining the lodge, which not only denies the divinity of Christ but excludes him!

The Birney Number.—Send in orders for extras. One has ordered 100 copies already. It restores the most interesting portion of United States history from the cloud which now rests upon it.

"The path of the Lord" means the way God would do if he should undertake to do a man's duty. "His ways are everlasting" because they are true, and truth is eternal. It will be eternally true that the whole is greater than a part. "Show me thy ways, O Lord: Teach me thy paths."

Do not forget to pray for the Pittsburg Prohibition Convention, May 21st.

LODGE CHARTERS.

Am. Platform, Art. 4. "The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures, should be withdrawn and their oaths prohibited by law."

Masons deny that there are such charters. Some ridiculed the above article to Senator Pomeroy as baseless. Mr. Ronayne said lodges had no such charters.

These are the facts:

The Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. was chartered by the 36th Congress, 1st Session. Charter approved June 12th, 1860. Section 5th of the charter reads, "This Act shall continue in force till Congress otherwise determines.'

"The Masonic Hall Association," District of Columbia, was chartered by Congress; the act passing the Senate April 15th, 1864. House, April 22d. Approved April 27th, 1864. The corporators were from the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States; the Grand Consistory, thirty-two degrees; the Osiris Lodge of Perfection, No. 1.; the Washington Commandery, No. 1.; Columbia Commandery; Columbia R. A. Chapter, No. 15.; Washington R. A. Chapter, No. 16; Mt. Vernon R. A. Chapter, No. 20; Grand Lodge District Columbia; Federal Lodge, No. 11; Lebanon Lodge, No. 7; New Jerusalem Lodge, No. 9; Hiram Lodge, No. 10; St. John's Lodge, No. 11; National Lodge, No. 12, Washington Central Lodge, No. 14; B. B. French Lodge, No. 15; Damsen Lodge, No. 16; Harmony Lodge, No. 17; Acacia Lodge, No. 18; Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, of the order of Free and Accepted Masons.

Object: "To promote the principles of the Corporation." (!!)

Capital stock, $300,000.

As originally presented, the charter provides "that the officers and members of the several Masonic bodies named in the first section of this act are created and made, separately and individually, bodies politic and corporate" thus creating several thousand individual bodies with corporate powers.

Morrill of Maine, moved to strike out the letters "K. T.," etc., lest they should create orders of nobility forbidden by the Constitution. Howard of Michigan asked, "Is there a precedent for incorporating Masons lodges? Grimes of Iowa thought not.

Collamer of Vermont moved to strike out all the initial letters, "K. T.," "R. A.," etc.

Conness suggested that they had better pass a general law, and let Masons incorporate under that.

By this time the Senate was in a state of glee. Collamer "In all seriousness" renewed his motion. Grimes said, "It is time to be serious about this bill. I am no Mason and did not draw up this bill. It was drawn up by members of the order."

Trumbull said they did not incorporate titles, but men, and seconded Collamer's motion to strike the titles out

Anthony defended the titles. "They mean nothing disloyal." But Collamer's amendment was agreed to, Mar. 16, 1864.

Reverdy Johnson saw no harm in the bill. Howard moved to recommit it, and said, "I see no necessity of incorporating such a great number of lodges at one sweep."

Foster of Connecticut said, "The bill incorporates all the lodges in this district and all which may hereafter apply (!) without limit as to number or time!" So the bill was recommitted. It was afterward reported back, and passed, being modified so as to create one central corporation which can charter local lodges, which local lodges can elect corporators of that central corporation!

Foster of Connecticut moved to add "This act may be altered, AMENDED, or REPEALED, at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States," which was carried.

REMARKS.

1. This abominable legislation was secured 1860–64, just when the Congress, weakened by secession, needed every vote and dared not displease a Masonic Senator. So wolves attack and devour the horses of the desert when they are weak.

2. Masons drew up and presented the infamous bill so as to incorporate a multitude of lodges at once.

3. But, thanks to Senator Foster, the act may be repealed as our 4th article demands.

SHALL WOMEN VOTE?

The former editor and publisher of Oath Rimmon, Mr. C. O. Wilson, sends us a full and earnest argument against the woman's ballot. He is one of "the sincerest men," who, Burke says, "is apt to be the harshest."

We give the substance of his article: He holds, that "a man is not a woman, nor a woman a man;" that "they cannot change places nor shift responsibilities, one upon another." "By an irrevocable decree of nature as well as Holy Writ, their respective duties and functions, though equally important, are distinct." "Man should represent himself and wife at the polls, because they are, by God's law of marriage, 'one flesh;' and 'the head of the woman is the man,'" 1 Cor. 11: 3. "A family with two heads, is a monster contrary to nature and revelation." The claim that woman should vote as "a matter of absolute equity between man and his wife," separates their interests, separates what God has joined. "If it would improve politics it would destroy the peace of families." But it would not. The wife of the Mason and rumseller would vote with their husbands.

He quotes Dent. 22: 5; "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth to a man; neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God." Also 1 Tim. 2:12: "I suffer not a woman to teach, or usurp authority over the man; but to be in silence." "The ballot means office, civil or military;" "means subject to draft," "and woman her own protector." "Woman, as she is, shapes the destinies of kingdoms, for she moulds the king." "The woman who cannot trust her husband to vote for her does not deserve to be trusted." "The governing prerogative is vested in the male sex." "England's Queen is a mere figurehead ruled by Parliament." "Let woman reform public sentiment and laws and courts will repress crime, liquor included." "Females get but about half price for the same quantity and quality of work as males." Let woman urge "their husbands to remedy this." "Men and laws cannot grapple with the social evil; if it is ever abated, woman herself must do it." "Sabbath reform also affords a field for woman's endeavors."

The above is a condensed abstract of Mr. Wilson's able article with some harsh phrases omitted. It fairly represents that side of the argument.

THE WOMAN'S WASHINGTON CONVENTION.

This convention, (Mar. 4-6), the first of the kind ever attended by the Cynosure editor, was a very extraordinary gathering. It held a large hall, crowded with intelligent people for successive days and nights, in rapt attention, amid perfect order, decency and propriety. No shallow, unreasonable, or garrulous people of any country, sex or sect, could do this. They produced conviction by their facts and arguments; challenged respect by their dignity; and secured admiration by their womanly dress, demeanor, and their varied, earnest eloquence.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, of bloomer notoriety, was not there, nor was poor little Dr. Mary Walker, nor Isabella Beecher Hooker, who was for a time reputed to hold the damnable doctrine of free love. I saw no woman there in men's pants, or with mannish manners. Mrs. Caroline H. Miller of Maryland, is thus drawn by the Washington Republican: "A tall, elderly lady with black hair brushed smoothly back and coiled with some black ribbons in a good old-fashioned way." "Her pleasant tone of voice and style of dress gave her altogether a motherly effect; and the audience listened to her with the most flattering attention."

On that platform were Mrs. Blake of New York, Mrs. Duniway of Oregon, Mrs. Brown of Ohio, and Mrs. Tyler of Arkansas. Mrs. Howell of Albany, N. Y., followed Mother Miller with a clear, touching and very able address; while Helen M. Gougar of Indiana, in the judgment of the Republican, excelled them all in a speech, delivered without written notes, or any help but her invention and utterance. Phebe Cozzens of St. Louis, who was said once to have affected gentleman's attire, gave no such symptoms now. She is a good-looking woman; and her written speech was of rare beauty. Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood, a matron and successful lawyer of Washington, made the only unhappy speech. It was on the Mormons. And she seemed to the audience to wink at if not justify polygamy by the concubinage which she openly alleged was, against law, practiced by public men in Washington. The president, Susan B. Anthony, facile princeps, was the central pillar of the convention. The writer had met this lady at the Riggs House. She has long been before the public as a chief representative of the woman question. She was elegantly, not garishly, dressed, as was every woman on the stage. Even Mother Miller wore a gold chain attached to her eye-glasses. Miss Anthony's countenance shows both years and care, and terrible earnestness coupled with signal ability; and no one can converse with her, though but a few minutes, without believing her a sincere, virtuous, and superior woman.

THE WOMEN'S COMPLAINTS.

They complain:

1. That deprivation of the ballot classes them with idiots, lunatics, unnaturalized foreigners, infants or persons of non-age, and disfranchised States-prison convicts and traitors.

2. That they are called, in the laws and Constitution, "persons," "citizens," "inhabitants," and are yet denied the rights and immunities accorded to men wearing the same names and titles: and they ask to be told "What are we?"

3. That they have no voice or vote in the laws by which they are governed; nor in their execution; and holding millions of property, are taxed without representation where they have none or unworthy husbands.

4. They complain that traitors who sought the destruction of the government are treated better, far better, than women who gave their sons, and prayers, and toil, and sufferings to save the government.

5. That they are punished for crimes, like men; but unlike men, when taken into the courts, never see one of their own sex on the bench, in the jury box, or at the bar.

6. That this deprivation destroys all notions in women to study politics; thus condemning them to frivolity, as the slaves were by the same exclusion which they suffer.

7. That the Bible, and especially the Apostle Paul, is misinterpreted against them, as it was against the slaves. For Peter says that "Your sons and daughters" should be prophets. And Paul, defining the prophet's calling, said they "spoke to men to edification, exhortation and comfort." 1. Cor. 14: 3. Yet his words to Timothy are held to contradict this plain utterance, as his epistle to Philemon was tortured to justify slavery.

8. They complain that they have waited now seventy years for their brothers to stop licensing the liquor crime, which starves them, and freezes and murders them, and takes their earnings and clothes to buy liquor; and when they go up with petitions to the legislatures, they are told by the members that they must obey the men whose votes elect them; and their prayers are disregarded because they have no vote!

9. They complain, that, while the Bible nowhere forbids women to do what they are clearly capable of doing wisely and well, society makes women a separate and inferior caste irrespective of their abilities and capacities.

10. They complain that while society is benefitted by opening medicine, types, authorship, and selling goods, nay the colleges themselves, which were once closed against women, and men respect and love them more instead of less for this enlargement of "woman's sphere," the ballot is still denied them lest it should unsex them to vote.

12. They complain, that while woman suffrage has had a fair trial in Wyoming Territory, and the results reflect honor on their sex, and justify impartial suffrage; multitudes treat woman suffrage in Wyoming, as pro-slavery men treated emancipation in the West Indies, ignoring their former predictions of massacres, burnings, etc., and carping at little alleged evils of here and there a short crop. So they continued that, in Wyoming, the predictions of unrocked cradles, buttonless coats, family discords, etc., etc., have all failed; yet the same oft-refuted arguments and cavilling objections are still used.

12. They complain that, while brewers and distillers and saloon-keepers, whose shrewdness is stimulated by millions of money, insist that "the ballot in woman's hands means the destruction of our business," some temperance men will disfranchise them for fear they will vote for liquor; thus joining the brewers and distillers against them.

13. The Washington Convention women gave instances where the question of woman suffrage has been submitted to the people; and men who could not read the ballot, when it was explained to them, declared that they were "agin women's voting because they didn't know enough to vote!"

The above are but specimens of the complaints filed by those women at Washington. But they were neither captious, whining, or malignant. Two of the speakers were just a little tart; but not near so much so as we Abolitionists used to be. There was not a woman on that stage who was not fit to be loved as a mother, wife, sister or daughter. Next week, God willing, we will consider historically "Why has woman suffrage been so unpopular?"

MICHIGAN NOTICES.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Michigan Christian Association will hold its annual meeting for 1884 commencing Wednesday evening, April 9, at Battle Creek, Mich. Everything will be done possible to make this one of the most successful of our gatherings. The impending crisis demands from lovers of truth and justice a hearty response. Our S. D. Adventist brethren promise their co-operation, and entertainment for friends who come. Further particulars regarding place of meeting, programme, etc., will appear in the Cynosure. Parties interested in anti-secrecy reform, do not hesitate. Able speakers will be in attendance. Come prepared to help, and enjoy this meeting.

J. L. BUSH, Pres.
A. H. SPRINGSTEIN, Sec.

FIRST ANNUAL MEETING OF M. C. A.

The new Michigan Christian Association, incorporated April, 1883, will hold its first annual meeting in the Free Methodist church on Wilkins street in the city of Jackson, commencing Wednesday morning, April 9th, at 9 o'clock, sharp. Programme for the day will be the election of officers, and the making of such amendments as may, in the minds of the members, be deemed necessary. This meeting is an important one. Parties coming from the West can get there a little after 9 o'clock in the morning. Also from Grand Rapids and intervening stations on the Grand River Valley road. Those who cannot reach the meeting Wednesday morning on early train, come the day previous. Let those who wish to be met at the depot write a card to H. A. Day, Parma. It will cost but a trifle and may save both trouble and expense. From here the meeting will adjourn to meet with the old Association at Battle Creek on Wednesday evening (see programme for this meeting in another place), where in all probability the two Associations will become one. Do not fail to be at Jackson,

H. A. DAY, Sec.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

A CLUB OF FIVE

trial subscribers (two months for 25 cents) will just now be a valuable accession to the Cynosure list. To every friend who will get one up and enclose the $1.25 and addresses plainly written we will send either of the documents mentioned above.

FOR A CLUB OF TEN the sender may choose any two from the above list.

Get the Cynosure circulated in your town. The lodge does not thrive where it is read.

THE WASHINGTON PAPER.

215 4½ St., N. W.
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10th, 1884.

The following has just been received from Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, and as it expresses my own convictions I copy it for the Cynosure.

"I am much impressed over the necessity of starting our paper on the first of April. I don't see how it can be done, and yet spend sufficient time to get up the Northampton Convention. And my suggestion is, postpone everything in the way of the paper! 'One war at a time', the good Lincoln said. So say I, one thing at a time. We shall not do anything well if we undertake too much at once, yet we can do all that is required of us, if we take things in their order. Let everything now be held subordinate to the paper. I am writing for funds. In ten days the seal of the company and the stock book will be ready for use. Push along the whole line for a forward movement."

This has the right ring in it. Let those who want to see the paper start forthwith send along the contributions.

E. D. BAILEY.

MONEY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The soundness of the plank of the American platform on the above subject, will appear from the consideration of the following extract from the private circular of "Hazard", an English banker, issued to American bankers in 1862, the year before the creation of our National Banks:—

"Slavery is likely to be abolished by the war power, and chattel slavery be destroyed. This, I and my European friends are in favor of; for slavery is but the owning of labor, and carries with it to care for the laborer; while the European plan, led in by England, is, capital controls labor by controlling wages. This can be done by controlling money. The great debt, the capitalists will see to it, is made out of the war, must be used as the means to control the volume of money. To accomplish this the bonds must be used as the banking basis. It will not do to allow the 'greenback', as it is called, to circulate as money any length of time, for we can not control them. But we can control the bonds, and through them the bank issues."

Consider for a moment the diabolism here proposed. The slave-holder has to support the slave worn out in his service; we Europeans, under the lead of England, enslave the laborer all the same, but turn him out to starve when past service; we do it by controlling money. Capitalists will see to it that a great debt is made out of the war. There is no need of such but it must be done to enslave labor. This is what capitalists were doing when seventy-two strong. Wall street sent them to throttle the second issue of "greenbacks", failing in which, they secured the same end by partially demonetizing them; which act of infernal treachery, such patriots as Thad. Stevens and Henry Wilson denounced in the most unmeasured terms, predicting exactly the consequences which followed, in the depreciation of the national credit. They were securing the same end, to-wit, the accumulation of a great debt to enslave the laborer, when, under the lying pretense of increasing the national credit, they made bonds, bought with the money their action had depreciated to one-fourth the value of coin, and which were payable in the same money in which they were bought, payable in coin, and afterwards held that to mean gold coin and making what was issued as "lawful money" payable in gold.

By these and similar acts of bad faith to the people our capitalists did "see that a great debt was made out of the war" to enslave the laborer. They then deceived him by telling him it was credit money that made the debt. The facts are that the first $60,000,000 in greenbacks were not depreciated at all for the good and sufficient reason that they were as good as—nay, better than gold to pay all dues.

France, in her late war, under similar circumstances, even though her government went to the wall, did issue a very large amount of paper money, but did not commit the folly of demonetizing it at the dictation of capitalists, and it remained at par, speedily paying the expenses of the war and an indemnity to Germany half as large as our debt. A little reflection ought to convince any one that when, as always happens in war, the most of the gold and silver is either hoarded, or has fled the country, or been sent out for munitions of war, a law making it possible to speculate in it at home was admirably adopted to aid capitalists in accumulating a large debt to enslave the laborer. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that, but for the labors of those patriotic capitalists, who were carrying out the instructions of English bankers who hated our country and desired its overthrow, we should have had no debt, for, but for the depreciation of our money, we had paid all the expenses of the war at the time the war ceased. The great anxiety of these same gentlemen now is lest the country pay the debt and free the laborer from bondage and thus the plans of the British bankers, their masters, shall fail. They are deeply anxious lest their patriotic labors in "seeing to it that a great debt is made out of the war," and that it "be used as the means to control the value of money" and thus enslave the laborer, shall come to naught. They are anxious for the fate of the National Bank system, the monstrous devil-fish they have spawned into existence, which has Congress and the country in its soulless, slimy arms, and by drawing interest on what it does not own, but what is in reality the people's credit, and by expanding the currency, and by the consequent high price of commodities caused by plenty of money, inducing people to go in debt as much as possible and then contracting it and making it impossible to pay debts without the ruin of the debtor, putting up interest because money is scarce, or refusing to loan altogether for the reason that the diminished and unsettled value of all property, which its own iniquitous acts have caused, render loans insecure, is sucking out the life-blood of the nation and ruining its industries and enslaving the laborer by the very means pointed out in "Hazard's" circular as adequate to that end; to-wit, controlling "the volume of money," of which Congress has made it the absolute master.

If the old adage, fas ab hoste doceri, is true, we may learn one more very important lesson from this extract.

The abused "greenback" that, in spite of its ill usage, saved the country when gold and silver proved traitors, as they always do when most needed, is the true friend of the laborer and will not only, as Jefferson said, "carry the country through any war or financial crisis," as, in the form of treasury notes, it has always done, but will protect the laborer from the slavery sought to be fastened on him by capitalists and European bankers, and that the national bank bill, which is a fraud and no money, is his enemy, devised for his enslavement.

Such is the selfishness of average human nature, that no class of men can safely be trusted to guard the rights of any other class. Almost a majority of Congress are in some way interested in banks, and some of them shamelessly defend their right to represent, not their constituents, but the banks and other monopolies, and quite a majority are attorneys, many of whom have sought the office of representative, not to serve the people, but to get where they could command larger fees.

If the laborer wishes to retain his freedom he must sever his party ties and refuse longer to vote for men belonging to secret rings of bankers or other monopolists, or their attorneys, and vote for men who will restore the issue, not of fraudulent promises to pay money, but of real, "lawful money" to the nation, where it belongs."

O. F. LUMRY.

A WEST VIRGINIA NOTE.

CAMERON, W. Va.

The American party is making considerable progress in this section, and the principles of the party are getting a place in the public mind which will crystallize in party form as soon as a little more agitation of the subject is had.

I am doing all I can, but the enemy seems ever on the alert to crowd me off the platform, but I have one advantage which the enemy finds it hard to checkmate. I frequently speak on scientific themes, and when I speak on psychology I manage to illustrate mental impressibility to the external or non-egotistic forces by reference to lodge clap-trap to that end. This stabs Boaz under the fifth rib when he is not looking for it. And when on grammar, rhetoric or elocution (these sciences having no subject matter of their own, see Whately,), I illustrate from Anti-masonic writers. Saturday, 8th inst., I lectured on "Education as an Art," at Sugar Grove church, and at a school-house the Tuesday following. I want to be a member of the nominating convention at Chicago, next June 25 and 26.

J. W. MOSS.

Leckey's History of European Morals: Among the many safeguards of female purity in the Roman Republic was an enactment forbidding women ever to taste wine, and this law being enforced with the earliest education, became at last by habit and traditionary reverence, so incorporated with the moral feelings of the people, that its violation was spoken of as a monstrous crime.

The lilies all do,
And they grow;
They grow in the rain,
And they grow in the dew—
Yes, they grow;
They grow in the darkness, all hid in the night,
They grow in the sunshine, revealed by the light;
Still they grow.

They ask not your planting,
They need not your care,
As they grow;
Dropped down in the valley,
The field, anywhere—
There they grow;
They grow in their beauty, arrayed in pure white,
They grow clothed in glory by Heaven's own light—
Sweetly grow.

The grasses are clothed,
And the ravens are fed
From His store;
But you who are loved,
And guarded, and led,
How much more
Will He clothe you, and feed you, and give you His care!
Then leave it with Him, He is everywhere
Ample store.

Yes, leave it with Him,
'Tis more dear to His heart,
You will know,
Than the lilies that bloom
Or the flowers that start
'Neath the snow;
Whatever the need, if you seek it in prayer,
You can leave it with Him, for you are His care,
You, you know.

ASSOCIATED EVIL-DOING.

That ancient command "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil" (Exod. 23:2), was given in divine wisdom, and is specially important in view of the fact that iniquities committed by several persons in common, are rarely, if ever, repented of, confessed, or corrected. Peter sinned, and "went out and wept bitterly;" Judas sold his Lord, and returned saying, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood," and cast down the accursed silver in the temple; but when did the Sanhedrim, the great council of the Jews, ever confess their guilt in condemning Christ, in murdering Stephen, in scourging the apostles, or in persecuting the church?

Was there ever an ecclesiastical assembly known to confess or undo a sin, an outrage, or a wrong that they had done? Sometimes, after years have elapsed, and other men have taken the places of the wrong-doers, corrections and confessions have been made; but that has been one body of men confessing the faults of another body which committed them. But for any associated body of men to undo a wrong which they themselves have done, is almost too much to expect in this world.

Most persons who have had acquaintance with ecclesiastical matters can recall instances where flagrant wrongs have been committed, sometimes by honest men, acting under the direction of self-willed leaders, or unscrupulous lords over God's heritage;—wrongs that most who knew them would in private conversation freely admit and deplore; and yet they would join hands with the wrong-doers and allow right to be trampled under foot, or observe a judicious silence which would inure to their own personal advantage; and then, after years spent in ineffectual toils, would wonder at the absence of the Divine blessing, and try to lay the blame on sinners who did not receive a message which was preached without power and heard without effect.

Sometimes a church is cursed for a whole generation by the palsying power of a great wrong perpetrated, unconfessed, and unrepented of; and not until death has gathered those who are responsible for it, does the Divine blessing fall upon the desolate and dewless soil.

God calls upon men to put away evil. It is not easy to persuade an individual to correct a wrong. It is tenfold harder to persuade a corporate body to do the same thing. There is almost always some one too blind to see, too deaf to hear, too unreasonable to be convinced, and too stubborn to yield; and hence a wrong thus done, usually goes to the judgment to be made right.

How important that Christian men learn to walk carefully before the Lord, guided by reason, conviction, and righteousness, rather than to follow the crowd, and be swept into crooked ways. It is better to be alone with God in the desert or the dungeon, or to be steadfast for the right and valiant for the truth amid a thousand foes, than to go with the multitude in crooked paths, and sin against the Lord in following others who are swift to do evil.—Armory.

VICTORY THROUGH FAITH.

Christian, take good care of thy faith; for recollect, faith is the only way whereby thou canst obtain blessings. If we want blessings from God, nothing can bring them down as answers from God's throne except it be the earnest prayer of the man who believes. Faith is the angelic messenger between the soul and the Lord Jesus in glory. Let the angel be withdrawn, we can neither send up prayers nor receive answers. Faith is the telegraphic wire which links earth and heaven—on which God's messages of love fly so fast that before we call he answers, and while we are yet speaking he hears us. But if that telegraphic wire be snapped, how can we receive the promise? Am I in trouble? I can obtain help from trouble by faith. Am I beaten about by the enemy? My soul leans on her dear refuge by faith. But take faith away—in vain I call on God. There is no road betwixt my soul and heaven. In the deepest wintertime faith is a road on which the horses of prayer may travel. Ay, all the better for the biting frost; but blockade the road, and how can we communicate with the great King? Faith links me with divinity; faith clothes me with the power of God; faith engages on my side the omnipotence of Jehovah; faith insures every attribute of God in my defence; it helps me defy the hosts of hell; it makes me march triumphant over the necks of my enemies. But without faith how can I receive anything of the Lord? Let not him who wavereth, who is like a wave of the sea, expect that he will receive anything of God.

O, then, Christian, watch well thy faith, for with it thou canst win all things, how ever poor thou art; but without it thou canst obtain nothing. If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth. —Spurgeon.

PRAYER.

Do not speculate and reason about prayer, but pray, and rest your case with God. He who moves you to pray has surely an answer provided in his own good way. Do not doubt him, do not question, do not hesitate, but pour out your heart in prayer. His eyes are over the righteous; his ear is open to their cry. The young birds in their nests cry, and he feedeth them; are ye not much better than they? The young lions roar and seek their meat from God, who provides for them in his own way. Shall he not care for you and me? Provision is made for the body; if it wants light, it has an eye with which to get it; if it wants knowledge, food and clothing, it has a brain, and hands, and feet, with which to acquire them. He has not made the body a prince and left the soul a beggar. The soul wants pardon, and peace, and comfort, and bread from heaven, and has no way but to cry out for it. "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find."

All heaven is pledged to make that promise good. Whatever troubles come, whatever cares oppress, whatever fears give anxiety—pray. "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." "For I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by my name, thou art mine."—The Christian.

DOST THOU BELIEVE ON THE SON OF GOD?

For he that believeth on the Son of God hath Everlasting Life. (John 3:36.)

He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself. (1 John 5:10.)

He that believeth on Me shall never thirst. (John 6:35.)

He that believeth on Me, believeth not on Me, but on Him that sent Me. (John 12:44.)

He that believeth on Me hath Everlasting Life. (John 6:47.)

He that believeth on Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. (John 11:25.)

He that believeth on Him is not condemned. (John 3:18.)

He that believeth on Me, the works that I do, shall he do also. (John 14:12.)

He that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. (1 Peter 2:6.)

He that believeth on Me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. (John 7:38.)

Whosoever believeth on Me shall not abide in darkness. (John 12:46.)

Whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16.)

Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed. (Romans 9:33.)

Whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life. (John 3:15.)

Whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins. (Acts 10:43.)

Whosoever believeth in Me shall never die. (John 11:26.)

But—

He that believeth not is condemned already. (John 3:19.)

He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar. (1 John 5:10.)

He that believeth not shall be damned. (Mark 16:16.)

He that believeth not the Son, shall not see life. (John 3:36.)

SEVEN RULES FOR YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

1. Never neglect daily private prayer; and when you pray, remember that God is present, and that he hears your prayers. Heb. 11:6.

2. Never neglect daily private Bible-reading; and when you read, remember that God is speaking to you, and that you are to believe and act upon what he says. I believe all backsliding begins with the neglect of these two rules. John 5:39.

3. Never profess to ask God for anything which you do not want. Tell him the truth about yourself, however bad it makes you; and then ask him, for Christ's sake, to forgive you what you are, and to make you what you ought to be. John 4:24.

4. Never let a day pass without trying to do something for Jesus. Every night reflect on what Jesus has done for you, and then ask yourself, "What have I done to-day for Him?" Matt. 5:13–16.

5. If ever you are in doubt as to a thing's being right or wrong, go to your room, and kneel down and ask God's blessing upon it. Col. 3:17. If you cannot do this, it is wrong. Rom. 14:23.

6. Never take your Christianity from Christians, or argue that, because such and such people do so and so, therefore you may. 2 Cor. 10:12. You are to ask yourself, "How would Christ act in my place?" and strive to follow him. John 10:27.

7. Never believe what you feel if it contradicts God's Word. Ask yourself, "Can what I feel be true if God's Word is true?" and if both cannot be true, believe God, and make your own heart the liar. Rom. 3:4; 1 John 5:10, 11.—Brownlow North.

Let no mistake be made concerning what is meant by a Christian spirit. Let us not, as is too often done, take one side of the character of Christ in forming an estimate of the whole. Men speak of the loving kindness and gentleness in Christ, as though those virtues made up his whole life. This is a great mistake. The wrath of God against sin was incarnate in Christ. He denounced the hypocrisies of the Pharisees, laid bare the sins of society, stripped men of falsities, and pronounced woes on the heads of evil doers. He overthrew the tables of the extortionate money-changers, and made a whip of small cords and drove them as thieves out of the temple.—Advance.

A Good Excuse.—If you have got a good excuse, don't give it up for anything I have said; don't give it up for anything your mother may have said; don't give it up for anything your friend may have said. Take it to the bar of God and state it to him; but if you have got a poor excuse—an excuse that will not stand in eternity—let it go to-night, and flee to the arms of a loving Saviour.—Moody.

Never let the seeming worthlessness of sympathy make you keep back that sympathy of which when speechless ones are suffering around you your heart is full. Go and give it without asking yourself whether it is worth the while to give it. It is too sacred a thing for you to tell what it is worth. God, from whom it comes, sends it through you to those who stand in need of it.—Brookes.

Value of Observation.—Cultivate the habit of observation until it becomes fixed, and you will never be at a loss for employment for your thoughts. Every person you meet will afford food for thought; every event of prominence and every object of nature will be the means of intellectual development. Observation is the habit of thinking and reflecting upon what is seen. The habit of observation does not consist in seeing the greatest number or the greatest variety of objects, but in seeking the peculiarities of the objects presented, inquiring the causes, learning the effects, and tracing the connections or circumstances of each event or object with another. In this way the intellectual powers acquire new strength, greater freedom and a more full development.—Selected.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOMETHING FOR CHILDREN TO DO.

There is something on earth for the children to do,
For the child that is striving to be Like the One who once murmured, in accents of love,
"Let the little ones come to me."

There are sweet, winning words to the weary and sad
By their glad, loving lips to be said;
There are hearts that are waiting by some little hand
Unto Jesus the Lord to be led.

There are lessons to learn both at home and at school;
There are battles to fight for the right;
There's a watch to be kept over temper and tongue,
And God's help to be asked day and night.

There are smiles to be given, kind deeds to be done,
Gentle words to be dropped by the way;
For the child that is seeking to follow the Lord
There is something to do every day.

THE BOYHOOD OF JOHN B. GOUGH.

His life had been a peculiarly bitter one. Born in a very humble home at Sandgate, on the English coast, gleaning with his mother and sister after the reapers, that they might have bread to eat, or cleaning knives and shoes in the gentleman's house where his father was a servant, there was little to make a boy's life bright. When he was twelve, a family offered to bring him to America if his parents would pay fifty dollars for his passage. It was difficult to earn this, but his mother thought, after the manner of mothers, "Perhaps in the New World our John will be somebody." So, with tears, she packed his scanty clothing, putting in a little Bible, and pinning these lines on a shirt:

"Forget me not when death shall close
These eyelids in their last repose;
And when the murmuring breezes wave
The grass upon your mother's grave,
O then, whate'er thy age or lot
May be, my child, forget me not.

JANE GOUGH."

Then, again and again she pressed her only boy to her heart, and stole out behind the garden wall that, unobserved, she might catch a last look of the stage which carried him to London.

The voyage was a long one of nearly two months. The little lad often cried in his cabin, and he wrote back, "I wish mother could wash me to-night," showing what a tender "mother's boy" he was. When New York harbor was entered, and he was eager to see his adopted country, he was sent below to black boots and shoes for the family.

His school days were now over. After two years of hard work in the country, he sold his knife to buy a postage stamp, and wrote his father, asking his permission to go to New York and learn a trade. Consent was given, and in the middle of the winter our English lad of fourteen reached the great city, with no home, no friends, and only fifty cents in his pocket. Hundreds passed by as he stood on the dock, holding his little trunk in his hands, but nobody spoke to him. But at last, by dint of earnestness, he found a place to enter as errand-boy and learn book-binding, receiving two dollars and twenty-five cents a week, and paying two dollars out of this for his board. How his employers supposed he could live on one dollar a month for clothes and washing has never appeared.

The first night he was placed by his boarding mistress in an attic, with an Irishman who was deathly ill. The second night the man died, and the horror-stricken young boy stayed alone with the dead till morning.

Nearly two painful years more went by. Finally, though he earned but three dollars a week, he sent to England for his mother and sister. When they arrived two rooms were rented; the girl found work in the straw-bonnet factory, and, poor though they were, they were very happy. John was now sixteen, devoted to his mother, and still a noble, unselfish, persevering boy.

At the end of three months, through dullness of business, both children lost their places, and now began the struggles which the poor know so well in our large cities. In vain they looked for work. Then they left their two decent rooms and moved into a garret. Winter came on, and they had neither fuel nor food. John walked miles out into the country, and dragged home old sticks which lay by the roadside. He pawned his coat that the mother, who had now become ill, might have some mutton broth.

One day he left her in tears, and went sobbing down the street.

"What is the matter?" said a stranger.

"I'm hungry, and so is my mother."

"Well, I can't do much, but I'll help you a little," and he gave John a three-cent loaf of bread.

When the boy reached home the good woman put the Bible on the rickety pine table, read from it, and then all knelt and thanked God for the precious loaf.

In the spring he obtained employment at four dollars and a half a week, but poverty and privation had fallen too heavily, rested too long, upon the mother. One day while preparing John's simple supper of rice and milk, she fell dead. All night long the desolate boy held her cold hand in his; then, in that Christian city, she was put in a pine box, and, without shroud or prayers, carried in a cart, her two children walking behind it, and was buried in the Potter's Field.

For three days afterwards John and his sister never tasted food. Probably the world said "Poor things!" but it is certain that nobody offered to help them.—Sarah K. Bolton, in Wide Awake.

A THOUGHTLESS BOY PUNISHED.

"I shall never forget," remarked a friend of ours once, "an incident of childhood, by which I was taught to be careful not to wound the feelings of the unfortunate. A number of us school children were playing by the roadside one Saturday afternoon, when the stage-coach drove up to the neighboring tavern and the passengers alighted. As usual, we gathered around to observe them. Among the number was an elderly gentleman with a cane, who got out with much difficulty, and when on the ground he walked with the most curious contortions. His feet turned one way, his knees another and his whole body looked as though the different members were independent of each other, and every one was making motions to suit itself.

"I unthinkingly shouted, 'Look at old Rattle-Bones!' while the poor man turned his head, with an expression of pain which I can never forget. Just then, to my surprise and extreme horror, my father came around the corner, and immediately stepping up to the stranger, shook his hand warmly, and assisted him to walk to our house, which was but a short distance.

"I could enjoy no more play that afternoon, and when tea-time came I would gladly have hidden myself; but I knew it would be in vain, and so trembling went into the sitting room. To my great relief, the stranger did not recognize me, but remarked pleasantly to my father as he introduced me:

"'Such a fine boy is surely worth the saving!'

"How the words cut me to the quick! My father had often told me the story of a friend who plunged into the river to save me, as I was drowning when an infant, and who in consequence of a cold then taken, had been made a cripple by inflammatory rheumatism; and this was the man I had made a butt of ridicule and a laughing stock for my companions!

"I tell you boys and girls I would give many dollars to have the memory of that event taken away. If ever you are tempted as I was, remember that while no good comes of sport whereby the feelings of others are wounded, you may be laying up for yourselves painful recollections that will not leave you for a life time."—Selected.

THE SENSE OF HONOR IN BOYS.

There is a great confusion in boys' notions of honor. You should not go to your teacher with tales of your schoolmates, but when questioned by those in authority over you, parents, guardians or teachers, it is your duty to tell who did a mischief or broke a rule, no matter what results to yourself or how unpopular you become. Boys have a false honor which hides mean and skulking actions in each other, which ought to be ridiculed out of them. The most cowardly injuries and injustice among boys go unchecked, and the weaker are abused and bullied in a way every decent boy should resent, because this false notion of comradeship leads them to lie, prevaricate, or keep silence to screen the guilty. Teachers and friends ought to put down this ignorant, petty "sense of honor," for something more intelligent and upright. When you know of a wrong and keep silence about it when asked, you become a partner in the wrong, and responsible for its original meanness. It is a pity that boys and grown people did not carry the same strictness of principle they show in screening bullies and frauds into points of genuine honor and courage.— Wide Awake.

BUSINESS MAXIMS FOR BOYS.—Attend carefully to details. Best things are difficult to get. Cultivate promptness, order and regularity. Do not seek a quarrel where there is an opportunity of escaping. Endure trials patiently. Fight life's battles bravely. Give when you can, but give from principle, not because it is fashionable. He who follows two hares is sure to catch neither. Injure no one's reputation or business. Join hands only with the virtuous. Keep your mind from evil thoughts. Learn to think and act for yourself. Make new friends. Never try to appear what you are not. Observe good manners. Pay your debts promptly. Question no man's veracity without cause. Respect your word as you would your bond. Say "no" firmly and respectfully when necessary. Touch not, taste not, handle not the cup which intoxicates, Use your own brains rather than those of others. Virtue, not pedigree, is a sign of nobility. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith. Youth is the best period for the forming of good habits.

TEMPERANCE.

Out of 955 samples of French wines recently analyzed, only ninety-five were found to be genuine, the rest being more or less adulterated with unwholesome drugs. We challenge an analysis of 955 American hogs that would not show a more favorable comparison.—Hartford Post.

Three-fourths of the "drunks" in the police courts of Cincinnati, says the Commercial Gazette, get drunk on beer. William Lill, the greatest brewer in America, a few years ago in giving up the business, said: "I have found it impossible to keep sober men in my brewery. It is a manufactory of drunkards in constant operation. Every man is a beer barrel in the morning and a barrel of beer at night. I will have no more of it."

The revenue receipts during last year for distilled spirits, according to the report of the Internal Revenue Department, were $74,358,775; for fermented liquors, $16,900,615, a total of about $81,000,000. The sales aggregated about $1,000,000,000. This was more than the gross receipts of all our railroads, which exhibited earnings to the total of $615,401,931. And what is there to show for it?

The drink statistics of Belgium have a melancholy interest. The population of the kingdom amounting now to about 5,500,000, consumes annually alcoholic liquors to the value of 480,000,000 francs, which is 66 per cent more than thirty years ago. Compared with forty years ago the number of the insane has increased by 104 per cent, of suicides by 80 per cent, and of condemned criminals by 135 per cent. In 1850 the number of places where alcoholic liquors were retailed was 53,000; it is now 130,000. It is generally felt throughout the kingdom that measures to oppose the evil effects of drink are urgently required.

Sunday closing of liquor-shops in Ireland commends itself by the good results which attend it. In five cities, exempted from the Sunday-closing act, a voluntary canvass has been taken which shows a large majority in favor of the measure. The following question was put to householders and heads of families: "Are you in favor of the entire closing of public-houses, beer-shops, taverns, and spirit-grocers on Sundays?" The answers were: In Dublin—Yes, 34,609; no, 8,117; majority in favor of Sunday closing, 26,489. In Belfast—Yes, 26,958; no, 5,912; majority, 21,046. In Cork—Yes, 9,605; no, 1,870; majority, 7,735. In Limerick—Yes, 5,600; no, 550; majority, 5,050. And in Waterford—Yes, 3,465; no, 260; majority, 2,205.—National Temperance Advocate.

A SIMPLE CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

At a festival at a reformatory institution recently, a gentleman said of the cure of the use of intoxicating drinks: "I overcame the appetite by a recipe given me by old Dr. Hatfield, one of those good old physicians who do not have a percentage with a neighboring druggist. When I called on him he said: 'Now that you have the moral courage, I'll tell you the tonic which I have used with effect among my friends for twenty years.' I expected, of course, some nasty medicine stuff; but no; he prescribed an orange every morning a half hour before breakfast. 'Take that, and you will neither want liquor nor medicine.' I have done so regularly, and have found that liquor has become repulsive. The taste of the orange is in the saliva of my tongue, and it would be as well to mix water and oil as rum with my taste."

ONLY A BABY.

One sultry day last summer, at a time when children of the poorer class in Philadelphia were dying by the scores every week, a bloated old man staggered up the steps of a physician's dwelling. The boys shouted after him, "Old Bourbon," the name by which he had been known in the locality in which he lived for many years.

"The baby's worse," he said, standing hat in hand when he met the doctor coming out.

"You've been here for me every day for a week," explained the doctor. "I can not go again to-day. I told the child's mother there was no chance this morning. It was dying then."

"Won't you come now?"

"No; I have not a minute to spare. There are patients waiting whom I can help."

"Old Bourbon" followed him to his carriage door, twisting his rag of a hat in his shaking hands. "She's—she's all I've got, doctor."

But the doctor, with a pitying nod, drove away, and the old man, nearly sobered by his keen distress, crept home to the attic where his little grandchild lay dying. Whatever nursing or kindness little Mary had known, had come from "Old Bourbon." Her mother had six other children, and went out washing every day. The poor old drunkard and the innocent baby were left to form a strange friendship for each other. She called for him now feebly, as she lay on her mother's lap.

"Daddy! daddy! Come to me!"

He kneeled down and put his finger into the tiny withered hand. The tears ran down his bloated cheeks.

"God, leave her to me! God, leave her to me!" he muttered.

"Daddy, come to Mary!" she cried once more, and then the little soul, whose taste of life had been so bitter, passed on into the unseen.

It was only a baby. Its mother, who had six other half-starved children to feed, shed but few tears over it. The doctor sent in a certificate of its death with a dozen others. In the weekly bill of mortality there was an item, "Of cholera infantum, seventy." Little Mary was one of the seventy. That was all. Her record was ended. The world had done with her.

But an old trembling man crept next Sunday into the back pew of the little mission church, not far from the attic in which he lived. He stopped the clergyman when service was over.

"Why, is this you, Bour—I beg your pardon. What is your real name?"

"John Black, sir. I want to take my name again. I'm thinkin' of signin' the pledge 'n pullin' up for the rest of the time left," stammered the poor wretch.

The clergyman was wise and helpful. John did "pull up." He lived but a few months after that, but he did what he could to live a decent, honest, Christian life in that time.

"The Lord is merciful, John," his friend said to him as he lay dying.

"I know it, sir. I'm not much acquainted with him, but I've been tryin' to foller little Mary. I hear her always cryin', 'Daddy, come to me.' I'm comin', an' I reckon he'll not turn me back."

Even the baby had its work to do, and had done it.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. D. Yant of Bolivar, Ohio, writes that very soon, within a month, they hope to dedicate a house of prayer, where the brethren expect that the fire upon the altar will always be brightly burning.

—Rev. J. A. Preston has accepted a call to the pastorate of Dayton Chapel, near Clarence, Iowa. This is a sturdy reform church, numbering among its members brethren Kent, Starry and Ferguson, who are well known in reform meetings at the West.

—In response to memorials the National Congregational Council meeting in St. Louis in 1880, arranged for the adoption of a creed for the denomination. A committee of seven were appointed to select twenty-five representative men who should formulate this creed. The twenty-five were found and their work was published about the first of the present month. Three members of this committee of twenty-five refused to sign the new creed because of its lack of positive statement on some points. These three were Dr. E. P. Goodwin of this city, Prof. Carr of Hartford, and Dr. Alden of Boston.

—A note from Chambersburg, Pa., last week, tells us of the good news that the revival in the King Street U. B. church continues. On Sabbath, the 16th, Bro. J. M. Bishop administered baptism to ten persons, and twenty-five were received into the fellowship of the church.

—The Philadelphia Baptist City Mission has been in existence but four years, and has already ten missions under its charge. Four chapels have been built, and plans for another have been adopted.

—There were over seven thousand additions to the membership of the Methodist Protestant church reported in one week's issue of the Methodist Recorder.

—Rev. C. H. Hobart of the First Baptist church, Aurora, has resigned his charge, the action to take effect in three months. Mr. Hobart is a young man of marked ability and piety and great moral courage. During his pastorate he has not feared to publicly preach the truth against that destroyer of the churches, the lodge.

—Mr. L. E. Jackson, in his Christian Work in New York, for 1884, says: There are 118 Protestaut missions in the city where Sabbath-schools and preaching and other religious and moral services, for adults, or children, or both, are regularly carried on. Of this number 45 are permaneutly established in suitable, commodious, church-like buildings, with the ministry, the ordinances and the government that usually appertain to churches, though they be not regularly incorporated as such. There are already more than a million and a half of dollars invested in mission chapels and churches, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are annually raised for the support of city missionaries, missionary pastors, Bible readers and other helpers, aud for the general maintenance of the missionary work. The total number of city missionary in New York may be put down at 266, who probably make 800,000 visits a year.

—The Christian Intelligencer justly complains of the legislature of New Jersey, which is discussing a bill which permits the business of churches to be done in whole or in part by a board of trustees who may or may not be members of the church. This arrangement is similar to the Illinois law and operates much as does the half-and-half, God-and-mammon style of most Congregational churches, which do their business in the "society" where often worldly men manage affairs.

—A sermon preached by the Rev. C. W. Cushing, of Rochester, N. Y., on the increase of crime in that city, has created intense excitement. Mr. Cushing was thoroughly informed on the subject which he was treating, and it has been impossible to refute the statements he has made.

—Rev. P. A. Seguin, the reformed French priest, who was a year or two since engaged in Gospel work in New York has lately come to Chicago, and last Sabbath began a work among the French-speaking people of this city which we hope may be a prosperous and blessed one.

—The late James F. Clark, of Cleveland, Ohio, bequeathed $79,000 for educational, charitable and religious purposes, including $24,000 to Oberlin College and $10,000 each to the American Bible Society, the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions and Presbyterian Board of Home Missions.

—A. M. Purdy, editor of the Fruit Recorder, Palmyra, New York, writes to the Christian Worker of this city, Feb. 25th:

A glorious work has been carried on here. Five weeks ago a series of meetings began here in Palmyra, and have continued up to last night. The meetings for the present, closed last night, with the following results: Over 150 converted—nearly half of whom received the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Fifty have handed in their names for membership and half as many more undoubtedly will before our next monthly meeting. Some of them have come out from other denominations, because of our simple way of worship and the bold presentation of the doctrines of sanctification. A Sabbath-school was organized yesterday, numbering fully eighty, with good prospects for as many more within next month. Eight classes were formed. New members all read and accept our doctrine and discipline [Quaker]. Men of strong minds who attended the infidel club in this village have been blessedly converted and are now clearly out in the light and liberty of the gospel. I have been more or less connected with revival work for the past sixteen years, and have not seen or experienced anything like it.

—The Advance reports a revival of "pure and undefiled" religion in Salt Lake City. "Union meetings commenced with the week of prayer, and have been held daily ever since (nine weeks), with interest steadily increasing. Rev. F. T. Lee, with the pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, have taken turns in preaching and conducting afternoon prayer-meetings and inquiry meetings. The most perfect and delightful harmony has prevailed from the first. Full houses have assembled every night, and while each serviee has been impressive, nothing approaching to mere animal excitement has appeared. In the main, adults have been wrought upon, and a goodly number of young men and heads of families. March 2d was set apart by the three churches as a day for ingathering, and in all eighty-three were received. Pastor Lee gave the right hand of fellowship to twenty-eight, only two of them joining by letter. Nine of the number were Chinamen, who for one and two years have been trained in Sunday-school, and give good evidence of having forsaken their idols for the serviee of the living God. Quite a number by birth and connection were Mormons. Almost all were baptized. The services throughout were very impressive to an audience which crowded the house."

—St. Matthew's Lutheran church, in Newberry Co., S. C., Rev. Z. W. Bedenbaugh pastor, was entirely destroyed by the cyclone on the 19th of February. The pastor in a communication to the Visitor, says: "Some portions have been found distant about two miles. It looks as though a large river had run over the place the water running up hill. The beautiful grove is swept away. The post-holes are left to mark the graveyard. Language cannot express nor can the imagination picture the scene. And yet amidst all this wreck and ruin, strange to say, the vessels used in administering the sacraments were preserved almost intact. The plate has a nail hole through it, and the baptismal font a very slight dent in the edge, which would only be noticed on critical examination. This was found three fourths of a mile from the church."

—Dr. Clough, the missionary to India who lately visited Chicago, related very interesting accounts of the work which God had given him among the Telegus. He said: "The Brahmins ridiculed me when I began my labors among the 'jondogs,' but I continued to preach, and with the assistance of native preachers made six or seven hundred baptisms a year. When the great famine came, over one quarter of the 5,000,000 inhabitants perished. After the terrors of the famine had passed, the natives turned to me to be baptized. I put them off, not wanting to take them indiscriminately, but they pleaded with me and brought in their idols by the cart-load to be destroyed. One day I baptized 300, and during that year over 10,000. I know of no instance where I have reason to regret a single baptism."

—At the First Baptist church in Boston, on Feb. 24, the pastor, Rev. C. B. Crane, announced that he would omit the regular sermon, as there was another duty to be attended to. He then called Deacon Lansing Mills to the platform. Mr. Mills said that there was a debt of $55,000 resting upon the church, and it was his greatest desire that it should be wiped out. Years ago he had resolved to set aside a sum each year to purchase a farm to which he could retire in his old age, and this amount he would now give toward the cancellation of the church's indebtedness. He then called for further gifts, and in less than an hour the entire $55,000 were subscribed.

—A century and a half ago a few shillings in the pockets of two poor men coustituted the entire fund of the United Brethren available for foreign missions; now the average annual income from Moravian sources at home is about $100,000, and not far from $150,000 from other sources. More than 2,000 brethren and sisters (2,158) have engaged in the foreign work; and at the present time there are under the care of the missionaries 74,000 souls—more than twice the number of members (25,298) in the home churches of the United Brethren throughout the German, English and American provinces. Yet, mere numerical increase of converts from heathenism has never beeu their ambition. They have striven to perform a genuine work, and seem to have accomplished their purpose. All their missionaries have not been well educated; but some of them have been and are fine scholars. Nearly one in every fifty of their communicants is a missionary; and their zeal does not flag from generation to generation. If all Protestant churches had been equally devoted, equally enterprising for the last century and a half, not an uncvangelized man or woman would now remain on earth.

—The Presbytery of Shantung, China, nominally includes the Shantung Province, which has a population of 29,000,000. The reports from the various churches at their recent meeting were unusually interesting. Six hundred and seventy-two converts had been received during the year, making an aggregate of 2,072 members within the bounds of the Presbytery. They have 127 regular preachiug stations, and besides these the Gospel is preached on the streets of the cities and towns, in families, and by the wayside.

—Max Muller, the great Sanscrit scholar of Oxford University, said, more than fifteen years ago, that "the influence of Christianity was felt everywhere" in India, and that the formation of the Brahmo Somaj is "due indirectly to the preaching and teaching of Christian missionaries." The most distinguished civilians, such as Sir Richard Temple and Sir William Muir, agree that the missionaries of England and America have been leavening Indian society with Christian truth, and a greater man than either of them, Sir John Lawrence, Viceroy of India, made frank confession that the influence of the missionaries in India surpassed all the influences exerted upon the dwellers in India in his day. At the present there are about 500 native ordained preachers in India.—The Interior.

—The new Congregational church in Lake View, just outside the northern limits of Chicago, was occupied for the first time Sabbath day. The pastor, the Rev. A. J. Bailey, preached in the morning. In the afteroon 400 scholars attended the Sunday-school. They were addressed by D. C. Cook, C. F. Gates, J. C. Armstrong, city missionary, A. J. Bailey and others.

REVIVAL AT CRAWFORDSVILLE, IOWA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to report progress at this point. Rev. D. P. Rathbun has been holding a series of meetings at this place, and God has wonderfully manifested his presence and power, and honored his servant in this work. The power of the enemy has also been manifest. The Masons have spared no pains to injure him; not all of them, to their credit be it spoken, but some who have, have done all they could, except to use persoual violence. All the churches have been blessed, and sinners saved. One hundred and twenty have professed saving faith. The Congregational church has taken an advanced step and made oath-bound society fellowship a test of membership. We expect to secure the services of Prof. Blanchard for a time here if possible in the near future. The churches have all been engaged in revival work, and last of all, the Masonic lodge is holding a protracted meeting. Whether it is to save souls or to save the craft, we cannot say, as they do not admit the profane. It must be to save those inside.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

3. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

OBITUARY.

HEZEKIAH JOHNSON died at his residence in Delavan, Wiseonsin, February 22, 1884, at the advanced age of nearly eighty-five years.

Mr. Johnson was born in Killingsly, Windom county, Connecticut, April 7th, A. D. 1799, where his boyhood days were spent. He came with his parents to Schuyler, Herkimer county, New York, in the autumn of 1818. He was married to Miss Almira Rose, June 26th, 1823, and with his wife experienced religion in 1830, uniting with what was then termed the Close Communion Baptist church at that place. In the autumn of 1844, Mr. Johnson, with his family, came to Wisconsin, then a territory, and settled in Mount Pleasant, in Racine county, uniting with the Baptist church of Racine, by letter from the church in New York. In 1869 Mr. Johnson removed to Delavan and has since resided in that village, having united with the Baptist church here on his arrival there.

Mr. Johnson neither sought nor won the distinctions in life so eagerly songht by many. He was content with the culture of the Christian graces and discharging with unflinching fidelity his dnties to his God, his family and his fellow-men, by some called a radical man, by all he was known to be sincere and honest, well informed of passing events, with clear and comprehensive mind, of strong convictions never concealed, he could not well be other than a radical man. Every species of vice and dishonesty found in him an unflinching foe, yet he was modest, unassnming and always had a kindly greeting for all. A long life of over eighty years has beeu passed and he has gone to his reward, he has left no stain upon that life to be regretted by his friends, but has left an untarnished Christian career of over fifty years, for which his friends most devoutly thank God, who called him to his service and by whose aid he was enabled to live a worthy and exemplary Christian life.

Mr. Johnson leaves behind him the wife of his youth, who has stood by his side for more than sixty years, sharing with him the duties, cares and toils of life. His married life was a peculiarly happy one. He also leaves one son, William M. Johnson, who inherits his father's strong convictions and earnest sympathy with the reform against the lodges.

MINUTES OF A MEETING HELD BY THE CHICAGO BAR ASSOCIATION UPON THE DEATH OF C. L. BLANCHARD.

Meeting of the Chicago Bar held Mar. 18, 1884, at 79 Dearborn street, in respect and esteem to the memory of Cyrus L. Blanchard, lately deceased. William E. Mason was elected chairman of the meeting and F. W. C. Hayes secretary. Speeches were made by Wm. E. Mason and Wallace Heckman eulogizing the individual worth, energy and uprightness of the deceased as a man, and his superior promise and ability as a lawyer. Upon motion a committee was appointed to draft resolutions of respect and condolence. The committee, consisting of Messrs. Wallace Heckman, D. L. Zook and L. C. Collins, reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, In the course of Divine Providence a member of this bar who gave unusual evidenee of ability and large promise of usefulness has been taken from among us,

Resolved, That in the death of Cyrus L. Blanchard the bar has lost a young member of singularly marked ability and uprightness of character, who had already attained a high place in his profession, which he adorned with scholarly learning as well as the virtues of a Christian gentleman, and that society has lost a valiant and fearless advocate of social reform and advaneement and that we have lost a genial associate and generous friend.

Resolved, That we extend to the family of the deceased our deepest sympathy in this our mutual bereavement.

Upon the adoption of the resolutions D. L. Zook spoke of the remarkable strength of character possessed by the deceased and his earnest and fearless expression of convictions upon the temperance and other reforms. Jarvis Bloom recounted his personal knowledge of the intelligence and activity of Mr. Blanchard as a lawyer, and his honest and earnest deportment, which inspired the confidence and respect of all who came in contact with him.

ANOTHER FRIEND OF REFORM GONE.

The shadow of death has again crossed the threshold of the quiet, happy home of Mrs. E. S. Sutphen of Evansville, Wis., and taken from her the kindest and best of husbands and left her with other relatives to mourn their loss.

The subject of this notice was a native of the State of New York, but for over thirty years has been a resident of Evansville, where he followed his profession, which was that of undertaker and cabinet maker, until failing health obliged him to give up labor in 1882, since which time he has been confined to his bed. During his long and tedions illness of eighteen months he was never heard to murmur or complaiu, but was a perfect example of patience, which served to strengthen the faith of some who have hitherto been skeptical on the snbject of religion. Many times dnring his illness he expressed a firm, confiding trust in Christ, and a willingness to depart and be with him. No language can too highly express his qniet and exemplary life, and his strong attachment to his companion which seemed to strengthen with every day's suffering. He passed away on March 8, 1884, at the ripe age of 76 years. The funeral services were held in the Free Baptist church, conducted by the writer, where the deceased was wout to worship. A large and sympathizing audience were present to pay their last respects to the dead. He was buried in the beautiful cemetery east of the city, a fit resting place for the mortal remains of one whose life had been so beautifully consistent and pure.

Paper cover. 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general snbject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper. 35 cents; per dozen. $3.50.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ancient Egypt.

Ancient Egypt Under the Pharaohs. By John Kenrick, M. A. Two volumes in one, large 12mo, Long Primer type, 802 pages, with illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

This most excellent work, some time out of print in this country, and costing $15 to import, is now published in a handsome edition, at a price within the reach of all. It deals with the history of Egypt from the earliest times to its absorption into the empire of Alexander; and in a most comprehensive, thorough, and remarkably entertaining way treats of the arts, sciences, laws, language, religion, agriculture, navigation, and commerce of this most wonderful of the nations of the ancient world. As an AUTHORITY no work upon Egypt ranks higher.

CARE OF THE BABY.

A traveling companion remarked to me recently, with emphasis, that "there needs to be about one child killed on every train to make people take proper care of their children." While strongly tempted to ask Artemus Ward's question, "Be you a parent, Miss Peaslee?" I refrained, for I knew well she was not; knew it by the way she started every time a perverse but attractive little fellow in the forward end of the car climbed on the back of a seat and balanced there; knew it by the way she held her breath when he approached the car door. Later in the day her words took on new meaning, and seemed to have a good deal of force. A young woman, and one who was evidently her mother, were traveling with a baby—a little creature in a long white dress, but with no wraps whatever over it, though the mother and grandmother both had on winter cloaks and hats. The baby was fed from a bottle, and at different times during the day the mother had gone out to the lunch room by the way and had the bottle filled. About four o'clock in the afternoon the interest I had felt all along in the trio deepened; the baby, who had mildly resented its treatment at various times during the day, became more energetic—in fact, it cried as hard as it could cry. When it had cried for twenty-five or thirty miles, the mother was so overcome that she cried, too, and gave the baby to the grandmother, who danced it up and down till my head grew dizzy and ached for sympathy. Then the mother took it and tossed it still, up and down, and grandmother tried dexterously to insert the drinking apparatus into its mouth. An accomplished acrobat could not have swallowed a mouthful at the rate of speed the boy was going up and down. Probably at this stage of proceedings there was not a woman in the car who did not believe that she could quiet that baby by loosening the clothing over its aching stomach, wrapping it up in a warm blanket, and cuddling it at her side. A motherly-looking woman came to them and said, "Let me take the baby;" but she was glad to return it soon, saying, "This boy is cold; that is one reason why it cries; its hands are like ice, and its head, too." "I should like," said a gentleman behind me, "to get a kind of a cheap child, not one of my own, and see if it could not be brought up as it ought to be; do you suppose that is necessary over there?" Night came on, and as the call to "change cars" rang out, above this and the noise of moving feet the continued protest of that poor, ill-treated babe sounded in our ears. "Who didn't suppose," said the motherly-looking woman, "that everybody knew that a baby's hands should be kept warm, and its clothes loose, and that two or three kinds of milk meant colic and distress to a child of that age?" The "enlightenment of the masses" is not even yet complete, I thought, when the woman at my side said, as she disappeared in the darkness: "Why didn't that mother, instead of crying, try to think out what it was that ailed the baby, and then profit by her thoughts?" *E. HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

F. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 631 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

RAISING RACE-HORSES THE BANE OF FARMING.

The raising of race horses is one of the most expensive of luxuries, while the raising of work horses is the most profitable of all farming. One of the most demoralizing influences which the young farmer has to contend against is that of the agricultural fair.

The New York Weekly Tribune of Oct. 31, has paragraphs illustrating these facts. It says: "Orange county, New York, has given great attention to breeding fast horses, greatly to the detriment of its interests in every way. The Local Farmer well says, what is doubtless true in other sections also, that 'for each trotter marketed there for a fair price, at five years old, fifty have been sold for less than the cost of the service of their sires. Financially, the whole business has been a curse, and it has had a demoralizing influence as well in many other directions.'" It also mentions that the Massachusetts Agricultural Fair, under the leadership of George B. Loring, United States Commissioner of Agriculture, always gives up to beer saloons and other demoralizing influences that portion of the grounds best adapted for the display of farming implements.

Said a reputable work horse breeder, who had traveled much from fair to fair with his stock, along with racing jockeys, and had taken a host of premiums, "I have never come across another business so vile as the racing at fairs, nor a set of men so vile as those engaged in it. I would as soon my little boy would see me go into a saloon and drink as see me raising trotting horses." And yet the reputable and religious farmers of the country allow themselves and their names to be used in getting up fairs where liquors are sold, gambling devices are licensed, the vilest women are assembled, and the association forms itself into a racing company, transforms its grounds into a race course, offers three-fourths of its premiums for race horses, invites its visitors to the betting stands, the pool selling, and all the vile concomitants of any race course, and sends them home fleeced to study how they may raise a little brute, worthless except to go a mile a second better than another horse with which other men may be fleeced. And all this is done in the name of progress, for the advancement of industry, and the instruction of the worker.

It is done by the most enterprising and reputable men, with the highest national official of the agricultural department in the lead, and with the aequiescence of the workers all over the land, and the silent assent of the religious press. And in consequence farmers throughout the land are led into the raising of trotting horses, the most useless and expensive of all efforts; and they are led away from the most useful and profitable, the raising of work horses. Their sons are introduced to drunkenness, gambling and debauchery, and many of them ruined; and no vigorous protest is raised against it, even by the religious papers.

Let it be made manifest—as can easily be done—that racing with its adjuncts is injurious to the horses in the land; that it is very unprofitable for the farmer; that it keeps him from the highest profits; that it depresses, degrades and impoverishes the farmers' festival, the agricultural fair; that it is only and wholly injurious everywhere; and it will cease to control the farmers' breeding, to monopolize his fairs and ruin his sons.

No other community, perhaps, has ever set its face like a flint against racing, as did the State of Vermont, until a recent date. And no other region probably has ever had as fine a stock of horses as had Vermont fifty years ago. When there was not a race course nor even a county fair track in the State, fifty miles with a light load was considered a moderate day's drive for a common horse; and sixty, seventy and eighty mile drives up and down the eastern hills were frequent; and one hundred mile drives were not unknown.

The British travel to Canada then landed at Bostou and went by stage through Vermont. And the travelers and civil and military officials who passed through the State all united in one general expression of wonder and delight at the unrivalled superiority of the Vermont horses.

In 1837, British regiments of cavalry (heavy dragoons) and artillery were sent to Canada to suppress the rebellion. They left their horses behind and were horsed from Vermont, and good English judges said that they were the best horsed regiments that they had ever seen. They took their Vermont horses with them when they returned to England, and similar opinions were there expressed, and were reiterated by a general officer after the Crimean war.

W. H. Herbert, a scion of the English nobility, a graduate of Cambridge, an English sporting gentleman, after using every facility for becoming thoroughly acquainted with the horses of Europe, and spending two or three fortunes, came to this country and spent the rest of his life. His tastes and proclivities led him to a most thorough study of the horses of America, and as "Frank Forrester," he wrote a great deal about them in constant contributions and as editor of the Gentleman's Magazine, and author of "The Horses of Ameriea." a magnificent two volume folio.

And although a raeing man and a constant eulogist of the raee horse, and a zealous advocate for his introduction into Vermont and everywhere else, he is most enthusiastic only when he speaks of the superiority of the Vermont horses for the road, for the military service and for draft. And this was when there was not a race course in the State, nor a racing instinct or effort in the breeding of the stock.

Immediately after this raee eourses under the name of country fair grounds, and the breeding of racers became universal throughout the land, and now there is no region, in Vermont or elsewhere, where the horses will bear such eulogies.

A few owners of noted trotters have made farmers by the hundreds tributary to them and have become wealthy; while the raising of horses has become a lottery in which, in the most favored localities, the broken horse at the age of five does not bring the first cost of the ticket one time in fifty!

Meanwhile a demand for work horses of every class has become urgent throughout the land, for our own and the European market. And if any one of our thousands of country societies had done as much for the roadster or the carriage horse or the draught horse, as is everywhere done to help the runner and trotter, it might have made the fortunes of its patrons. In one region, McLean county, Ill., the raising of draft horses has been tried for nearly twenty years. For a time it was carried on by one family of Quakers, the Dillons. They made it so profitable that others engaged in it; and now it is estimated that a million dollars' worth of draft horses are raised there every year. As they are sold a year or two younger than small horses, and with no expense for breaking or fitting, they cost no more to raise than small horses, and they sell for twice as much, bringing $200 as easily as the small horse does $100. If ten dollars of the half-price is profit, then $110 of the higher price is profit, or eleven times as much on a horse. But for the craze for racing speed, doubtless our work horses would have averaged one-fourth heavier and been worth twice as much. Let racing severely alone and in twenty years the average value of horses will be doubled, and the profit of raising them will be increased four-fold. —Interior.

FEVER and ACUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

HAND BOOK OF Freemasonry,
BY
E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 325 Chicago.

Gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the Lodge room, order of opening and closing the Lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustriated and explained. In short, it is

A Complete and Accurate Lodge Manual.

The high standing of Mr. Ronayne in the fraternity, his popularity and success as a teacher and lecturer in the Lodge, together with the testimony of high Masonic authority, leaves no doubt of the accuracy of this work. It is rapidly becoming a standard work in the hands of ACTING LODGE OFFICIALS, and those who desire to post themselves on the workings of the order. The price is so low that it is within the reach of all. Sent postpaid securely wrapped on receipt of price. 184 pages, Paper covers, 35 cents. Elegant cloth with beveled edges and gilt stamp, $1.00. IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.
By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A hook which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the hook, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.
Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—Wednesday Lasker resolutions reported to the House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs were adopted without division. The House also adopted resolutions cordially reciprocating the wishes of the Liberal Union of the German Parliament for a closer union of the two nations, recognizing its graceful appreciation of its sympathy with those who mourn the death of Edward Lasker, and accepting the resolutions adopted by the Liberal Union, and directing them to be spread on the journal.

—The pension appropriation bill was reported to the House Saturday. The estimates submitted amounted to $40,000,000. Of this amount the committee allows $20,684,400; the bill appropriates 60,000,000, making available a grand total of $80,684,400.

—A number of Southern ladies residing and sojourning in Washington held a meeting, heartily indorsing the Blair educational bill, and asking that Southern women indorse it in some public manner.

COUNTRY.

—The Ohio legislature Wednesday passed the bill declaring "future" deals in stocks, oils etc., to be gambling, making the buyer or seller guilty alike, and imposing a fine on the owner of the premises where the deals are carried on. The penalties for "margin" or "future" transactions are $50 to $1,000 fine, and thirty to ninety days' imprisonment.

—The United States Veterinary Association, at a meeting Tuesday at Boston, discussed the foot and mouth disease and resolved that to the carelessness and incompetency of the United States quarantine authorities at Portland, Me., is due the spread of the infection.

—The foot and mouth disease is alleged to have made its appearance in three herds in Maries county, Mo. An epidemic among cattle has appeared in the vicinity of Rockford, Ill., which kills them within twenty four hours, the carcasses becoming terribly bloated. Simon Beattie telegraphs from Neosho Falls, Kan., that he finds no symptoms of contagious foot and mouth disease in the herds there, the malady being the same which affects cattle in Illinois and Iowa.

—Near Perryville, N. Y., Thursday, a mixed train ran off the track, a passenger coach turning over three times, severely injuring six persons.

—An ice gorge in the Missouri River at Yankton has flooded the bottoms, driving the farmers and their stock to the bluffs, and washing away the railroad track and a bridge.

—A sulphur explosion Friday in the Enterprise colliery, near Mt. Carmel, Pa., killed three men and badly damaged the woodwork of the mine.

—On the explosion of a still in Meriam & Morgan's oil works at Cleveland Wednesday morning the escaping fluid took fire, and, submerging three employes, they were burned to death in presence of many other persons, who were unable to render any assistance.

—While insane at Oakland, Cal., Wednesday night, Mrs. John Schaefer cut her own and her baby's throat. When the husband saw the corpses he also attempted suicide, and a lady was so shocked at the gory scene that she became a raving maniac.

—Andrew Peterson, an avowed polygamist, is on trial at Salt Lake City for registering and voting in violation of the Edmunds law. Seven polygamists are on the jury, who swore that they believed polygamy was revealed, and that they would obey God rather than Congress.

—At Cape May court house, N. J., Monday evening, the 18-year-old son of George Grace poisoned his father, mother and four other members of the family, with "Rough on Rats." The aid of a physician speedily relieved the older persons, but an infant brother of the prisoner is in a precarious condition. The youth thought that by killing off the household he could secure his father's property.

—Near Salem, Ohio, early Thursday morning, the Chicago limited express train rushed into a landslide, which derailed the cars, the locomotive plunging down an embankment and immediately exploding. The engineer and fireman were killed, and three persons were seriously and many others slightly injured. The escape of the passengers is accounted miraculous.

FOREIGN.

—A London dispatch of the 19th says: Tribal rising in Egypt is general from Kassola to Berber. The Arabs between Corosko and Assouan are also threatening to revolt. Sheikh Soliman, with a section of the Haddendowas, who fought at El Teb, will reoccupy Baker Pasha fort near Trinkitat. Osman Digma's force around Taminah has been increased by 3,500. Only two Sheikhs have gone to Suakim. Their tribes are small, numbering less than 1,500 combatants. Their adhesion is very deceptive.

—A later dispatch says: News has just been received that General Gordon has just had a successful encounter with the rebels. He steamed down the river to Halifiyeh, a small town on the Nile, which was surrounded by the Arabs in thousands. General Gordon succeeded in fighting his way to the town against great numbers, rescued the garrison, and brought them back in safety to Khartoum.

—Saturday was the eighty-seventh anniversary of the Emperor William's birthday, and it was celebrated with great enthusiasm at Berlin.

—Dispatches received at Paris Mar. 22, report the capture by the French troops in Tonquin of the town of Thainguien. The Chinese made a very weak defense of the town, and finally fled; leaving the French in possession of a very large quantity of military stores, provisions and ammunition. Several hundred Chinese were killed, but not one of the French force was injured.

The vote of the House of Representatives last Thursday, against a longer delay of the payment of the tax due from distillers for some 80,000,000 gallons of their poison held in United States bonded warehouses, was a proper acknowledgement of the temper of the country toward these manufactories of "distilled damnation." This tax now amounts to $72,000,000, and the payment of it will ruin many of the distillers financially; but such a reverse of fortune will be one of the greatest of blessings to them if thereby they are led to see the enormous guilt of their business and repent of it.

The action of our executive, upon a demand from Cardinal McCloskey and other prelates of the Romish church to interpose for the pope, should arouse some apprehension and deserves rebuke. By order of the Italian government the property of the Romish Propaganda was ordered to be sold for unpaid taxes, the Supreme Court of the kingdom having approved the sale. Part of this property was known as the American College, an institution founded upon and supported by gifts to the pope from this country. President Arthur was asked to interfere and prevent the sale of the college and if possible of the whole property. The audacity of such a demand can be explained only by supposing that McCloskey believes that the Romish hierarchy in this country have privileges which no Protestant sect would claim; and the interference of President Arthur in saving the college gives them a good reason for their belief.

The mob in Cincinnati for three nights and two days, whose spirit could not be broken until the blood of seventy-five dead and twice as many wounded men reddened the pavements of that city is a fearful picture for the contemplation of Americans. The mob was not an ordinary outpouring of the slums, but was in large part composed of reputable citizens, and the death roll testifies to their superior character. The Music Hall meeting Friday night was called by the first citizens of the city. Nor was the indignation of these men aroused by a trifling or low motive, as when the New York dens poured out human tigers thirsting for a black man's blood twenty years ago, or in 1877 in Chicago and Pittsburg a little money, more or less, was the motive for ravage and bloodshed. The protest of these men was against a fearful evil—one that assails the very life of society. The vigilance committees of the early days of San Francisco and Virginia City had the same evil to meet or give their own throats to the knife. If knaves at the bar and accomplices in the jurybox are to set free or give only a nominal punishment to murderers, as has been done constantly for years in Chicago and other cities, what protection have peaceful men, unless they take the administration of justice out of the hands of lodge-sworn judges and juries and care for it themselves. This was the protest of Cincinnati and all the towns of southern Ohio, which were ready to lynch the escaped murderer had he fallen into their hands.

WILLIAM WIRT.

The citizens of Lincoln, Ill., made a similar protest last Friday evening against a neighbor, Orrin A. Carpenter, whom they believe has murdered a young girl after accomplishing her ruin—an aggravated Ellen Slade case. A jury in an adjoining county had just acquitted him, and these people who had been his neighbors and business acquaintances for years, see with horror and indignation the perversion of law and justice, breaking down the defenses set up around every home. With one voice they denounce the acquittal of Carpenter as the cap sheaf in the harvest of infamy. They oppose mob violence, but denounce the criminal practice of the State as a disgrace to the intelligence of the people, and a reproach to the civilization of the age, and set forth the necessity of the people acting for themselves, unless a reform is soon brought about. They resolve

"That, thoroughly believing in the guilt of O. A. Carpenter of the murder of Zura Burns, and concurring in the almost unanimous voice of the people of this county, we dispassionately but firmly demand of the said Carpenter that he leave Logan County without delay, and we commend our fellow citizens everywhere to 'lash the rascal naked through the world;' so that if the image of his victim does not soften his calloused heart, the sting of public opinion will teach him that the way of the transgressor is hard."

These indignation meetings pour out execration upon the flagrant incompetency and perjury of juries, the villainy of lawyers, the venality of judges, the defects of criminal codes; but they carefully neglect to inquire into the causes which lie back of and which are like rich soil to the roots of these abuses which, appearing above ground, they seize upon to drag out and destroy, when presently a fresh crop springs up. Were they careful to inquire they would find the oaths of the secret lodge to be the support and stay of the corruption of courts. Carpenter was a Mason, and when first accused of the crime his lodge friends, it was openly published, stood by him. They were not likely to cease in the effort to clear him, when once the job was undertaken. It is the same story from one end of the land to the other; judges, sheriffs, constables, lawyers, juries—the whole machinery of our courts is more or less controlled by this fearful power of the lodge; and to this power we must charge a great part of the abuses which are causing a demand from peaceable citizens for a revolution of our courts of justice. It is upon the altar of the lodge that Cincinnati has just poured out the blood of over two hundred dead and wounded victims. But who shall tell that great city the fact so that she shall hear and believe it?

The British Parliament needs a visit from a Woman's Christian Temperance Union committee. It would tend to modify the manners of some of the members who have lately received the notice of special correspondents. Sir Richard Ashton Cross, they tell us, spoke upon the abolition of episcopal legislative power when "gloriously drunk," "wallowing" about in his place, and finally sitting down on his hat and holding out the crushed tile for the amusement of the Commons who responded with roars of laughter. Sir Robert Peel, who bears a great name most unworthily, and is brother of the new Speaker of the Commons, it is written, drinks, gambles and swaggers like our Congressional bully from Texas, T. Ochiltree. It is a spectacle to make one weep—the House of Commons roaring with laughter at the jokes of a drunken man speaking formally on a serious question of state: and our own House of Representatives presents often as grievous spectacles.

THE FIRST ANTI-MASONIC CANDIDATE.

LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF WILLIAM WIRT.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

William Wirt was born Nov. 8th, 1772. His parents, who were in moderate circumstances, died when he was yet a child. He received a careful education and studied law with Benjamin Edwards, the father of Ninian Edwards, the first Territorial governor, and afterwards U. S. Senator from Illinois. With the Edwards, father and son, he maintained constant friendship and correspondence.

Mr. Wirt was early distinguished for legal acumen and forensic ability, and was retained by the government in the celebrated trial of Aaron Burr and Blennerhassett for treason. In his early manhood he moved to Virginia and was repeatedly elected to the legislature of that State, though he subsequently returned to Maryland. He was the intimate friend of John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe and John Quincy Adams. With the last two he was a constitutional adviser. Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, and many other distinguished men shared his friendship.

On the inauguration of Mr. Monroe, March, 1817, he was made Attorney General, and held that office for twelve consecutive years during the administrations of Monroe and J. Q. Adams, and longer than any other Cabinet officer. After the close of his official term he continued to practice with great ability in the Supreme Court of the United States up to near the time of his death, which was January 8th, 1834. He was not only an able lawyer, but a fine writer. His Life of Patrick Henry has been deservedly popular.

But William Wirt will be best and longest remembered for his defence of the Cherokee Indians and their missionaries against the State of Georgia, and his espousal of the Anti-masonic reform. It will be remembered that the Cherokees had their home in Northern Georgia and through the labors of missionaries had made great advancement in Christian civilization. They had their farms, orchards, schoolhouses, and churches, and were steadily pursuing the arts of peace. But Georgia slave-holders wanted their lands, and that State passed acts which had for their object to expel these Indians from their country, and drive them west of the Mississippi. In vain did they appeal to the language of solemn treaties; in vain did the missionaries protest against the destruction of all their labors. Georgia was backed by the entire slave-holding interest, which was made against them.

It is a remarkable fact that President Jackson held one idea of State sovereignty in South Carolina, and quite another for Georgia. Nullification was put down in the former State, but when he was appealed to in behalf of treaty engagements, he declared he could not interfere with the acts of a sovereign State. Among these legislative acts was one forbidding any white person from residing in the Indian territory, except by written permission of the Governor of the State and an oath of fealty to its laws. Its object was to expell the missionaries; and its penalty was imprisonment for four years in the penitentiary. Under this law seven missionaries were arrested, tried, and sentenced to four years imprisonment. Five of them were pardoned on their promise of fealty to Georgia law, but two of them, Worcester and Butler, refused to make any compromise, and took an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. William Wirt plead their case before that court, which, with but one dissenting voice, and that on technical grounds, declared the act of the legislature under which they were convicted, unconstitutional and void. Georgia however, paid no respect to the mandate of the Supreme Court, but kept the men in prison nearly two years longer. At last they were released by pardon, the Governor of Georgia declaring that he "would sooner hang the missionaries than release them at the mandate of the Supreme Court."

The history of this great outrage does not come within the scope of this sketch, but I may add, that the Indians were driven from their homes, and treason triumphed. It was a fitting retribution, that a nation that could thus suffer its treaties to be set aside, and its laws trampled on at the dictation of slave-holders, should also suffer from a slave-holder's rebellion.

In Septemper of 1831, the National Anti-masonic Convention met in the city of Baltimore. Mr. Wirt said of it, that it was composed of men of unquestioned patriotism and of the highest order of intelligence and character. It was the first Presidential nominating convention that was ever held in this country. The most prominent candidates at that time were President Jackson for re-election, and Henry Clay; both distinguished Masons. Most of the Anti-masons were friends of Clay, and had appealed to him to espouse their cause; but he repelled their overtures with disdain. The unanimous choice of the convention was William Wirt for President, and Amos Ellmaker of Pennsylvania, Viee President, who were immediately notified of their nomination. Mr. Wirt replied at once, in a long letter of aeceptance. He would have rejoiced if they had selected some other canditate, but he could not be blind to the facts, that in the Morgan trials Freemasonry had, in the language of the distinguished statesman of New York, "trampled on every government it could not eontrol." He had been a Mason in his early life, but for thirty years had not entered a lodge, and had given the subjeet no attention. It was only from a sense of duty to his country that he felt constrained to accept a position that would bring upon him the malignant opposition of a powerful organization. In his letter of aceeptance he said that he was foreed to believe that the abduction and murder of Morgan "was not the act of a few ignorant men, but was engendered in the lodges themselves, enforced under their direetion, and supported at their expense," the conspiracy embracing within its sweep men of all degrees. There is much reason to believe "that the secret energy of the Masonic spirit had entered and polluted even the temples of justice, and that the persons who entertained these unhallowed oaths, considered their allegiance to the lodges as of higher obligation than their allegianee to the country." He adds, "If this is Masonry (and I see no reason to doubt it) it is at war with the fundamental principles of the social eompact, treason against society and a wicked conspiraey against the laws of God and man that ought to be put down." "No man of common prudence can sleep over these diseoveries."

In the subsequent election Andrew Jackson received 219 eleetoral votes; Mr. Clay, 49; Floyd, 11 (the South Carolina vote); and Wirt 7 (the vote of Vermont). Every effort was made to cajole the Anti-masons into the two great political parties, but 228,000 stood firm, and voted for Wirt and Ellmaker. In this and subsequent elections the Anti-masonic party elected William Slade, Governor of Vermont, William H. Seward, Governor of New York, and Joseph Ritner, Governor of Pennsylvania. The decadenee and dissolution of the party resulted from two causes: first, the suspension of a large majority of the lodges in the North, leading the people to think that Masonry had practically eeased to exist, and the rapid development of the question of slavery, whieh gave new direction to public sentiment and whieh finally culminated in the slave-holder's rebellion. There is little doubt that Masonry, which in the South had scarcely felt the force of the Northern protest, made common cause with slavery, and was an important factor in inaugurating and prolonging the war.

In spite of his espousal of an unpopular reform, no man in the nation was more universally respected than Mr. Wirt. At his death both Houses of Congress adjourned and then gathered around his grave; Adams, Jackson, Calhoun, Clay, Van Buren, Marshall, Story, Webster, Southard, Taney, Woodbury, Everett, Cass, Scott, and many others of eminence; and all paid the tribute of profound regard.

The influences that could produce such a man as Mr. Wirt are seen first in the character of his mother, who, though she died when he was eight years old, left her impress on his mind. He says of her, "She was a deeply religious woman, a great reader of religious books; I have often seen her reading her Bible with streaming eyes and voice ehoked with emotion." Under such influences Mr. Wirt grew up with profound regard for religion, and in his latter years (though not attached to any sect) he was an earnest Christian. It is known that he maintained family worship and manifested much fervency in prayer. We get a glimpse of his taste for profound religious truth from the following extract from a letter to his daughter: "I took up Baxter's Saint's Rest and found it like an old sandal-wood box, as fresh and fragrant as if it had just been made, although it has been exhaling its odor for 180 years."

He was an earnest advocate of the temperance reform, and wrote, "I know not the evil that will bear a moment's comparison with intemperance."

The memory of sueh a man is embalmed in the history of his country, as one who was not severed from the purity of his principles by the loftiness of his station, and who dared to do right amidst the frowns of the powerful.

A DOG THAT BITES HIS MASTER.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

I have a few more things to say about that Masonic dog, "perjury," which I briefly described in my last. I shall begin where I left off when I closed my last letter.

The charge of perjury against anyone is a very serious thing; for a religious assembly to make the charge is a very doubtful Christian proceeding, to say the least. But, after all, what else can we expect where all but two or three of the male members of a ehurch are oath-bound seeretists, and those who are not, at least friendly to them? The "perjured man," however, might turn upon them and argue as follows:

"You say, if I am a seceded Mason, and, as such, stand up before an intelligent audienee and tell them what I know and think about Masonry, I am a 'perjured man.' Why? How can you prove your assertion? There is only one way to prove it, and that is by showing that I told the truth, and that I was bound by an oath not to reveal the truth to any one. If you, to make the charge of perjury good, assert that what I divulged is true, you are yourselves 'perjured wretches,' for you are under oath always to conceal and never to reveal the secrets of Masonry. You have revealed as much as I have, and, hence, if I am guilty of perjury you are even more so, because you regard your oath as binding, and I do not."

I have just been (for the second time) reading your little pamphlet entitled: "Masonry a Work of Darkness," by Rev. L. Armstrong, a Presbyterian minister and a seceded Mason of twenty-one degrees. It ought to be cireulated extensively; especially among Christians, and among Masons professing to believe in the religion of Christ.

On page 10 of this little book the author gives us the "Five Points of Masonic Fellowship, with their illustrations." A very brief examination of these Five Points will convince any candid and observant mind that there is probably not a Mason living who has not—and that repeatedly—perjured himself. Let me to meet, the charge of rashness in advance, give the reader a few points of proof:

"Knee to knee—'I promise and swear that I will never forget to pray for a Master Mason, when on my knees.'"

Now, any man who does not intend to perform this part of his oath, always and everywhere, perjures himself in the very act of taking the Masonic oath. Failing, by reason of ignoranee, carelessness, or willful neglect, to keep and perform this "Point" of the oath, always and everywhere, brings the crime and guilt of perjury upon the soul of the delinquent "Hiramite;" even though he be a presiding Elder, Bishop, or "Doctor" presiding over a theological seminary. Again, the deluded vietim swears to "support and promote a Master Mason's interest," if in his power.

Though strongly tempted so to do I will not now say anything as to the fact that this solemn Masonic "promise and swear," under a death penalty, is a duty common to all the human race. As a member of the human family and of civilized society, and as a citizen of my country, I am duty-bound to seek and to promote "my neighbor's" interest and well-being, if in my power.

Every Mason takes an oath to do this to Masons only. If he fails, wholly or in part, designedly or otherwise, to keep and to perform this "Point" of his oath, he is guilty of perjury. And more: if his Masonic brethren do not execute upon him, for such violation of his oath, the penalty of "Death," they are themselves "perjured wretches."

That Masons do violate, openly, boldly and persistently, these points of Masonic fellowship, who can doubt? I could name several "Royal Arch" Masons who are guilty of perjury on this, as they no doubt are on other points. I have known Masons to not only neglect to "promote a Master Mason's interest," but actually, and willfully, to seek his harm, in politics and in business. I have known this to happen even among Masonic members of a church.

So much on the eharge of "perjury" made by Masons against Anti-masons, or "seceders."

SHORT SERMON.

Text:—The law maketh men high priests.

My Brethren:—While it is all proper to be imitators of Christ and his apostles, it is an awful blasphemy to be mockers or mimics of them. The Freemason is a mocker of Christ and his holy doctrine.

For what maketh the Masonic high priest? Why, it is the oath; for it is his oath that maketh a Freemason. But was it not also the oath that made Christ our High Priest? Thus the Freemason mocks Christ, by imposing an oath upon a rumseller or a scoffer and making a high priest of him! And the religion which this Masonic high priest administers is claimed to be better than the religion of Christ. Men are taught to do good in the name of the Masonic religion instead of in the name of Christ.

Under the old Jewish religion the law made high priests; but these Masonie high priests are better than the Jewish high priests, because they are made by the Masonic oath, which is an awful, immaculate and inviolable thing! It is death to violate this awful oath! There is nothing so sacred as the Masonic oath! The oath administered by the law of the land is nothing in comparison with it!

My friends, such are the claims of an infidel set of Freemasons; and what is wonderful is, that probably a majority of the Christian elergy of the United States acknowledge these elaims, and serve Masonie high priests. These elergy doubtless read and reread the seventh and eighth ehapters of Hebrews, and even take texts from them, as we have done; and still they uphold the idea that Freemasonry is a new and better covenant with God than Christianity. The high priests of Freemasonry are better than the high priest that sits on the right hand of God! for is not the kingdom of heaven a Grand Lodge above to which the Masonic high priest alone holds the key?

My brethren, the inventors of Freemasonry were a shrewd, crafty, learned set of men, who had great contempt for religious faith, and thought that it would swallow anything. But cunning as their workmanship is, the minister of Christ ought not to be deceived by it. No one is fit to serve at the altars of Christ who suffers himself to be hoodwinked. He is a blind guide who is leading you into the ditch. Therefore, before engaging that man to preaeh for you; make him ascend into the pulpit, and there, before the whole world, tear off the bandages from his eyes by his own hands, and confess to the light, and that alone, which is in Jesus. If he prefers to keep on his hoodwink, out of love for darkness rather than light, then depart from him, and turn him over to the devils of the Grand Lodge below, who want his head for a foot-ball. So Mote it be!

INSPIRED COURAGE.

BY MILTON F. COE.

"They can conquer who believe they can" is a maxim of antiquity. "All things are possible to him that believeth" is a divine utterance. Courage inspired by faith is the great motive-power of success. One devoid of eourage is like a cork upon the water, tossed by every rippling wave. He will do nothing. His nature is wholly passive. Without faith in his friend a man would not have the eourage to stand as his bondman for $50,000. Lack of courage causes one to follow Fox's advice, "Never do today what by any possibility can be put off till tomorrow." Such men never surmount the obstacles which lie in their path, but always stop at them unless they find an easy passage around.

A few years since in the city of Lynn, Mass., during a public disturbance, twenty policemen cowed and held in subjection a crowd of about three thousand persons, the mob was led by men who were determined to do violence, especially to the policemen. Armed with clubs, bricks and other weapons of defence, the riotous crowd advanced to the attack, expecting to overwhelm the little band of opponents at the first onset. Instead of yielding, the latter were only more determined to maintain public peace. The policemen passed fearlessly into the heat and center of the crowd, faced the flying bricks and bullets and seizing the ringleaders with a grip that sent a shock of trepidation through the whole rebellious throng. It was the triumph of a few courageous men over an irresolute host.

We see about us scores of men sinking to their graves in obscurity simply because they lack pluck to make the first effort, men who, would they only take courage, might astonish the world by their achievements and success. The fact is as Sidney Smith has well said, "That in order to do anything in the world that is worth doing, we must not stand shivering at the brink and thinking of the cold and danger, but jump in and scramble through as best we can." Every man must conquer the obstacles and perplexities he meets or they will conquer him. I think it is safe to say that all great men are men of courage.

While it is true that courage cannot be created by human effort, it should be remembered that every man possesses the germ of this quality which can be cultivated by carefully presenting to the mind favorable circumstances and motives. It is also true that this gift may be obtained, as all good gifts may be, in direct answer to prayer.

That element should be sought after and cultivated which not only inspires us to stand against approaching danger but also inspires us with courage to oppose all wrong of whatever form or character. One has truly said "The noblest courage is the courage to do right." Then let us dare to do right though the heavens fall.

PADDLING AND PRAYING.

Said Thomas Jones, an old colored preacher; "When I was escaping from slavery, and found myself out on the ocean, I prayed God to help me, and he did help me. I found some boards and got on to them. Well, what did I do then? Did I stop praying, and think because I had got a few boards I could go alone now, and didn't need the Lord's help any more? No! I kept on praying, and held on to the boards. Well, what did I do then? Sit still, and expect the Lord to carry me safely through, and think that I had nothing to do? No! I took a stick for a paddle, and went to paddling and praying. I did not sit still, like those who have a name to live, and are dead; but I just went to paddling, and I did not forget to pray; and by paddling and praying I got through. So God expects us to pray and also to paddle, and not wait for him to do the work that he has set us to do."

There is sound philosophy in the old man's talk. Paddling is needful, as well as praying; and a more ancient teacher once declared that "Faith without works is dead, being alone."

Moderate Drinking.—A young man, with an inherited taste for liquor, was at a Masonic festival, where was present also an English clergyman who was in the habit of freely drinking beer. He called for a bottle, and offered a glass to the young man: "Mr. Cushing, have a glass of wine with me." I looked at him and said, "Don't you touch it." Said the clergyman, sneeringly, "Are you his mental adviser? I hope you are able to take a glass without making a fool of yourself." The young man said: "If my pastor can drink, so can I." He took it. At the end of three weeks he died of strong drink. During his delirium he exclaimed, in his agony, "God won't damn me for drinking unless he also damns Dr. Richmond." That minister murdered my friend, but he walks the earth to-day unhung.—Mrs. Molloy.

The religion of Freemasonry is sometimes quite different from the religion of Christianity. The one is secret, the other is for every person in the whole world. The two religions are professed by a single man very often but it would be as easy to serve God and mammon as Christ and Masonry. To escape censure on this point it is often denied that Masonry is a religion, but what then mean such common phrases as these: "The Beautiful new Temple" for . . . . Masonry "was CONSECRATED" at such a time with all the attractions of music, etc., to entice people into its approval.

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

Chapter V.—Which answers the query.

During the second evening perfect order and quiet prevailed. Mr. Vallance and his party, with some others, were not present. A suggestion was made, at the saloon where they congregated, to use the "rotten-egg argument" in opposition to the propositions of the speaker, but this hint was not acted upon. Truth to tell the party had left the church the previous evening before the close of the lecture to carry out such a project, but the eggs were not forthcoming, neither could any be found in the stores. With a dim apprehension that "that fool Dan Thompson" had outwitted him, Mr. Vallance resolved to give himself no trouble about the second lecture, so beyond a visit enmasse to the precincts of the church, hallooing, shouting and throwing against the building an occasional stone or stick of cord wood, nothing further was attempted. And thus, strange as it may seem (and yet not strange, if we accept Uncle Job's version of the matter, that "the Lord himself took charge of those two meetings"), in a hotbed of secretism the worship of Baal was decried and there was none to gainsay the warning.

Elder Kemp did not attend either meeting. He was visited by his brother in the ministry, who with earnest prayer and humble admonition endeavored to persuade him to exclusive fellowship with Christ and his church, but it was of no avail. The demon of the Lodge, that emissary of the Prince of Darkness, whispered to him the same falsehood breathed to one of old, "Thou shalt not surely die!" and, though he did not realize the fact, he had, in the language of Uncle Job, "backslid over it."

I say he did not realize it; in fact he rather considered himself something of a martyr, and, after having received the condolations of his brethren in the lodge, and found his church pews filled with sympathizers, quite a good deal of a hero.

A small room in the village accommodated the few who met together to worship on the Sabbath following the lectures. Elder Lowly had consented to remain over that day and at the close of the "powerful meeting", during which several persons evinced their desire to become Christiens, it was intimated that now was the propitious time in which to begin a series of gospel meetings, and accordingly appointments for each evening of the week were made.

It is not our purpose to follow the little band through this week of meetings nor through those that followed; to detail how the little room was nightly filled with listeners, many of whom came actuated with a desire to know "what those few Anti-masonic folks could do in the line of getting people converted"; and how Carrie and Debbie, Tom, Daniel and Mark Dee were the first fruits of that effort. Suffice it to say that through persecution and opposition of various kinds the work went steadily on in the hands of those who appropriated to themselves these words of the Most High, "Come out from among them and be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

During the second week of this meeting a festival for the benefit of the Rev. Mr. Kemp engrossed the minds of a large number of the Lodgeville people. It was to be "a grand affair." The Masonic hall was secured for the purpose and no pains spared to show that gentleman their appreciation of the course he had pursued. Is it to be wondered at that the festival in the course of the evening became a regular dance, or that Elder Kemp felt himself utterly powerless to stem the tide?

To this festival Carrie was invited by Mr. Vallance, but her answer was characteristic of herself: "Thank you, No. The fact of your being a Mason must be a barrier to future association between us. If what Elder Lowly says respecting Masonry is true, and father says it is, I advise you to have no more to do with it." His reply was a contemptuous curl of the lip, and later, in the saloon, where he met his companions, her name was bandied from mouth to mouth in coarse jest.

Five years have passed. The old church still stands in Lodgeville, but another occupies the desk,—for Elder Kemp, followed by the prayers of those faithful few who had once been his parishoners, found great unrest till to the "fountain of cleansing" he came to be healed, and severed the chains which bound him to all worship but that of the Triune God. His successor is a worldly man, proud of his talents and imputed popularity (for somehow he is not sufficiently appreciated at Lodgeville) while his church exhibits in "pomp and pride" what it lacks in spiritual power.

The "little Anti-masonic church" has grown to one of huge proportions whose influence is felt far and wide. The few devotees of the lodge on surrendering its charter declared that it could not thrive in the midst of such a set of fanatics. The rum-seller moved his location, as he could make no money at Lodgeville,—and besides, serious objections in the form of votes were made to its further continuance. The billiard hall followed suit. Those to whom "tripping the light fantastic toe" is still a pastime are obliged to seek congenial spirits in another town. In short the moral and religious aspect of Lodgeville is completely changed.

The Thompson household numbers now but three persons. Mrs. Mark Dee and Mrs. Tom Rees often run home though to "see mother" and "help her a little." Mr. Trowley is as liberal as of yore and Daniel Thompson, who often laughs softly to himself when he thinks of the effect of his newspaper paragraph in bygone days, though he is a man of few words, can, so his father says, preach the best private sermon he ever heard from the text, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

THE END.

EMILY FAITHFUL ON MORMONISM.

Miss Emily Faithful the eminent social reformer, has been visiting this country and spoke to a large audience in Central Music Hall, Chicago, last week. She has corresponded during her American tour with the London Lady's Pictorial, to which she wrote lately of her observations in Utah:

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 26.

When Brigham Young and his Mormon followers were driven from Nauvoo in 1847, he started with a band of pioneers to find "fresh fields and pastures new," and following for several hundred miles a trapper's trail he reached the summit of the Wasatch Mountains, and there lay before him the beautiful valley which extends some forty miles to the Great Salt Lake. No wonder that the keen eye of the "prophet" at once discerned his opportunities, and that he resolved to build up his "Zion" on this fertile spot. The territory really belonged to Mexico, but Brigham Young hoisted the United States flag, and under the banner of religion established a temporal power which his followers retain to the present hour The Temple Block is the sacred square of the Latter Day Saints, and covers ten acres. Here stands the famous Tabernacle, which seats about ten thousand people, and contains a wonderful organ; near it is the Assembly Hall, which is used for religious services during the winter, and the mysterious Endowment House, into which no Gentile is allowed to penetrate. In this, Mormons are baptized with ceremonies which, to the unconverted, are certainly more honored in the breach than the observance; for they not only include wholesale immersion, but anointing with green olive oil. A garment is then put on which is entirely, as it is supposed to keep the wearer from sickness and even death; so when a clean one is required the "saints" are to slip out a limb at a time. Here, too, is enacted the drama of the Garden of Eden, and the marriages for time and for eternity take place in what is called the "sealing room." We attended the chief service on Sunday, which included the administration of the sacrament—to me one of the most irreverent ceremonies I ever witnessed. It went on while the sermon was being preached. Twelve elders, standing behind a long table, breaking up bread as fast as they could, which was handed round the entire congregation by young men, who followed with silver flagons containing water. The preacher broke off his discourse to partake of each as they passed along the dais on which he stood among the other bishops and apostles who occupied the raised platform above the sacramental table. Behind them sat President Taylor, on whom Brigham Young's mantle has descended.

The hymn which preceded the ceremony commenced:

Behold the great Redeemer die,
A broken law to satisfy;
He dies a sacrifice for sin,
That man may live and glory win.

The sermon, which lasted nearly two hours, was on repentance, faith, baptism, and the laying on of hands, described as the four first principles of the gospel taught by Joseph Smith, for which the saints had been persecuted and would be till the end of the world. Then followed the doctrine of "redemption beyond the grave," which the preacher maintained "was a plan of salvation broad enough to admit all who have lived in the past or who are to come in the future, and ought at once to induce honest and good people to view the religion of the Latter Day Saints with favor." But he warned his hearers to expect for God had determined to have a "tried people;" but in spite of all persecution the kingdom of God would be built up by the hands of the apostles, for "it is not," he said, "a struggle between the 150,000 Latter Day Saints and the world any more than it was a contest between Luther and the priests, but it is a conflict between truth and error, right and wrong." Nothing could exceed the courtesy shown me by the leading Mormons, and the President gave a large luncheon party in my honor at the Guardo House, once known as the "Amelia Palace," for it was built by Brigham Young for his favorite wife—his thirteenth! President Taylor is a Cumberland man, and his chief counsellor is from Liverpool, George Q. Cannon. When we arrived at the house one of the daughters met us, and on entering the drawing room the President presented me to a lady, "one of my wives," being the strange formulary. We soon found ourselves in the thick of apostles, priests and priestesses. Foremost among the latter was "Sister Eliza Snow," the Mormon poetess, who celebrated her eightieth birthday two or three days previously, but who has lost none of her vigor or enthusiasm, as she fully showed in an effort she made at the conclusion of the luncheon for my conversion. Opposite me sat Joseph F. Smith nephew of the Mormon founder, and next him a lady from Stockport "sealed" to President Taylor for the life to come. Both of them alluded to their relationship, and regretted I did not see the value of forming associations which would last throughout eternity. It is impossible to convey any idea of my strange experiences both during this visit and the calls I received from the "plural wives"—as the ladies living in polygamy are called—who declared they found peace and happiness in thus "doing the Lord's will" crucifying the "earthly selfishness" which induces a Gentile wife to claim the undivided love and attention of her husband. But one cannot look into their faces without they have gone through, and the expression "kissing the Lord's rod," which is perpetually on their lips, is an unconscious but pathetic betrayal of the heartaches experienced in the efforts to accept practically the doctrine taught by their so-called "spiritual" pastors and masters, namely, that a woman cannot hope for "exaltation in the life to come" save through the intervention of the man to whom she is married or "sealed." The Mormons boast that not only does the first wife give her "consent" to the other marriages, but she actually takes part in the ceremony, and is quite willing that her husband should thus increase his importance in the church, which he does in exact proportion to the number of wives he has. But not only had I the testimony of some—given in fear and trembling and under the promise that I would not reveal their names—that such consent was forced, but I hold the copy of a sermon preached by Brigham Young himself, in which he says: "It is frequently stated that the women are not happy. Men will say, 'My wife, though an excellent woman, has not seen a happy day since I took another wife;'" and then after an indignant protest, this gentleman, who had nineteen wives in Salt Lake City itself and many more throughout Utah, gave "the women" as he termed them, "his wives as well as the rest," a fortnight to think over it. They were to settle down to their duties without murmuring and whining, or to go their ways. "They must do one of two things," said the preacher, "round up their shoulders to endure the afflictions of this world and or they may leave. I will go into heaven alone rather than have them fighting and scratching around me." How could the victims of the system go forth into the wilderness with their children? They naturally succumbed to Brigham Young, who was one of the greatest despots that ever lived, and even under the gentle sway of the present day you can see by the depressed faces of the wives the martyrdom they are passing through. How best to free them is another matter. Here and there a woman has had sufficient courage to take her life in her own hands and go forth with her children from the home to which another wife has been brought, but these women are exceptionally brave, and pen cannot describe the sufferings and privations they have encountered.

TRIBULATION IN THIS WORLD,

The government has hitherto failed to deal with this outrage of its laws, and the rectifying influences of moral and intellectual forces have had but little effect.

No one can hate more than I do the employment of force and law against mistaken beliefs in religion and politics, but polygamy as practised in Utah, is a crime against nature involving such terrible degradation, that those who have the interests of women at heart can never rest satisfied until they have freed from the worst form of slavery the heart of man ever yet invented and justified on Biblical and religious grounds. Brigham street is from end to end filled with the residences of Brigham Young's widows and children. Two adjoining houses are occupied by two of his daughters and their numerous families. Both these sisters are married to one man. I could give other instances, but forbear.

Emily Faithfull.

Venerable Relic.—At a sale of books a few days since in New York city, a copy of the second edition of the Bible, as translated into the Indian language by John Eliot, was disposed of for $950. It is one of three of this edition known to be in existence, the other two being in public libraries. It was published at Cambridge in 1685, and the English title says: "Printed by the Commissioners of the United Colonies in New England, at the Charge, and with the Consent of the Corporation in England, for the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the Indians in New England."

—At the Minister's Association of Newberry, S. C., recently, the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the pastors of the several churches in the town of Newberry, do hereby express our sincere and profound conviction, that indulgence in the modern dance, on the part of professing Christians, is detrimental to their religious influence, hurtful to their spirituality and tends to moral evil; and we do, therefore, most earnestly and affectionately urge the members of our churches to abstain from this worldly amusement.

FROM THE ORIENT.

LETTERS FROM GREECE AND ASIA MINOR.

FROM BRO. A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

Andros, Greece, Via Syra, Feb. 15, 1884.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—I wrote to you that my wife was very dangerously ill. With the help of God she is well. In her dangerous case I saw very plainly the hand of God. The best doctor of the city whom I called came twice; but it seems as though it would have been the same if he had not come at all, because he did not help us in the case at all. I did not undertake to do anything [Bro. Zaraphonithes is an educated physician.—Ed.] for if I had, and anything had happened to my wife, I would have been accused by the doctor and the people as being very cruel to her. But I had faith that the Lord who had delivered us from many troubles and sorrows would also deliver me from this present distress. So her recovery was through faith and prayer, and I believe that one day, which was her most critical day, he heard my prayers and my tears and saved her life. What man thinks and says and what God does! For every thing which took place was just the opposite of what the doctor said it would be; and as he wanted me to write and tell him how my wife got along after he left, I wrote and told him all about it, and it seems that he got surprised and did not give me any answer. He got a plenty of money from us but did not help us any. I always believed, and so I do now, that God only can save us from all dangers. This has been my faith, and it will continue to be as long as I live.

We have written to you about the priests of this place, and that they were enemies to our religion. In this last sickness of my wife nobody did so much for us as the wife of the priest who is our nearest neighbor. She came regularly every day, and two or three times a day during her long sickness. And that night when my wife was in such a critical condition she stayed here all night. Thus a sister could not do more than she did for us in that time. Unfortunately, two days ago, this same woman was taken very suddenly with convulsions. She had about ten convulsions in two or three hours, one following the other. Providentially I happened to be there immediately after the first convulsion. By using some medicines and so on the woman recovered, and she tells to her friends that Mr. Zaraphonithes saved her life. You can see what feeble instrumentalities God uses to make us not only good friends with these priests, but even more than that.

It may seem to many that there is not much material in what I write, but there are many of the American people who lack faith, and I want them to see what great results God brings from very small means. For it is not a very easy matter to be good friends with these priests, for our religion is a foe to them.

Two weeks ago a priest visited us from the nearest monastery. The same priest in the time past has said many things against me. He was sent to me now by a retired bishop and by the head monk of the monastery. He suffers lately from convulsions, and he came and begged of me to help him in this distress. He got very much frightened and became melancholy and almost a hypochondriac. On his visit to me I gave him but very little medicine, and I told him that the first and great medicine that will cure him is to trust in God. I heard lately that he is better. He thanked me very much for my advice and medicine, and he left me in better spirits. I told him that it is a shame for a priest to have no more faith in God than to feel in that way. The severeness of the weather prevented my going to see him or his coming to me, but I hear that he has had no more spells, and I hope to go and see him soon, for I want to meet the men of the monastery. There are about a dozen priests and deacons, and that bishop is a well educated man, and when he talks with me you would think that he is a Protestant. But they hide their light from the people, for he does not give the people the benefit of his new ideas by telling them anything.

As my time is limited I will close now and will write soon again about the feelings of the people here since we came from Smyrna, and of what we expect to do in the future. The sickness of my wife kept us very much behind with our correspondence. Your brother in Christ,

A. D. Zaraphonithes.

FROM PASTOR ALEXANDER DJEJIJIAN.

Ada Bazar, a town in Bithynia, has a population of 15,000 Mohammedans, Armenian and Greek Christians. The Evangelical Armenian church here was organized in 1846. It is now 27 years since I was privileged to labor for my Master in this town and the surrounding villages. Blessed indeed be our God that now Bithynia has its places of evangelical worship and that although not many, but we have some, who are adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour, "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Since 1862 this church has become self-sustaining. Afflictions have been our lot. But though we have been distressed and suffering the Lord has supported us. His Word is ever sure. The floods have not drowned us nor the fire consumed us.

Our annual meeting this year was deeply interesting. It was very encouraging to notice the deep interest taken in the work by our Armenian brethren and sisters, though most of them are poor in this world's goods. In the reports two things chiefly made our hearts glad:

1. That a large number of persons had united with our church on profession of faith this year. Our church at this time has a membership of 104; and

2. The people have shown great liberality in their contributions. It is also very encouraging to notice the deep interest taken by the young members of this congregation both male and female, in the study of English. We have commenced this winter an evening class for this purpose. We have for years endeavored to stir up the young Christians of this congregation to educate themselves in order to be useful men among our people. Out of this congregation a few have gone to labor in other places. Some are colporteurs in Constantinople, etc.; others are preachers; one is a pastor in Nicomedia; and one is a professor in Robert College, Constantinople, and preaches there every Sabbath to a large audience who give close attention to his thoughtful sermons. We have two physicians graduated in the United States, one of whom is with us, and is doing very well indeed, both as a physician and a preacher. He meets the young men on Sabbath evenings for prayer and exhortation. Our Sunday-school numbers about eighty pupils. To the reading and study of the Bible we owe much. We had the Bible in ancient Armenian from the fifth century. But the common people could not understand it. Since it was translated into modern Armenian many thousands have formed the habit of reading the Bible among the Armenians. And the reading of it has done more to advance civilization and pure religion than all the other agencies. Legions of superstitions have fallen before this "sword of the Spirit." We long to see all the races of Turkey—Greeks, Armenians, Turks and Circassians—come under its instruction and influence.

Reform News.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Mar. 27th, 1884.

The Niagara County Anti-secrecy Association held the closing session of its annual gathering last evening in Good Templars' Hall. Roads from the country were absolutely impassable, the night was dark and rainy. The Salvation Army had just entered the town and occupied a hall three doors from where we met. Both the Masonic and Odd-fellow signal lights were out and everything seemed to be against us; but despite all hindrances, a faithful few assembled and enjoyed a pleasant and profitable meeting.

In the absence of Elder Alberty, president of the convention, F. W. Capwell of Dale presided, and after a season of devotion and a song by Bro. Clark, called on Bro. Hyatt who gave chapters of his experience with very happy effect. Bro. Clark's remarks following, and a song "in point," were received with applause. No meeting can fail to interest and benefit where Bro. C. is present, to sing and talk as he only can. Others followed with remarks, two shares were taken in the Washington enterprise and a collection to defray expenses. Prayer by Rev. James, pastor of the colored church in Lockport, and the benediction closed the session, and all departed apparently in the best of humor.

Looking back upon the meeting from the shore of Lake Ontario in Canada, I consider it a success. Though the number in attendance was not what could have been desired, they were men and women of influence, character and devout purity, who mean work and are not afraid to do it. Bro. Capwell is so well known that I need only mention his name as an active factor in the convention, from the opening to its closing session. Of Bro. Clark it need only be said, he will be missed as few, if any others, are when his voice is no longer heard in our conventions. Bro. Alberty in his brief "inaugural," when chosen president, showed that he comprehended the situation and is prepared to meet it. Bro. Corliss puts the whole weight of an unsullied reputation, a vigorous and practiced mind and sturdy muscle into the movement. Peter D. Miller, ably sustained by his estimable wife, never takes a back seat, and recent experiences of "Masonic charity" only revive old memories of "brotherly love" which, while annoying to him, are exceedingly damaging to the craft.

Bro. Allis, a man "peculiar and zealous of good works," gives no quarters to the selfish fraternitics. His hits are very happy and whilc, as a matter-of-fact man, it's safe to put him down as a "terror to evil-docrs and a praise to them that do well." Bro. Freeman, Bro. Hall, Bro. and Sistcr Carl, Bro. and Sister Lewis, with others, arc deserving of honorable mention for the parts they took. But probably the most remarkable character in the convention was the Rev. Mr. James, pastor of the colored church in Lockport. He is a very quiet, unobtrusive man, but when called out speaks with brevity and precision, crowding his sentences with original thought that makes his hearers wish he would say more. He is an "old soldier and has commendations from military officials of the very highest rank, of which any man might be justly proud. He has watched and deeply deplores the effect of secrecy and intemperance on his race, and his faithful testimony has called for sacrifices that he has cheerfully made. May God bless the old colored preacher is the prayer of J. P. Stoddard.

AMONG THE MOUNTAINS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Utahville, Pa., Mar. 20, 1884.

Dwellers among the mountains have always been distinguishcd for their love of liberty, their patriotism and domestic virtues. "The Switzerland of America" embraces the Apalachian range from Northern Pennsylvania to south-eastern Tcnnessee, and in the people of this region there is probably a finer physical development and as much of simple, manly virtue as can be found in and part of the United States.

Having seen the names of quite a number of readers of thc Cynosure who reside in this part of the State, I determined to make them a visit, and aid if possible in their labors of love.

The beautiful young city of Altoona is on the divide between the waters of the Mississippi and the Atlantic. About three miles east I left the main road on Bell Gap branch, which runs about twenty miles to the north-west. With a six-wheel locomotivc and a light train we climbed the mountain side along an exceedingly tortuous track, on the sides of ravines with almost perpendicular banks, and through forests of pine and hemlock. Our progress was slow and seemingly toilsome. There were a few sawmills in the vallcys, and some coal shafts opening out of the mountain sidcs, but no possiblc place for cultivation. But the views were grand, and as we passcd around a sharp bend at the head of a ravine we could see our road but a little way off, but so far below us that we could hardly realize that we had but just come over it. In about eight miles we had risen twelve hundred feet, and some of the way onc hundred and sixty feet to the mile. Nearly at thc top is thc village of Loydsville, a mining and lumber town, and farther on over the top there are several pleasant villages and a hilly, but tolerably fertile farming country.

At Glasgow and Utahville I met a most cordial reception, and there was no hesitation as to whether the United Brethren and Baptist churches would be open for lectures. At Glasgow I met an old United Brethren minister, Rev. John Hollern, who had lived here since 1831, and who hcard the first sermon preached in this region. Hc told me of shooting three bears without moving from where he stood, and of preaching many years with no other support than his own hands had wrought. Now in his seventy-fourth year he is greatly grieved at the degeneracy of the church and especially by its subserviency to the dictation of the lodges. It is arranged that I shall lecture on temperance to-morrow night, and that I shall preach and lecture here several times.

Mountaindale, Pa., Mar. 25th.—I have met a most kind reception from these mountain people, and though they are not all of one mind, or all of them perfect patterns of moral cxcellence, they all believe in the apostolic admonitions, "Prove all things. Hold fast that which is good." Since I came into this region the weather has been stormy and the roads very bad; nevcrtheless wc have had good mectings. On Friday, the 21st, I spoke in the U. B. church at Utahville on prohibition, using the finely executed map of the "Mississippi of Intemperance" to illustrate the subject. The ladies of this place have a well constructed W. C. T. U., and are doing a good work. The Good Templars have also an organization that meets in the church, and serves to divide and weaken the temperance forces. Some of the members of the U. B. church, including the former pastor, are members of this order. The present pastor deems it impossible to execute the discipline, though he has no sympathy with any secret order.

On Saturday night I spoke to a full house on the relation of the secret orders to the Gospel of Christ. It was well received. On Sabbath morning I preached in Utahville to a small congregation, and in the evening to a full house in the U. B. church at Glasgow. Last night I had a good congregation at the samc place and spokc to them on the relation of secret societies to civil society and good government. A few Masons and a good number of Oddfellows were prcsent, and, in thc main, listened calmly and candidly.

These are the first lectures cver given in this region. Much credit is due to Bro. Wm. Lovell of Glasgow for devotedness to the cause of reform. Besides paying for tracts and books for free distribution, and for several copies of the Cynosure, he becomes a stockholder in our American Publishing Company. Thc weather is now bright and beautiful and I expect to go to Harrisburg and thence up thc Cumberland valley and so on to Washington. Yours in the Lord, H. H. Hinman.

THE EXPOSITIONS IN WASHINGTON, IOWA.

Clarence, Iowa, March 27th, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—I lately returned from Washington county, where I had been doing some reform work. I reached Washington the 4th inst., was met at the depot by Mr. John Stevenson and son, and received a warm welcome. Arrangements had previously been made for work in several school-houses, and after supper we repaired to the school-house some two and a half miles from Mr. Stevenson's, to hold our first meeting. Although the weather was quite disagreeable we found a full house and had quite an interesting meeting; the following evening the third or sublime degree was exemplified in the same house. Had very small spacc to perform the work and found the house too small to accommodatc thc people. Some of the craft werc present; one of them said the the work was correct.

I worked in four school-houses and trust some good will result from it. Formed the acquaintance of many in that part of the country, mostly United Presbyterians and Covenanters, and a few Baptists. J. T. Stevenson cngineered the whole business. He invited me to Washington county, made the appointments, advertiscd and worked up all the meetings. He is a young man, just starting out in life, is a member of the Covenanter church, a whole-hearted Christian and a gcnuine reformer. He cares not what the world may say or think of him, so long as he knows he is in the line of duty nothing can deter, but he marches straight forward, swerving neither to the right nor left, and seems to have no use whatever for any such word as fail. The Masons were quitc busy in their way; wanted to know why we did not come to the city and work. Somc of thcm offered to help pay expenses, because they said it would do the lodge so much good; after I left they would have more work than they could attend to.

Well, we did go to the city. Music Hall was hired, bills printed and scattered all over the city stating the object of the meeting, and a special invitation given to members of secret orders. Instead of the Masons rejoicing to think wc were going to give them a lift, as they boasted, they were angry. But such is often the case; of course we cannot at all times please everybody. Those Masons who promised to "chip in," when called on for the money, refused to comply, with one exception; one Knight Templar, I was informed, gave a half dollar, and did not changc a word.

The evening for the meeting in Music Hall was very disagreeable indeed; notwithstanding, the Hall was filled; a good many of the craft were present; had a good meeting and no opposition to speak of. I had the pleasure of meeting and conferring with some of the old veterans, brethren Brokaw and Furguson; also met some familiar faces, Revs. Boyd and Williamson of the United Presbyterian church, and Rev. Dr. Maughlin of the Seceder church. I also formed many new acquaintances, among them Rev. Wiley of the Covenanter, and Rev. Fisher of the Seceder church. All seem to be deeply interested in the work My stay in Washington county was very pleasant indeed, and will long be remembered by mc as one of the bright spots in the ever changing scenes of this earthly life.

I notice in Bro. Gault's "Chapter from the Past" thc following: "It was announced by members of the orders on the streets of Clarence, Iowa (the home of Eld. Rathbun), hours before the event occurred, that he was killed at Kellerton." Now I do not know how or where Bro. Gault received this information, but am sure he has been misinformed. It is very unfortunate, indeed, that such a statement appeared in the Cynosure. There are quite a number of Cynosure readers here, and a good many favorably inclined toward the paper and the cause it advocates. They take what appears in its columns as truth; but somc have said since reading the above, "What kind of man is this Gault," and what kind of Christian paper is this, publishing that which we know to be false? I know Bro. Gault did not knowingly make this mistake, and I hope for the good of the cause, the reputation of thc paper and his own, he will as soon as possible state in the Cyn sure where he got his information, and thereby confer a favor on the friends that live here and are compelled to hear it denounced as false, without any mode of escape or defense. S. E. Starry.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LORIMER AND THOMAS.

The (Knight Templar) Reverend Doctor Lorimer bravely defended his Baptist brethrcn, ancient and modern, and justly, as bright examples of loyalty to their conscientious convictions, and to the cause of human liberty and Christian Missions in one of his sermons on the 24th of March. He also contrasted the opposite spirit of time-serving. His heads were these:

1. Baptists bclieve that ascent is morc important than descent.
2. Baptists believe that conscientiousness is more expedient than expediency.
3. That liberality is more wholesome than dogmatism.
4. That radicalism is more sagacious than conservatism.

And he contrasts past persecutions with present privileges, commends the examplcs presented, and urges obedience to Christ.

No one reading his sermon would infer that he was a full-fledged member of the Masonic body, whose defense would seem to require four headings the very opposite of the above. For what is more important to Masonry than

1. To foster a blind faith in its ancient descent? (The Cynosure believes in its "descent!")

Or 2. To yield implicit obedience to its blind oaths? (No matter what "conscientiousness" may prompt its owner to reveal!)

Or 3. What can be more dogmatic than the so-called unchangeable landmarks of Masonry?

Or 4. What can be more "conservative" against any spirit of "radicalism" or free speech than the awful penalties of its (demoniacal) oaths?

But "wonders will nevcr cease," and it is a living wonder that such preachers as Dr. Lorimer can on Sunday commend so highly thc Christian principles which are so adverse to those of Masonry, and listen and speak at Knight Templar feasts, as he did, not only without protest but with passive commendation to such remarks as those of his Masonic brother, the Rev. Dr. Thomas. Dr. T. said, "He knew of nothing which had more direct bearing on the spiritual growth than Masonry. It was a religion with God above it, with God beneath, and the best of manhood within. And Knight Templary is thc Christianity of Masonry. It is the Gospel where Masonry is the law."

If so, it is evident that these reverend gentlemen support two different Gospels, for certainly the law of Moses was that of the Gospel of Christ, and the New Testament Gospel knows nothing of thc law of Masonry, unless, indeed, the apostle Paul had such a Gospel in view when writing Gal. 1: 4, or our Christ drew its portrait in Matt. 24: 26, when he said, If they say, Behold hc (Christ) is in the secret or inner chamber (of Masonry), "believe it not."

Strange, indeed, that such a sermon as this, or Dr. Lorimer, should hold up Christianity as "the glory of the past and the hope of the future," and that the same man should in another placc give his moral strength to its competitor as the "Center of Union" for Christian and Brahmin, Mohammedan and Jew! Yes, with the prospect of their meeting all together in the grand lodge above if they are but faithful to the laws of Freemasonry!

What meaning have words from the mouths of such Delphic oracles? or why be surprised that largc audiences in this city applaud the Bob Ingersolls in their ribald references to the claims of such a Christianity as Masons support over evcry other religion? T. H.

SECRET SOCIETIES THAT ARE A SECRET.

Dear Cynosure:—The able article by Rev. J. C. K. Milligan in your paper of March 13th says, "There are in this country to-day over 800,000 Nihilists. They control the most if not all the orders and unions among us. Never seen or heard of, they arc everywhere felt, and steadily are carrying on their plans of hellish cruelty. Their hand is against every man's hand, but in their hidden haunts no man's hand can reach them. Even now our beloved land and nation is heaving and groaning from the secret volcanic fires they havc kindled, whose outbreak only King Jesus can restrain."

This statement is startling. Have we besides our great network of secret societies others whose very existence is an unrevealed secret? If so, our danger is indeed imminent, and we are indced sleeping on a volcano. Therc arc two reasons for believing this statement to be true:

First, the prevalence of crimes and the escapc of criminals which can be explained on no other hypothesis; and the other that the hidden orders of the Old World are known to have their agents in this, and that they are making use of our nation as the base line from which to carry on their plans for destruction of life and property in Great Britain. There is an additional fact, the occasional confession of the existence of such hidden societies.

Recently, in conversation with a minister of the Society of Friends who has charge of an important department in a popular university, he defended secret societies in general, several of which he had been connected with, denouncing all who had revealed the secrets of Masonry as untrustworthy and grossly criminal, and intimated that he had joined a secret order which by one of its covenants required all of its members to conceal its existence. Of course he did not tell us what nor where such a society was, but said he saw no objection to such an order, and had only discontinued his attendance from press of other engagements. I confess that I was immeasurably astonished that a trusted minister, who represents a people testifying against all secret orders, and who receives a liberal support from their voluntary contributions (which he would by no means receive if they knew his principles), should declare himself a practical conspirator, and should be using his influence to corrupt the youth committed to his care. It is altogether probable that he does not view the matter in this light. From his standpoint he could not, but where such conduct is practiced and justified by men in such positions, it is not strange that the lower strata of society should be honeycombed with wickedness, and that all good men should tremble at the possibilities that are before us.

H. H. HINMAN.

BALLOTS OR BULLETS.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., March 15, 1884.

This is the title of a lecture delivered last evening by the Rev. C. S. Smith, our colored orator. He is a young man of good appearance on the platform, uses good language, and his utterances show considerable thought and study. In this he is certainly unique among his race, and is entitled to a fair place among orators. His lecture would be a pleasant change in any popular course, and committees would do well to engage him.

He speaks as the attorney of the million colored voters in the South, before the bar of public sentiment. He pleads for the civil and political rights of his clients. He brings a terrible indictment against the unreconstructed rebels, claiming and enforcing the fact that the war is not over, that bullets and not ballots are regnant in the South. He usually succeeds in impressing the jury with some of his own indignation at the wrongs of the shotgun policy as illustrated in the recent elections. He corroborates the statement in the "Fool's Errand" by Judge Tourgee, and speaks in this from personal experience. He has heard the midnight yell of the Ku-Klux and felt the cold steel with which they enforce their commands.

In all this we are heartily in sympathy with Mr. S. and his clients, and as an impartial juror we are bound to give him the case. But when he comes to speak of the remedy we are obliged to differ with him, and if the court indulges us we will state why.

We understand he is working for and in the interests of the Republican party. This is the nostrum and this the quack who has had the case for near a quarter of a century, and the patient is as bad off as ever. Surely it is most time for a change of doctors. The Republican party has had the whole national resources, army and navy, all this time, and by his own showing the case is no better. Surely his generation can hardly expect to live to make many such experiments. "Mene, tekel, upharsin," is written on the Republican walls. She is proved recreant to the trust of her colored wards, and he is a blind fool who proposes to follow her further. Office greed has killed her, and like any other rotten thing the people will spew her out. Her opportunities to right the Southern wrongs are about gone, and (like the sensible rats who desert a sinking ship) the proper course is to keep clear of her in future.

In view of both dominant parties the case is as stated by a colored preacher: "Bredren, here are two roads, de one leads straight to hell, de odder to damnation." "If dat's de case," replied one of his hearers, "dis chile take to de woods."

But the most serious drawback to Mr. S. and his cause is the unfortunate imitative quality of his race. They copy all the vices of the whites, and but few of their virtues. They take instinctively to tobacco, whisky, laziness, vulgarity, dudeism, and lodgery. A large number are content not to be colored people but "cullud pussons;" wearing cast-off finery and seeking the pompous titles and grandiloquent shams of the lodge-room. We are informed Mr. Smith is a Mason, bound with blasphemous oaths to foster the very root from which sprang all the woes of his race in America. Masonry laid the plans for a nation whose chief corner-stone was to be slavery, and that long before the days of Calhoun and nullification. Records of this were found in the annals of the lodge of Charleston, S. C. Ku-Kluxism is Masonry gone to seed. Masonry is selfishness, aristocracy and caste. Masonry is the prepared stronghold in which the White Leagues, Ku-Klux, etc., hibernate. Their masks hang fraternally beside the other regalia of the grand puissant and worshipful autocrats in the Masonic lodge. To be handicapped in this way is more than Mr. Smith and his cause can bear and hope for success.

His role is to hang the colored vote like a tail to the Republican kite; to run his yawl attached to the rotten party hulk. But all will go down together, and prudence says, "Stand off and not sink in the vortex."

As we have said, too much association with the villainous and dead-beat part of the white race corrupts the black; just so too much association with the villainous and dead-beat politicians will corrupt both Mr. Smith and his cause.

The men who stood up in the cause of the slave when that cause was unpopular are now in the American party. That party and those men are now contending for civil and political rights for all men. That party and those men alone dare to face the lodge influence, and they alone can crack the cacatrice egg from which was hatched all the evils of which he complains.

Mr. Smith may waste much eloquence and squander much hard work in the interests of Demagogue, Lodgery & Co., who will soon have no spoils to divide; but the true interests of the colored man are in the American camp with the earnest men to whom his cause is so deeply indebted. Reform is what he calls for, but reformers will be such in temperance, in anti-secrecy, in anti-monopoly, in Christianity, as well as in civil abuses of which he complains. In proof of all which we refer him to the American platform. OBS.

PITH AND POINT.

A HINT TO BARNUM.

Get the "oldest Mason" in the country; set him on the white elephant led by a Mormon bishop, and pass him between two files of low-bowing worshipers, Masons on one side and Ku-Klux on the other. Perhaps the apron might as well be raised up a little and put under the old Mason's chin. The lodge would doubtless patronize the show as "good religion enough for them."—KITCHEN GARDNER.

EX-PRESIDENT ALLEN GIVES A WORD OF CHEER.

I consider it a great blessing that the door is open to the use of your columns. The pen is the great power and it is a glorious thing to have it bearing our cause to the people. I am far from blind to the opportunities providentially afforded for useful labor in this field; and I rejoice greatly that many are better situated for the work than I am, so that the ball is kept roling cheeringly. I flatter myself that if life is spared I shall find a change of circumstances wherein I can do something as God may give me light. I presume some of our friends regard me as a sort of backslider from this interest; but I am not. I have, it is true, been made to feel the teeth of the monster we are facing, but that does not terrify me or set me back in resolution.—S. B. ALLEN, Westfield, Ill.

ANOTHER "REV. THEOPHLUS DODDS."

Our M. E. minister in Seward, Neb., has espoused their (secret empire), cause; for on last Sabbath, in preaching an Odd-fellow's funeral, he invoked God's blessing on the brotherhood who had come out on this "solemn occasion," to pay the last sad rite to a brother who had fallen. Is it possible that the Rev. gentleman did not know that many of the order on that "solemn occasion" had not been in church for months, that some were infidels, Sabbath breakers, profane, and indulge in strong drink? How this brotherhood has changed the command given by our Saviour, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," to say (judging by their fruits), In whatsoever a brother of the order binds himself (by obligation), to help me, the same will I do for him. And yet this minister said that the order was founded on God's truth.—W. O. NORVAL, Seward. Neb.

SEED-SOWING AND HARVEST.

I distributed to-day at a school meeting and on the way there, twenty-one catalogues and forty-two American political tracts— a catalogue and tract to each man, until the catalogues gave out. The Anti-secrecy spirit and word are taking good and deep root here, and spreading like a prairie fire. One man, who we had great fears was too far gone with the Masonic infatuation to be rescued until he had got his soul oath-bound, if at all, is reading with much apparent interest Rev. Armstrong's telling little work, "Masonry a Work of Darkness," and was heard to remark that we were spoiling him for a Mason.

Another man in the same neighborhood, already in a secret order, and of whom we had but little hopes, we have had the extreme satisfaction of at last seeing turn away from these things with loathing, and also give a helping hand with us in this work. We to-night sent him some American political tracts, and also Cynosure tracts. There is a birthday party at his house this evening—his own and his daughter's birthday celebrated in connection, and a young lady here interested in this work presents him as a birthday present, a copy of "Masonry a Work of Darkness."

We have had the pleasure too of saving one young man from binding his soul with the terrible oaths and penalties of Masonry, who had gone so far as to send into the lodge the first or depositing fee, principally by reading to him E. Ronayne's "Legal Attestation" (in last pages of the Master's Carpet), as to what the candidate goes through in the initiation etc., and the terrible oaths and penalties by which he is bound. He said to-day that he would have his leg cut off sooner than take one of these oaths. His brother was contemplating entering Masonry, but he says now that the little book called "Masonry a Work of Darkness," that we sent over to him, has "forever cooked him on that subject.—CHAS. W. LAMB, Magnolia, Iowa.

WHICH INTERPRETATION.

I have one of Morgan's Masonry books, with a key to all the degrees of Freemasonry, and in the Mark Master's degree it says the eight letters on the keystone (H. T. W. S. S. T. K. S.), stands for "He-that-was-slain-soars-to-kindred-spirits," and I got Bernard's exposure from you, which had the eight letters to stand for "Hiram-Tyre-widow's-son-sent-to-King-Solomon." Now please let me know through the Cynosure which is right, and oblige a seeker for more light.—H. D. JONES, Millersburg, Ky.

NOTE.—The explanation of Bernard is the correct one. The Morgan's Masonry book, so-called, is probably the spurious publication of Fitzgerald of New York, which appeared within a year or two after the revival of Anti-masonry, and seems to be a cunningly devised scheme to deceive the public not in the lodge secret.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON II.—April 13, 1884.—Paul at Ephesus.—Acts 19: 8-22.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds.—Acts 19: 18.

"The kingdom of God." That kingdom of God which all the Jews throughout the world were expecting. His preaching had a wide range, including all things that pertained to this kingdom. We pause for a moment to think of the amount of work of all kinds implied in this short record. The daily labor as a tent-maker went on as before (20: 34), probably still in partnership with Aquila and Priscilla. The Sabbaths saw the apostle, evening and morning, in the synagogue preaching (Plumptre), and at other times he went from house to house, warning every one, night and day (Acts 20: 20, 31). In these three quiet, eventful years, not only were the foundations of the great Ephesian church laid, but also the early stories of those famous Christian congregations known as the churches of Asia, as well as the churches of the Lycus, Colossæ, Laodicæa, and Hierapolis. It was, perhaps, the most successful period of the busy, stirring career.—Schaff.

"And believe not," or as in the Revised Version, were disobedient. This explains how they were hardened, by resisting good influences, by disobeying known duty, by trampling on their convictions, by refusing to believe what was true. Simple neglect of known duty will always harden the heart. It was also a result of the hardening process.

"All.... Asia heard the word," i. e. the Roman province of Asia, of which Ephesus was the capital. The term "Asia" is always a little vague. It sometimes includes all Mysia, Phrygia, Lydia and Caria. But Paul probably wrote the term more in the old Homeric sense: the whole surrounding country (the western portion of Asia Minor, now part of Turkey). It was only forty years from this time that Pliny, in his famous letter to the emperor Trajan, speaks of the swarms of Christians in the province of Bithynia (no great distance from Ephesus), of which he was governor. Numbers, he says, of all ages, of all ranks, of both sexes, not only in the cities of his province, but in the very villages and remotest country districts, were infected with this superstition (Christianity).—Schaff.

"And God wrought special miracles by the hands of (i. e., by means of) Paul." The language of the historian is noteworthy. God works, Paul is the instrument. The imperfect tense of the verb in the Greek implies that these manifestations of God's power were continued during the apostle's stay. This was no mere spasmodic excitement over some powerful discourse.—Cambridge Bible.

"Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists." We read in Josephus (Ant. viii. 2: 5) that "God gave Solomon skill against demons for the help and cure of men. And he arranged certain incantations whereby diseases were assuaged, and left behind him forms of exorcism, wherewith they so put to flight the overpowered evil spirits that they never return. And this method of curing is very prevalent among us up to the present time." The Jews at Ephesus were professors of this pretended art of healing.—Cambridge Bible.

"Which had evil spirits." It is not easy to answer the question, What was this demoniacal possession? But we may gather from the Gospel narrative some important ingredients for our description. The demoniac was one whose being was strangely impenetrated by one or more of those fallen spirits, who are constantly asserted in Scripture (under the name of demons, evil spirits, unclean spirits, their chief being the Devil or Satan) to be the enemies and the tempters of the souls of men. He stood in a totally different position from the abandoned wicked man, who morally is given over to the devil. This latter would be a subject for punishment, but the demoniac for deepest compassion. There appears to have been in him a double will and double consciousness,—sometimes the cruel spirit thinking and speaking in him, sometimes his poor crushed self crying out for mercy. It has been not improbably supposed that some of these demoniacs may have arrived at their dreadful state through various progressive degrees of guilt and sensual abandonment. Lavish sin, and especially indulgence in sensual lusts, superinducing, as it would often, a weakness in the nervous system, which is the especial bond between body and soul, may have laid open these unhappy ones to the fearful incursions of the powers of darkness.—Alford.

"But who are ye?" Why should we obey you? you have no power over us as Paul has through Jesus. So all the sins of the heart, and the corruptions and vice of men say to false religions: Jesus we know, for he has delivered many from our power, and has raised up whole nations into a higher life, but who are ye? where are the people you have delivered from sin, or the nations you have raised up from barbarism into civilization?—Peloubet.

"And showed their deeds." The "deeds" were those courses of action, connected with witchcraft, sorcery, and exorcism, that were inconsistent with the Christian life. It was a humiliating confession that so many retained these relics of their old life, but the practices were so common, so much a part of their lives, that they probably did not at first realize their evil nature, or how contrary they were to the Gospel. As soon as their eyes were opened by the incident described in the previous verses, they renounced their evil practices, even at great sacrifices to themselves of pride and of property. Every generation of Christians has some of the evils of the age clinging to it at first. Blessed are they whose eyes are opened, and who confess and renounce.—Peloubet.

"So mightily grew the word of God." In this complete renunciation of the old evil past, we may probably see the secret of the capacity for a highes knowledge which St. Paul recognizes ar belonging to Ephesus more than to most other churches.—Plumptre.

"He himself staid in Asia for a season." He appears to have gone on with his work for several months after the effect produced by the failure of the pretended exorcist family of Sceva the priest, and the subsequent burning of the precious works on magic, until the uproar excited by the panic-stricken artificers who lived on the pilgrims to the great Diana shrine. This tumult evidently cut short this renewed period of Paul's activity, and he seems to have left Ephesus and his work there with some precipitancy.—Schaff.

And many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds. An honest faith is sure to lead to earnest deeds. "Strong reasons make strong actions." These Ephesians, when they realized that the arts which they had been practicing were wholly wrong, that the books which had been their pride, were full of fables, lies, and superstition, confessed their sins publicly, renounced their magical arts, and their wicked practices, and, at great sacrifice to themselves, destroyed their property. And others since their day have followed their example. A French lady, the proprietor of a book store in Paris, heard Father Beauregard preach upon the evils of immoral books, and was thoroughly convicted. She sent for her father, who was a godly man, and asked him to examine her stock and take out all the books he considered injurious. The rejected volumes amounted to $12,100. She burned them all in his presence, glad to make the sacrifice. Let us suppose a case of self-sacrifice. A young man, who has been exceedingly fond of light literature, becomes a Christian. The next day his eye lights upon this fragment in a daily paper. "The best books are those which most resemble good actions. They are purifying, elevating and sustaining; they enlarge and liberalize; they preserve against vulgar worldliness; they tend to produce high-mindedness, cheerfulness and equanimity of character; they fashion and shape and humanize the mind." He reflects that the dime novels, sensational story papers, and trashy popular novels in which he has so long indulged, are decidedly injurious to body, mind and spirit. He knows they will unfit him for usefulness in this life, and deprive him of any chance of happiness in the life to come; and he decides that all this vapid, silly, contaminating reading must be destroyed. He carries all his pernicious books and papers out of doors. Byron has been his favorite poet. But the beautifully bound, gilt volume, containing infidel and immoral suggestions, though the gift of a friend, must be laid upon the pile. As he stands and watches the curling flame destroy his literary possessions, and prays for guidance and direction in his reading for the future, the peace of a pure conscience fills his heart. Have you destroyed whatever in your possession might lead others into sin and misery? Have you, since you believed, confessed and showed your deeds?—The Illustrator.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE EVIL SPIRITS OF SOCIETY CANNOT BE CAST OUT BY THE EVIL SPIRIT OF SECRECY.

1. We must speak the truth boldly. V. 8. Nothing is gained by being afraid to speak our honest convictions but often a great deal is lost. The world respects those who stand up for the right in the face of ridicule and opposition, and this is one step towards respecting the truths which they defend. The want of courage to say "No" to the first glass of wine makes the great army of drunkards; and many a young lad learns to smoke and lays the foundation for a wrecked constitution and enfeebled mental and moral powers because he has never learned to speak this little monosyllable. Girls should learn to speak it as well as boys, for they, too, have to encounter temptation. The number of women, even in refined and fashionable society, who have learned to like the wine-cup too well, is probably much larger than is generally supposed.

2. If we try to cast out evil spirits in the wrong way we shall certainly suffer defeat. Vs. 13–16. This world is full of evil spirits which must be cast out before Christ can reign. Liquor is an evil spirit. No one who has seen a drunken man or read about rum's doings in the daily press can help being convinced of this fact. These Jews who tried to cast out the evil spirit did not do it from love to God or man. They only desired the gain and notoriety which their attempt, if successful, would bring them. It was Satan trying to cast out Satan, and no wonder it failed. Now some people think that secret temperance lodges will cast out the demon of rum. This is a great mistake. The testimony of our noblest temperance workers is that they waste in childish ceremonies, regalia and entertainments, the time, strength and money which ought to be used in reform. Hon. S. D. Locke, in a speech favoring liquor selling as a natural and universal right, states that the Temples of Honor in his congressional district met recently at Troy, N. Y., and unanimously endorsed license. This was the same thing as acknowledging that the evil spirit of rum was too strong for them to cast out. They are ruled by the god of this world and he neither can nor will cast out his own.

3. Christians must renounce sin openly. Vs. 18–20. A rumseller, if truly repentant, empties his barrels of liquid death into the gutter. A Mason who truly sees the evil of the lodge will not think that non-attendance is the same thing as renouncing it. These Ephesian converts burned their books "before all men" because they wanted to prove their sincerity to the world. "They showed their deeds," as Masons do when they expose the secret wickedness of the lodge. The result was a great revival, a result which always follows the confessing and putting away of sin.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

Give an instance of some men who were not afraid to say "No." Jer. 35: 2–10. What was their reward? Jer. 35: 18, 19. What is said of those who confess and forsake sin? Prov. 28: 13.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.
College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill.
First Congregational, Leland, Mich.
Sugar Grove Church, Green county, Pa.
Military Chapel, M. E., Lowndes county, Miss.

Wm. Hazenburg, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. Zaraphonithes, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

☞NOTICE.☜

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1884.

Omitting Christ from religion, the lodge omits God from the world; for "whosoever (in acts) denieth the Son the same hath not the Father" (1 Jno. 2:23). And there is no way of reaching God but through Christ, the "One Mediator."

Denying miracles is bastardizing the Son of God and impugning the virtue of his mother. For Christ's conception and birth were miracles, as much so as the resurrection of Lazarus.

The "Strong grip of the lion's paw or King of Judah," by which the lodge raises Hiram Abiff from his pretended grave, is a coarse infidel burlesque of Christ, "The Lion of the tribe of Judah." Rev. 5: 5.

Anti-masonry any more than anti-slavery will not take a man to heaven. It takes faith in Christ and a holy life to do that. But those ministers who plead eloquently for ordinary every-day piety while their ministry does not exclude and save men from lodge-leprosy, do but prate; as Paul would have done at Ephesus had his Gospel not disturbed the worship of "Diana of the Ephesians."

Prohibition is not as some argue, "prohibiting wine," "dictating what not to drink," etc., etc. It is prohibiting a drink system which facts and figures show to be the ruin of the country. Gen. Phelps has proved nothing when he proves that drinking a spoonful of wine is not sin. Planting trees is not sin, but a joy and beauty; yet God forbade tree-planting near his altar, because every grove in Palestine had become a spiritual and actual brothel, and the sight of a grove to the average Hebrew was like the sight of a decanter of whisky to a drinker. Gen. Phelps would think a man weak and illogical who should condemn Gideon for cutting down Baal's grove, because trees are harmless and good. Yet he is right as against Masonic prohibitionists and their lovers.

HON. WILLIAM WIRT, LL.D.

In the little country village of Bladensburg, Prince George's county, Maryland, six miles northeast of the city of Washington, a Swiss emigrant named Wirt, married a German girl and kept a little old-fashioned "Traveler's Rest." They were the parents of William Wirt. This little boy, native of a village which scarcely maintains itself on the map, and left an orphan just after he was old enough to lead a traveler's horse to water and read the letters on the swinging sign of his father's inn, became one of the most distinguished men in the United States, the friend and peer of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun. He was successively tutor in the family of the father of Gov. Ninian Edwards of Illinois; a lawyer in Culpepper county, Va.; three years clerk of the Virginia House of Delegates; a lawyer in Norfolk, author of various popular books, as the British Spy, and Life of Patrick Henry; member of the Virginia House of Delegates; Chancellor of the Eastern Shore of Virginia; counsel in the trial of Aaron Burr; U. S. Attorney for the District of Virginia; Attorney General of the United States under Monroe and John Quincy Adams; Anti-masonic Candidate for the Presidency in 1832, received 28,000 votes, and the whole electoral vote of Vermont. He died at Washington in 1834, two years after, aged a little less than 62 years.

His plea in the case of Aaron Burr has furnished declamations in schools and colleges ever since its delivery; and few steamboats ever pass Blennerhassett Island, in the Ohio river, without carrying passengers who talk of Wirt's description of "the shrubbery which a Shenstone might have envied," and the sleet and hail-storm which fell there on the beautiful wife of Blennerhassett, looking out into the night for her husband, after the serpent Burr had entered into their paradise, and stolen him from her affections to embark in his scheme of treason, secession, and a Southwestern Empire. Burr was not convicted. Probably Jefferson only prosecuted him to drive him by unpopularity from the political arena.

Mr. Wirt had great personal beauty and natural sweetness of disposition. He was educated by an uncle in the family school of Rev. James Hunt, and, though he narrowly escaped the gulf of intemperance, which was the maelstrom of the public men of his day, he adhered to his Christian profession to the last.

LIKE WASHINGTON,

Marshall and other eminent men, while young he had been drawn into the portico of the Masonic lodge —just for the fun of the thing, and the friendship of Masons, but he, as they did, turned from it with loathing and disgust.

He had reached three-score years and the pinnacle of his fame, when the first national nominating convention ever called in the United States, was held by Anti-masons at Baltimore in September, 1831. The Whigs were to meet in the same city in December following. Their candidates were Calhoun, Clay and McLean. Gen. Jackson was President, and candidate for re-election. He was a Royal Arch Mason, but a silent one. The lodge had fallen in the North and slavery had taken it under its dark and bloody wing. Jackson's Cabinet were Masons, and Edward Livingston, Secretary of State, was "Grand High Priest." Clay, too, was a Masonic "High Priest." The Anti-masons had addressed him a coaxing letter, but he spurned them, and clave to the lodge. Union by the opposition might defeat Jackson and give the Administration to the Whigs. Seward, then a young and able politician, and Anti-mason, secured Wirt's consent to run by convincing him that the Whigs would unite on him in December following; and that he could be elected. Wirt consented, was nominated, and accepted the same day.

THEY WERE ALL DISAPPOINTED.

Old Democrats and old Federalists, who had always hated each other were united by the lodge in Jackson's Cabinet. Jackson received 219 electoral votes; Clay 49, Floyd 11, and Wirt 7,—total 286. The lodge hid in the slave-pen; and, the slave-power being satisfied with him, the Northern Democrats "hurrahed for old Hickory," and the lodge and slavery triumphed without either showing their heads above the surface of American politics.

Never was a young party better led and equipped to enter the political arena than the Anti-masonic party in 1832. Seward of New York, Stevens of Pennsylvania, and Chase of Ohio were young men and Anti-masons, and each a host in himself. But Mr. Wirt, though a gentleman, Christian, and statesman was no politician. In his letter of acceptance, he said, "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamantal principles of the social compact, as treason against society, and a wicked conspiracy against the law of God and man which ought to be put down." —Wirt's Letter.

But Seward told him with a smile that he "knew nothing of the principles of Anti-masonry." If he did he would know that Anti-masons never would vote for Clay, as Wirt had begged that they might do. But Wirt insisted that they ought not to nominate him. He says (Kennedy's Life of Wirt, Vol. II., p. 360): "I told him [Seward] that I had no desire for the office; that I did not know how to electioneer; had no taste for the business, but, on the contrary, despised it."

Accordingly, when the Whig Convention came off (Dec. 1831), and the Masons resolved to run Clay in the face of certain defeat, Wirt piteously begged the Anti-masons to let him off; wrote letter after letter to Chase, Judge Carr and Lomax, urging them to consent to his withdrawal from their nomination, and the Anti-masons went to the polls under a leader who had forsaken and given them up! Yet they cast a strong popular vote for him, and carried the electoral vote of one State

Immediately after Jackson's election the Providence American suggested his re-nomination, as Birney was afterward nominated by the Liberal party. But Mr. Wirt wrote at once declining to have anything to do with it. The slavery question was then seized by the lodge as a cover to hide itself under. The war came. The lodge crept back into power, and, now stript of its disguises, it stands out boldly defying the friends of God and man to destroy it!

HAD THADDEUS STEVENS BEEN NOMINATED

instead of Wirt, God alone knows what different results might have followed. But perhaps there was not virtue and intelligence enough in the American people to have met the double issue of slavery and the lodge, by creating a party, true at once to liberty and light. But the slave question, which the lodge used as its weapon of defence, is now out of the way; and Wirt's description of Masonry as a "conspiracy against the laws of God and man," has been verified by the terrible history of our war; and the failure of Mr. Wirt's nomination is worth everything to us, as an instruction and guide. We see now as a certainty, what Wirt only saw dimly, that the lodge is "a political monster, as fearful as the Invisible Tribunal of Germany or the Inquisition of Spain, and ought to be extirpated." (Wirt's Letter of acceptance.) We see, too, that the thousands on thousands of liquor saloons, are perpetual caucuses in secret alliance with the lodges. We see that Masons will not destroy Mormonism; nor will moderate drinkers remove the distillery and the saloon. Our remedy for every evil is Prohibition. We must have an American party to make a

CLEAN SWEEP OF UN-AMERICAN EVILS.

Prohibition Masons are sworn brothers to Masonic distillers and brewers. The hope to overthrow the one without exterminating the other, is absurdity and folly. On the other hand, the two reforms united against both lodge and liquor, like the two jets of flame from a compound blow-pipe, will melt down the strong entrenchments of our national evils.

But we must not forget that "ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation," and that Christianity underlies every other valuable thing on earth. The Anti-masonry of Mr. Wirt's day forgot this and failed. They found it a severe, practical reality that "without Christ they could do nothing." A political party which omits God, ignores the Bible, and the Sabbath, has nothing left in its platform but an appeal to selfishness to cure sin.

Mr. Wirt treated slavery, too, as he treated the lodge. He started a German colony in Florida, a cardinal principle of which was that no black man should be allowed in it. Of course the experiment failed, as all schemes must, which are based simply on self-interest. The exodus from Egypt, the Lutheran Reformation, the American Revolution, the Abolition of slavery, and the present movements against liquor and the lodge were, each and all, based on a direct appeal to God; while Mr. Wirt asks (Kennedy's Wirt, vol., II, p. 369): "What more is the acceptance of a nomination than a consent to be proposed to the people for an office, on the calculation that the election may be carried?" That having been done, what, he asks, what inconsistency there is in his wishing to withdraw? A reform based on such mere worldly calculation is already defeated. And the hope of the Prohibition party to save our country from saloonism with the lodge, is as futile and vain as Mr. Lincoln's hope of saving the Union with slavery in it, for the modern lodge was born in a London grog-shop, and it retains the complexion of its origin. Every Knight Templar conclave, as is well known, brings a deluge of drink to the city where it meets. And yet Mr. Wirt, after his terribly just pictures of Masonry, insisted on the election of Mr. Clay, a Masonic high priest!

The difference between the Masonic and temperance lodges is but the difference in complexion and age between children of the same family, and worshipers of the same god. There must and will, therefore, be a divorce of the secret from open Christian methods of reform. And if the American party holds steadily on its way, the glorious cause of Prohibition will slough off the proud flesh of its secrecy, as the anti-slavery cause threw off the false friendship of the secret Know Nothings; and one great American Prohibition party arise and triumph over all opposition, as surely as the promise of God holds good, that all false plants in morals, religion and politics "shall be rooted up."

THE NEW CONGREGATIONAL CREED.

Tamerlane said he ruled men by "three arts, bribing, dividing and amusing." Satan's policy is the same. Just when slavery began to feel and fear the pressure of truth, Congregationalists and Presbyterians were kept bubbling like caldrons over fire. Every national church organization was divided except Papists and Episcopalians. The Presbyterian Assembly split into Old School and New, and the strife was intense while slavery lasted. Then the parts courted and remarried. Under the "Plan of Union" of 1801, Congregationalists and Presbyterians had an outside connection. That Plan of Union was repealed in 1837, during the hottest of the slavery discussion, and the excuse of Dr. Lyman Beecher for ignoring that discussion in the General Assembly, to which we used to send him, was: "Don't stir the Abolition question till we get this Old School fight off our hands. It will hurt us." Then two Western conventions were held, one at Cincinnati and another at Detroit, to unite the New School and the Congregationalists in one body. We all attended. Great speeches were made, and the slavery question suppressed, for fear of throwing off the New School; which, after all, went back to the Old. Thus the two great intellectual orthodox bodies, which were the chief factors in the Cromwellian struggles for civil liberty in England, were "amused" by Satan, by useless ecclesiastical discussions; and their vast constituencies kept in ignorance of the slave question by the very bodies most capable of enlightening them.

Now another great question is upon the American churches rending and dividing, as witness the struggles of that noble body, the United Brethren, and the Congregationalists, who are called by their leaders to split and form parties on a new Congregational creed, which three of the committee who formed it will not sign, and which Joseph Cook condemns with unmitigated severity. While every member of the creed committee, and every man who will unite in this creed controversy knows that the Masonic lodges, as openly advised by Rob. Morris, are throwing Masons enough into every Congregational church to oust every pastor who will not submit to the degradation of Masonic initiation, and fill the pulpit with preachers who will not dare to assert the divinity of Christ against the deism of the lodge.

THE PROHIBITION COMPROMISE.

Hon. Gideon T. Stewart of Norwalk, Ohio, is chairman of the National Committee of the Prohibition-Home-Protection party. He is a lawyer of ability and success; has devoted time, talent and money to the prohibition cause for years; and he is understood to be open and above-board in his methods of reform, and has neither taste nor wish to pack prohibitionists in layers of degrees, pledged to secrecy from each other, with un-Christian and grandiloquent titles; though perhaps he is willing to tolerate such folly in others. Miss Frances E. Willard named him as her choice for the Presidency some months ago, and several local, and one State convention has since endorsed her nomination.

Our readers know that Mr. Stewart last winter issued an able address to the people of the United States, and called a national nominating convention to meet in Pittsburg, May 21st. The secret wing of the Prohibitionists objected to the time and place, and demanded a recommitment of both, and asked for a convention at Chicago to meet after the Republicans and Democrats had held theirs in this city.

The demand for recommitment had this strong argument to support it: that though there is no rational hope of either old party going for prohibition so as to lose the vote of the breweries, distilleries, and saloons, yet St. John wished to wait till they had shown their hands, so that he can bring in his Kansas battalion of prohibitionists, who are not all ready to sever their old party ties till they have given their parties one more trial.

So Mr. Stewart has consented to a compromise, to hold his party together. Chicago is to give up the convention to Pittsburg, and the time is re-submitted to be decided, whether it shall be May 21st or July 23d, fifteen days after the Democratic convention.

Secretary Stoddard, who is also Secretary of the National committee chosen at Washington, has returned to Chicago, and there will doubtless be an extempore consultation of Americans, to deliberate and advise what course we are to pursue and to fix the time and issue calls for conventions by those who are empowered to do so.

Was Wesley a Mason?—The Christian Advocate of New York is out of respect for its patron saint, John Wesley, making some stout battles with the lodge, albeit Dr. Buckley, the editor, is a Mason not yet openly renounced. The article from the columns of the Advocate, quoting from Wesley's journal, reappeared in these columns lately. The Keystone of Philadelphia disputes the Advocate and Wesley himself—and affirms that the great English evangelist did belong to the order which defies the Saviour he loved to honor, and says: "Rev. John Wesley was made a Mason October 30, 1788, in Lodge 367, Downpatrick, Ireland." The Advocate knocks over the falsehood thus: "At the time when the Keystone says that John Wesley was being made a Mason in Ireland he was in the heart of England preaching morning and evening, and traveling all day by coach and chaise." But will the Masonic clamor cease? Will they let Wesley say himself whether he was a Mason or no? Doubtful. The slander will not die till the lodge does. But we must rejoice in the testimony which Dr. Buckley indirectly, but we hope not unintentionally, gives in his effort to keep Wesley's name out of bad company. The Advance comment on the matter is unworthy of a brave and Christian spirit. Because the Advocate has shown up a Masonic falsehood and defended a saint of God, the Advance sneers, "it is getting itself into a controversy, of course."

—We notice that the excellent article by Dr. J. H. Brookes of St. Louis, on "Infidelity in the Pulpit," which were published from the Truth, which Dr. Brookes edits, has been credited in some of our exchanges to the Cynosure.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from his long stay at the East on Friday morning, and is soon expecting to attend meetings in central Illinois.

—Bro. Hinman's letters leave him on the return trip to Washington, where he expects to assist, for the time being, in the work of the American Publishing Company.

—The Union Signal, national organ of the W. C. T. U., contains in its last two numbers very beautiful and tender tributes to the memory of Bro. C. L. Blanchard. These are from Mrs. Willard, the editor; Mrs. Carse, president of the Chicago W. C. T. U.; and from Bro. F. A. Shaver, who was associated with the deceased in business and attended him during his sickness.

—Last Thursday afternoon a fire broke out from some unexplained cause in the office of Ezra A. Cook, the former publisher of the Cynosure, and before it was extinguished had cleaned out his office room on the second floor of No. 13 Wabash Avenue and damaged his stock and machinery on the floor above. The deluge of water from a dozen or more engines did more destruction if possible than the fire. The insurance will cover the greater part of the loss, and Mr. Cook expected in a few days to resume his job printing. His book plates were stored in another building, so that except for the loss of the stock on hand there will be little or no delay in supplying orders as usual. Mr. Cook in this his third experience of severe loss by fire since he began business in Chicago, has the sincere sympathy of the Cynosure and its readers.

—Rev. P. A. Seguin is meeting a cordial reception in his mission of bringing the Gospel to the French people of Chicago, from various quarters. He is undertaking with energy and with a Pauline spirit of self-help that is truly commendable. He is arranging to teach French classes, and is agent also for the valuable works on Romanism: "Romanism as It Is," edited by Rev. Samuel Barnum, a large and very complete and comprehensive work upon the history, the doctrines and the influence of the Romish church in this and other lands; and Edith O'Gorman's "Convent Life Unveiled," a thrilling narrative of this nun, whose escape from the fearful scenes of a convent life has a world-wide fame. These books can be had by addressing Rev. P. A. Seguin, No. 175 South Green St., Chicago, and enclosing $3.50 for the large book and $1.50 for Miss O'Gorman's "Convent Life."

NOTICE.

The Rev. Jos. Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, will deliver the third discourse of the series being delivered under the auspices of the Chicago Anti-secrecy Christian Association in Carpenter Hall, 221 W. Madison St., Tuesday evening, April 8th, at 8 o'clock. Subject: "Secretism and Conscience." Resident readers of the Cynosure and friends are cordially invited and urged to be present.

THE MICHIGAN MEETINGS.

THE JOINT STOCK ASSOCIATION.

Williamston, Mar. 28, 1884.

The first annual meeting of the incorporated Association of this State will be held, as announced, in the Free Methodist church in the city of Jackson on the 9th day of April, to commence at 9 o'clock.

This meeting is perhaps the most important ever held in this State, and we do hope that every member of the Association will be present. At least let no one excuse himself for trifles, and let every one that is disposed to help in this great cause of the overthrow of the lodge power come and meet with us. The members of the Association in the vicinity should be sure to attend. No part of the regular business of the Association will be left to be done at Battle Creek. The forenoon will be taken up with the presentation and adoption of amendments to the Constitution and By-laws of the Association. At 2 o'clock, P. M., the election of the officers and Board of Directors. The reports of the Secretary and General Agent, and of the Treasurer will also be presented.

Adjournment will be had in time for the evening trains on the Central railroad and its branches.

We hope that all who can will arrange to attend the meeting of the old Association at Battle Creek, commencing Wednesday evening. But let no one confound the two meetings. The incorporated joint stock Association meets in Jackson, Wednesday morning, at 9 o'clock; the old Association meets in Battle Creek Wednesday evening.

W. H. Ross.

MICHIGAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The annual meeting for this body will be held in Centennial Hall, Battle Creek, Mich., commencing April 9th, 1884, in the evening. Day sessions on Thursday and Friday. Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton is expected to be present and speak Thursday evening, April 10. S. E. Starry will work the third degree of Masonry on Friday evening, when it will be clearly proven that the ceremony is similar to ancient sun worship, the worship of Osiris, etc. On Wednesday evening either J. P. Stoddard of Chicago or Pres. J. Blanchard are expected to speak. The day sessions will be devoted to discussions on important topics and such business as may properly come before the Association. We expect to be able to entertain persons from a distance free of charge, or at a very low rate indeed; so nearly so, that no one need stay away on this account. Our finances are in better shape than ever before, and our cause is gaining ground. Still, we have not a mint of money to run to yet, and every one will need to come prepared to do all they can in word and deed for the cause. Let us make this our very best meeting. Ample arrangements are made for all who wish to attend.

LITERARY.

The North American Review for April opens upon the well-battered topic, whether the United States are to regain their former pre-eminent rank as a commercial and naval power on the seas. The subject is discussed by the Hon. Nelson Dingley, M. C., who opposes the project of admitting foreign-built ships to American register, and by Capt. John Codman, who is well known as a zealous advocate of that measure. Judge J. A. Jameson discusses the question, "Shall Our Civilization be Preserved," pointing out the means that are at hand for withstanding the various agencies, physical, moral and intellectual, which threaten to overturn our existing civil an social institutions. The Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff gives a sketch of the "Development of Religious Freedom," an article which will be read with interest wherever the learned writer is known. Felix L. Oswald writes of "Changes in the Climate of North America", with special reference to the increasing frequency of disastrous floods, and Prof. C. A. Eggert offers "A Plea for Modern Languages" in the higher education. Julian Hawthorne discourses of "Literature for Children", with many bad ideas upon religion. Finally, there is a discussion of "Recent Criticisms of the Bible", by Heber Newton and the Rev. A. G. Mortimer.

The April number of Choice Literature presents an array of contents so varied and interesting that only to read the titles is sufficient commendation: Salvini on Shakespeare; The Winter Exhibitions; A Lady's Railway Journey in India; The Humming-Bird's Relatives; Our Growing Australian Empire; The Guide of Islam; Senilia: Prose Poems by Ivan Turgenief; Personal Recollections of Gambetta; Dream Upon the Universe—De Quincey's translation from Richter; The Brahmo Somaj Movement in India, by P. C. Mozoomdar; Explorations in Greenland, III, by Edward Whymper; The Brutes on their Master; The Milk in the Cocoanut; Rough Notes of a Naturalist's Visit to Egypt, by Principal Dawson; Sir Joshua Reynolds; The New School of American Fiction; The Congregational Creed; A Serbian Poet; Science Notes; Choice Literature is published for $1.00 per year by John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York.

The American Monthly is a new venture in magazine literature begun in this city this month. The name American we are glad to see becoming so popular in journalism. It may safely be predicted that it will become more so. This new visitor proposes to discuss intelligently the prominent questions before the people and will aim to present "both sides" of matters in controversy. With the example of the North American Review before it, the American Monthly evidently does not aim to reach and gain the esteem of the best class of readers. It does not, however, make a very auspicious opening with Dr. Thomas on the New Theology, and an infidel view of agnosticism by C. B. Waite. Eugene J. Hall, of local reputation as a poet, Dr. DeWolf and Dr. McVickar are among the contributors, Dr. DeWolf assailing Old Testament history. This monthly, we fear, uses a good name for a bad purpose.

Messrs. Lord & Thomas, the enterprising Newspaper Advertising Agents of Chicago, have issued a pocket map of the United States, showing in colors the divisions of Standard Time in the five continental sections, also the difference between Standard and Sun Time in all the principal cities on the continent. They will send it to any address on receipt of ten cents.

—The Breton sailors are said to pray as they launch out on the deep, "Keep me, my God, my boat is so small and thy ocean is so wide." One may well offer such a prayer when he attempts to comprehend and set forth in any measure the way of God's providence and the work of his kingdom in the world.

—In 1800 there were, according to the best available statistics, 365,000 in a population of 5,308,483—or about 7 per cent. In 1850 there were 3,529,988 communicants in a population of 21,191,876—about 15 per cent. In 1870, 6,673,396 in a population of 38,588,371—about 17 per cent. In 1880, 10,065,963 in a population of 50,153,866—a little over 20 per cent. The population has increased since 1800 nine fold; the number of evangelical communicants twenty-seven fold, or three times as much.

AN EASY TASK.

To get two-month subscribers for 25 cents will not be found a difficult work, if you fail in securing a yearly subscription. Each copy of the Cynosure is equal to an ordinary pamphlet of 80 pages. Eight such pamphlets for a quarter of a dollar is not extravagance by far. Let every reader of this paper present this matter to his neighbors.

THE HOME.

GOD KNOWS THE BEST.

Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned—
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet—
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry,
Because his wisdom to the end could see.
And e'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if, sometimes, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand that yours or mine
Pours out this portion for our lips to drink.
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with becoming grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend;
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we would push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day; then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart—
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if through patient toil we reach the land,
Where tired feet with sandals loose may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say: "God knew the best."

WHAT WE OWE TO ULRIC ZWINGLI.

Five things especially we owe to Zwingli: a juster conception of God—a juster conception of the Scriptures as the imperative dictate of God—a juster conception of the Holy Sacrament—a juster conception of the Christian church—and finally the evangelistic spirit of Protestantism.

These five things are great and the greatest is God. God is a Spirit. Zwingli put emphasis here. Luther demolished merit and annihiliated free, i. e. self will. He minimized man and left him a poor, lost and helpless sinner slain before the footstool of redeeming grace. Zwingli, on the other hand, magnified God. Equally asserting Justification by Faith, he carried the justified man up into a rarified and Alpine region. Not only did he say, "You are saved," but he went on to say, "You must be sanctified. You must put away things inconvenient. God is a Spirit. Worship must be spiritual. Life in union with the Son of God must be spiritual. The idols will he utterly abolish!" This was to tone the Reformation to its noblest pitch. For the character of God himself determines the character of his worshipers. Vision makes the man. Ourselves are what we look at. Religion cannot rise higher than this.

To Zwingli, secondly, we owe a juster notion of the Scripture, in itself and its parts as the direct declaration of God. To Zwingli we owe the chisel-like assertion of that rock of inspiration—self-evidence. The Bible, and in all parts of it—James as well as Genesis, Revelation as well as Romans—radiates lustre Divine.

The Bible is of such a nature that a torn leaf of it found by the wayside by one who never had seen it, would convince him at once that its strange words were the words of God. And such is the nature of things that no sinner can sit at a judge of the Law that commands and condemns him. And such is the nature of things that a critic criticizing testimony cannot embark himself on it to trust it.

The Bible is its own self-evidence. It shines the sun because it is the sun. That is the centre of the spiritual solar system. "The Bible is its own self-evidence!" "No man can possibly improve Divine assertion!" These were the twin germinal truths which underlie Zwingli's great argument at the first Zurich council; and these twin truths devine the real and the lasting difference between all human and Divine theological science.

In human science, based upon discovery, advancement must be gradual; each succeeding generation detects errors and improves upon the methods of the last. Not so in the Divine. Here God has spoken and his Word stands perfect and fills midnight with glory.

And in that glory stand the men, to whom it is revealed, in knowledge first, and not to be surpassed by the remotest generations. The second, the remoter generation, may lose lights. The glow that crowned the foremost Alp may dim adown the line. Heidelberg, to-day the oldest of Reformed confessions, has in it more assurance, joy, delight in God, full-heartedness, gemuthligkeit, than have the rest beside.

3. To Zwingli we owe the purity of the Lord's Supper. Not that his definition was exact, not that it was adequate. The most ardent admirer of Zwingli must find something frightfully cold in making the Lord's Supper a mere bald, naked sign—a Decoration Day service—the laying a wreath on a grave.

The Lord's Supper is not a sign of death only. It is a seal of life given down. Christ, in the Supper, is not a dead Christ only, but a Christ in resurrection—in present, personal communication and life-giving power.

Luther then had and held a great truth. Zwingli had and held a great truth. I believe that both men meant the same thing, although both men, in divaricating statements went astray.

What then do we owe to Zwingli? Two things:

(1.) An eternal divorce of the corporeal presence of Christ for the bread.

(2.) A true definition. Zwingli himself could not give that definition. Calvin did. But Zwingli's discussion was the alembic out of which came Calvin's definition. After Zwingli, and because Zwingli had made room for him, Calvin could come in and say, "Undoubtedly, 'This is my Body' means more than 'This is my Spirit.'" Undoubtedly, communion of the body and blood is more than fraternity of the members. Undoubtedly, Christ from heaven, not carnally, and not to human comprehension, feeds faith, and by faith the new nature. Undoubtedly, Christ formed within us is sustained by Christ outside of us. Undoubtedly the vine communitates sap to the branches. Undoubtedly we are members, as St. Paul says, "of his flesh and of his bones." Redeemed humanity down here is linked to, nay, it feels the palpitation of humanity enshrining God before the throne.

4. To Zwingli we owe the autonomy and independence of the church. To Zwingli, not to Luther. Luther, extreme in his conservatism, was content with shifting control from priestcraft to princes. Zwingli struck for the full indepedence of the church. As the Alps above the earth, so was Christ's church above the secular. Born from above, she lives, she moves, she grows, she conquers by a power Divine. She creates her own officers—rather God creates them by his Word. No man handles God's things but men of God's ordination. This brought out the consistory—what Zwingli called the still stand—Switzerland—Jerusalem, which is free, the theocratic, republican, self-competent and relf-respecting church.

Finally, to Zwingli, more than all others, we owe the evangelistic spirit in Protestantism, the spirit of progress. There are three kinds of men in the church—churchmen, creedsmen and lifemen. If Luther stands for the first, and Calvin for the second, Zwingli stands for the last.

Zwingli teaches us the necessity of enterprise—of aggression,—that conservatism also kills,—that swamps mean stagnation, and that they mean slow death. Zwingli points out, that if there be danger of making too much of man as an active co-operator with God—there is also danger of making too little of man and of representing him too exclusively as the mechanical, almost will-less, instrument of a machine-like purpose.

To Zwingli is due the notion of a larger and more generous freedom. To him we trace the sentiment, "In Essestials, unity—in Non-essentials, charity."

Zwingli's attitude is that of stretching out the hand. His is the symbolic action of Marburg!

Zwingli and Œcolampadius stand between the two great wings of Protestantism and clasp their hands as peacemakers between them both. They would say to Lutherism, Do not make the church too formal—to Calvanism, Do not make the creed too mathematical, discipline too pitiless, the church of God too naked.—Extract from Address of Rev. Dr. Geo. S. Bishop, at Philadelphia.

PROFESSOR THWING says: "Men are not to be coddled and cajoled. Religion is worth all it costs. Eternal life and eternal death are tremendous realities. Sin is not to be cast out by sweetmeats, nor are revivals the result of tea-parties. The social element of a church is best developed in the line of its legitimate work. Warm prayer-meetings, earnest Sunday-school and mission work, hearty congregational rehearsals or song services, and other church fellowships, will infuse a permanent and cohesive life that no temporary schemes can create. Sensible men will not be slow to detect the difference between the reality and the counterfeit, between the healthful activity of genuine life and the temporary devices of a faltering, failing cause."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

BACKBONE AND GRIT.

"The stage has gone, sir, but there's a widow lives here, and she's got a boy, and he'll drive you over. He's a nice little fellow, and Deacon Ball lets him have his team for a trifle, and we like to get him a job when we can."

It was a hot day in July. Away up among the hills that make the lower slope of the Monadnock Mountain a friend lay very ill. In order to reach his temporary home, one must take an early train to the nearest station and trust to the lumbering old coach that made a daily trip to K——. The train was late; the stage, after waiting for some time, was gone. The landlord of the little white hotel appeared in his shirt sleeves, and leaning his elbows on the balcony rail, dropped down on the hot and thirsty traveler what comfort could be extracted from the opening sentence of my sketch.

"Would we not come in and have some dinner?" "Yes." "Would he send for the deacon's team?" "Yes." "And the boy?" "Yes."

And the dinner was eaten and the team came round—an open buggy and an old white horse, and just as we were seated the door of the little brown house across the way opened, and out rushed the "widow's boy." In his mouth the last morsel of his dinner; he had evidently learned how to "eat and run." His feet were clad in last winter's much worn boots, whose wrinkled legs refused to stay within the limits of his narrow, faded trousers. As his legs flew forward his arms flew backward in an ineffectual struggle to get himself inside a jacket much too short in the sleeves.

"There he is," said the hostler; "that's the Widow Beebe's boy. I told him I'd hold the horse while he went home to get a bite."

The horse did not look as if he needed to be held, but the hostler got his dime, and the boy approached in time to relieve my mind as to whether he would conquer the jacket or the jacket would conquer him and turn him wrong side out.

He was sun-burned and freckled, large-mouthed and red-haired—a homely, plain, wretched little Yankee boy; and yet, as we rode through the deep summer bloom and fragrance of the shaded road, winding up the long hills in the glow of the afternoon sun, I learned such a lesson from the little fellow as I shall not soon forget.

He did not look much like a preacher as he sat stooping forward a little, whisking the flies from the deacon's horse, but his sermon was one which I wish might have been heard by all the boys in the land. As it was, I had to spur him on now and then by questions, to get him to tell all about himself.

"My father died, you see, and left my mother the little brown house opposite the tavern. You saw it, didn't you, sir—the one with the lilac bushes under the window? Father was sick a long time, and when he could not work he had to raise money on the house. Deacon Ball let him have it, a little at a time, and when father was gone, mother found the money owed was almost three hundred dollars. At first she thought she would have to give up the house, but the deacon said, 'Let it wait awhile,' and he turned and patted me on the head; 'when Johnny gets big enough to earn something, I will expect him to pay it.' I was only nine then, and I am thirteen now; I remember it, and I remember mother cried and said: 'Yes, deacon, Johnny is my only hope now;' and I wondered and wondered what work I could do. I really felt as if I ought to begin at once, but I could not think of anything to do."

"Well, what did you do?" I asked quickly, for I was afraid he would stop, and I wanted to hear the rest.

"Well, at first I did very funny things for a boy to do. Mother used to knit socks to sell, and she sewed the rags to make rag carpets, and I helped."

"How? What could you do?"

"Well, the people who would like a carpet could not always get the time to make it. So I went to the houses among the farmers and took home their rags, old coats, and everything they had, and out in the woodshed I I ripped and cut them up. Then mother sewed them, and sometimes I sewed some, too; and then I rolled them into balls and took them back to the owners, all ready to be woven into rugs."

"But did they pay for their work?"

"Oh, yes, we got so much per pound; and I felt quite like a young merchant when I weighed them out with our own steelyards. But that was only one way; we've two or three old apple trees out in the back yard by the wall, and we dried the apples and sold them. Then some of the farmers who had a good many apples, began to send them to us to dry, and we paid them so many pounds all dry and had the rest to sell."

"But you surely could not do much in ways like these?"

"No, not much, but something; and we had the knitting."

"Did you knit?"

"Not at first, but after awhile mother began to have the rheumatism in her hands, and the joints became swollen and the fingers twisted, and it hurt her to move them. Then I learned to knit; before that I wound the yarn for her. I had to learn to sew a little, too, for mother didn't like to see the holes without patches."

And he looked half smilingly at the specimen on his knees.

"But you did not mend those?" said I.

"Yes, sir; but I was in a hurry, and mother said it was not done as it ought to be. They had just been washed and I couldn't wait for them to dry."

"Who washed them?"

"I did, and ironed them, too. I can wash and iron almost as good as mother can. She don't mean to let me, but how is she going to help it? She can hardly use her hands at all, and some days she can not leave her chair, so I had to learn to make the beds, and to scrub the floor, and wash the dishes, and I can cook almost as well as a girl."

"Is it possible? I shall have to take supper with you on my way back to the city and test your skill."

Johnny blushed and I added:

"It's a pity, my boy, that you haven't a sister."

"I had one," he said gently, "but she died; and—if she had lived, I shouldn't have wished her to lift, and bring wood and water, and scrub as poor mother always did. Sometimes I wish I could have sprung all the way from a baby to a man. It's such slow work growing up; and it was while mother was waiting for us to grow up that she worked so hard."

"But, my dear boy, you can not expect to be son and daughter and mother, all in one. You can not do the work for a whole family."

"Yes, I can; it isn't much, and I am going to do it and the work my father left undone. I am going to pay that mortgage, if I live."

"Heaven grant you may," I said, fervently, under my breath; "for not many mothers have such a son."

"Mother don't know I mean to do it, and she is very anxious I should go to school, and I mean to sometime; but I know just where the boys in my class are studying, and I get the lessons at home. Mother reads them to me out of the book while I am washing the dishes or doing her work, and we have great fun. I try to remember and repeat it, and if we come to anything we can't make out, I take it over to the teacher in the evening; she is very kind—she tells me."

"Very kind? Who wouldn't be kind to such a boy? How do you expect to save if you spend your time indoors?"

"Oh, I don't do girls work all day; no indeed! I have worked out our taxes on the road. I wasn't much, but I helped the men build a stone wall down by the river; and Deacon Ball lets me do a great deal of work for him, and when I get a chance to take anybody from the hotel to ride, he lets me have his team for almost nothing, and I pay to him whatever I make. And I work on the farm with the men in summer; and I have a cow of my own and sell the milk at the tavern; and we have some hens, too, and sell the eggs. And in the fall I cut and pile the winter's wood in the sheds for the people who haven't any boys—and there's a good many people around here who have not any boys," he added, brushing a fly from the old horse with the tip of his whip.

After this we fell into silence and rode through the sweet New England roads, with Monadnock rising before us, ever near us and more majestic. It impressed me with a sense of its rugged strength—one of the hills, "rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun:" but I glanced from the mountain to the little red-headed morsel of humanity at my side, with a sort of recognition of their kinship. Somehow they seemed to belong together. I felt as if the same sturdy stuff was in both of them. It was only a fancy, but it was confirmed the next day, for when I came back to town after seeing my invalid friend, I called on Deacon Ball. I found him white haired and kindly faced. He kept the village store and owned a pretty house, and was evidently very well to do. Naturally we talked of Johnny, and the deacon said to me, with tears in his old, watery blue eyes:

"Why, bless your heart, sir, you don't think I'm going to take his money, do you? The only son of his mother and she a widow, and tied up into double bow knots with rheumatics, besides! True enough, I let his father have the money, and my wife she says, says she to me, "Well, deacon, my dear, we've not got a child and shall be just as well off a hundred years from now if the widow never pays a cent;" but 'cording to my calculations it's better to let the boy think he's payin'. She says I might as well try to keep a barrel of vinegar from workin' as to keep that boy from workin'. It's the mother in him and it's got to work. We think a good deal of the widow, Mandy and me. I did before I ever saw Mandy: but for all that we hold the mortgage, and Johnny wants to work it out. Mandy and me, we are going to let him work."

I turned away, for I was going to sup at Johnny's house; but before I went I asked the deacon how much Johnny had already paid.

"Well, I don't know; Mandy knows—I pass it to her; she keeps the book. Drop in before you go to the train and I'll show it to you."

I dropped in and the deacon showed me the account. It was the book of a savings bank of a neighboring town, and on its pages were credits of all the little sums the boy had earned or paid; and I saw they were standing in the Widow Beebe's name. I grasped the deacon's hand. He was looking away over the house-tops to where Monadnock was smiling under the good-night kiss of the sun.

"Good-bye sir, good bye," he said, returning my squeeze with interest: "Much obliged, I am sure, Mandy and me too; but don't you be worried about Johnny. When we see it we know the real stuff it takes to make a real man—and Johnny has got it: Johnny is like that mountain over there—chock full of grit and lots of backbone.—New York World.

TEMPERANCE.

DANGER IN SMOKE.

Kansas is mourning over the death of one of her most valued citizens, Congressman D. C. Haskell. The Kansas City Times speaks of the causes of his death as follows:—

"Mr. Haskell died from two causes only. First, overwork; second, oversmoke. He ought to have lived; he might have lived, with reasonable husbandry of his resources, until seventy-five or eighty years would have still found him in the harness. He delighted in physical exercise and had tremendous muscular powers, until within a few years, hard work broke him down and cruelly, wantonly, wasted his energies.

"At the early age of 41 he dies a victim to the two causes named above. During the long hours of the night that he devoted to the study of industrial questions he was an inveterate and constant smoker. Even during the sessions of the House he persisted in his 'day smoke,' and the inevitable chewing of the stump of the cigar."

Schuyler Colfax would have been in his grave years ago if he had not stopped smoking. He was on the point of breaking down, when he listened to wise counsel and threw away the cigar. And Stephen A. Douglas robbed the world of twenty years of his labor by inattention to to the laws of health; in a word, by intemperate habits. And many a youth of to-day will sink into an early grave after a useless life, by reason of the abominable practice of smoking cigarettes, even as many have gone already.

But words of warning will do no good to such. Smoke has a terrible power to blunt the sensibilities, as is manifested in the selfishness of smokers, who seem to have no manner of regard for the feelings of others, but remorselessly puff the nauseating fumes into the faces of men, women and innocent children. We have known husbands and fathers who pretended to have much affection for their families, who would persist in smoking a dirty pipe in the room where a wife or child was suffering with lung diseases! Such conduct is worthy only of barbarians. If their sensibilities could be aroused we would that some of them could see these words, and be led to consider the crime which they are committing.

EFFECTS OF THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Dr. Alexander contributes to the Phrenological Journal an inventory of symptoms caused by the excessive use of tobacco. It produces in a more or less pronounced form "1. Headache over the eyes. 2. Nervous headache, without sickness. 3. Nervous headache, with sickness of the stomach. 4. Deafness. 5. Partial blindness or amaurosis. 6. Running at the eyes. 7. Cancer of the lips. 8. Consumption, preceded for years by a cough. 9. Asthma. 10. Dyspepsia. 11. Palpitation of the heart. 12. Paralysis of the upper part of the body. 13. Neuralgia, especially of the face, head and neck. 14. Swelling of the gums and rotting of the teeth. 15. Enfeeblement of the lymphatics. 16. Enlargement of the glands of the face and neck, making the chewer thick about the cheeks and lips. 17. Lethargy. 18. Morbid appetite for spirtuous liquors. 19. Morbid appetite for food, especially highly flavored food. 20. Indistinct taste. 21. Indistinct smell. 22. Imperfect sense of touch. 23. Obtuseness of the moral sense. 24. Stertorous (or snoring) sleep. 25. Uncleanliness of person. 26. A sense of deadness and of great debility on first waking from sleep, until one has had a chew or a smoke. 27. Confirmed and incurable disease, and premature death."

A TOBACCO SLAVE EMANCIPATED.

Bro. Joseph F. Hindes of Baltimore, writes: "I promised you at Ocean Grove that I would write you some little of my experience in being led to give up the use of tobacco. My mind was not exercised on the subject (although I had been using it from childhood), until the summer of 1868. I then commenced trying, partly in my own strength and partly trusting in Jesus. I tried and tried, but did not succeed. Sometimes I would stop for several days and then commence again. This state of instability continued for fifteen years. Finally I became thoroughly ashamed of myself, and almost afraid to go to the Lord, having so frequently violated my vows. The Spirit, however, convinced me that I must give it up—my health was very much impaired, my throat was sore, and I suffered from bronchitis and other evils arising from this terrible poison. My physician informed me that I must abstain or never get well. On February 2nd, 1883, after attending a meeting for the promotion of holiness, I determined by God's help to give it up or die. The Lord gave me grace, and although I had to suffer bodily, my spiritual condition began to improve immediately, because my mind was at peace. Glory be to Jesus, he has kept me moment by moment, and now after about a year's trial, my bodily health is greatly improved, as well as all the faculties of my mind. I have no hesitancy now in testifying that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. And now after being a slave for forty years, (for I began the use of the weed when nine years of age), I am free. I cannot be too grateful. I feel like praising the Lord continually for the grace by which I have been kept thus far and I know he will keep me to the end of life. Glory, glory, to the Lamb! I am now privileged to attend two or three meetings every week on the line of Christian holiness, and I delight, as opportunity offers, to testify of the great salvation which God has wrought within me. Praise his name!"—Guide to Holiness.

THE CHURCHES.

THE LORD'S WORK AT CABIN CREEK, KY.

Bro. Edward Holloway of Clyde, Oakland Co., Mich., came here last fall to attend school and work in the vineyard of the Lord. He wrote me before he came that his health was very poor, but that if the Spirit lead him here he should not mind about his health. I saw when he first came that consumption had its hold upon him. Three brothers had already died of consumption, although they had the best of medical treatment. One, on the borders of the grave, gave his body up to the great Physician and was healed without any medicine.

We live on a creek, and the weather was rainy much of the time after Edward came, and soon he began to grow worse instead of better. His lungs became so sore that a slight pressure against them was painful. He had much pain in them. The least smoke or dust would affect him, and when it rained he could scarcely be about. Although only a few rods from the church, he was often obliged to stay at home during service. He was advised to go home to Michigan, but the Spirit did not lead that way and he would not go. Last New Year's eve, while prayer was being made especially for him, God touched him and he was made whole.

He had been quite sick that day and was in bed, while a few were praying for him in another room. One burdened in prayer for him received the witness that the work would be done. About twelve o'clock he called to me (the whole household was up, five of us,) and said he could almost take hold of the promises; and I offered a few words only in prayer before him, while another with stronger faith than mine was waiting in an adjoining room for the sound of victory, as the Spirit had revealed unto her that the victory would come; and soon the shouts from a strong pair of lungs rang through the house, sending out the words of "Glory, glory, it is done!"

The next day was rainy, but not a sore spot was left on his lungs. He worked out in the rain getting up wood. He now builds fires. No dust or smoke effects him in the least. He had promised God if he would heal him that he would use his voice in preaching the gospel. New Year's night he preached in the church, and his voice is clear and loud, so that he has been heard one-half mile in song and prayer or exhortation. Those that live in the house with us can best appreciate the work that has been done. The praise all belongs to God; no doctor has any share in it for none were employed.

"The day of miracles is passed," they said, "and we will see in a few days he will be as sick as ever." But four weeks have passed since the electric shock from the upper world touched his body, and he is perfectly well to-day. Yes, praise God, there are a few believers in Christ on earth yet, and "these signs shall follow them that believe" is as true to-day as ever.

Since his healing he has been married to Miss Melissa Shattuck of Tyrone, Mich., who came here to take charge of the primary department of my school. They were married in a prayer meeting, where the power of God rested upon the people, they both taking part in prayer, song, and testimony. A Squire performed the ceremony, and although he did not profess religion, he acknowledged the power of God was with the people, and that night he took a public stand for God, and has been trying since to live the religion of Jesus. The bride and groom were dressed perfectly plain, their only ornaments being "the meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price."

The Lord is surely here on Cabin Creek, and a few here have been gloriously saved of God. Some, after having been in a church for years without being saved from sin, have given up all, trusted Jesus, and received the witness of adoption. We have a little church here where a few brothers and sisters have given each other their hands. The creed, the covenant, the rules of order, are all printed in a large volume, and every member of the church has a copy. It is the Grand Old Bible. Fashion followers do not join, because they take the covenant, "Be not conformed to this world." Secret society men do not join for they take the covenant, "Let your light shine before men." Tobacco users do not join because the covenant reads, "Whatsoever you do, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Pleasure seekers do not join for they understand the covenant says, "Let the God of hope fill you with all joy," and therefore the world cannot be sought for joy. Brethren, pray for us. Bro. John G. Fee visited us and helped in the good work for near two weeks. Yours in the bonds of Christian love, LURA A. MAINS.

FRENCH MISSION IN CHICAGO.

The Rev. Mr. Seguin, formerly a priest of Rome and for four years an evangelist, opens another French mission next Wednesday evening at 7:45, at Lumbermen's Mission, corner of 21st street and Center Avenue. Mr. Seguin begs from the pastors of the various denominations of this city to co-operate with him in this vast enterprise of enlightening the thousands of French people located here and living without a hope, without the God of the Gospel, and he invites all to be present. The movement is entirely unsectarian, and nothing else but the Gospel is preached, and no discussion allowed.

On Friday evening Mr. Seguin will address the people of Pacific Garden Mission in the French language. Last Friday he addressed the people in English on his past experience and trials. He had the joy to see a Frenchman at the altar at the close of the meeting, and another one who came to shake hands with him, telling him about his soul and the need of such a work as the French Gospel meetings in Chicago.

REVIVAL IN FAYETTE CO., IOWA.

Mr. Editor:—A series of meetings of six weeks duration, held by the undersigned at the school-house two and one-half miles north of Brush Creek, Fayette Co., Iowa, was closed February 24th. Those who were reclaimed and professed conversion were about twenty in number. A small United Brethren class has been organized. This is a new point and this is the only class that has been organized in this vicinity.

The meeting was a very impressive one. It has often been remarked that there never has been a meeting in this country with such excellent order. The boys and young men of this vicinity surely deserve great praise for their good behavior during these meetings. The older people were not unmindful of temporal wants, hence two donations for our benefit amounting to $35.00 were cheerfully arranged for, for which we wish to express our most hearty thanks. It is generally known, we think, that the burden of donation entertainments rests heavily on the ladies. This fact shows the bravery and fortitude of the ladies, as well as the good will of the people. May the Lord bless the people, strengthen the church and preserve us in peace until the coming of our Lord.

WORK AMONG THE LUMBERMEN.

Bro. Wm. F. Davis, whose work among the lumbermen at East Saginaw, Mich., has been occasionally mentioned in the Cynosure, issues a monthly record of his good work, which should be widely read and as wide an interest created in this Gospel enterprise. In the January report he says:

"The evangelistic labors of Bro. Foote among us, for which, like Paul, he refused compensation, were very fruitful, but after three weeks of faithful preaching he was compelled by a distressing cold and cough to return home, and we have been without special assistance ever since.

"Over fifty professed to accept the Saviour during January. One, captain of a lake schooner, a prodigal from his father's house in Pennsylvania during the past twelve years, said that in all these years he had never entered a church nor heard a Gospel sermon until he came into our hall one evening. He stopped a few minutes, and went out and into the camps to work for eleven days. Then returning again to East Saginaw, he dove into the gambling hells, and thence, reeking with whisky, again entered the mission hall. On that evening all but three present accepted Christ. On being personally solicited, he advocated infidel doctrines, and went away without yielding. The following evening he returned with another woodsman, a Roman Catholic comrade. Again he refused the proffered redemption, and went out into the darkness.

"The next day at the noon meeting he was once more offered the opportunity of rising for prayer. He arose, and in a few broken sentences told the story of his wanderings, asked our prayers and prayed for himself, sobbing like a child, and promised to yield up all to Christ. Peace shone from every feature as he rose from his knees and said: 'Now I can go home and look mother straight in the face.' He went out with a Bible and a roll of assorted tracts and Gospel publications which he distributed in his boarding-house. The next evening his chum accepted the Saviour.

"A man in the last stage of consumption was visited by request. All the future was dark to him, and his mind filled with apprehension. The Word was read to him. He promised to accept Jesus, and give himself and all he had to the Lord. After the prayer he appeared comforted. He had the filthy tobacco habit, and cheerfully renounced it. The bag of poison which was under his pillow and another on the bureau were, with his full consent, emptied into the stove. Liquid poison had also been a bane of his whole life. His wife took the whisky bottle and poured its contents on the ground. The brandy bottle was, in compliance with his wish, treated in the same way, and he promised never to call for any of these poisons again, nor to abuse himself with them, even though others put them before him. Life had nearly ebbed away, but Mr. K. spent its remaining hours in witnessing for Jesus to his blind wife and child, and the neighbors who called.

"Living in the other part of the house with three little children is a poor woman, whose husband is serving out a sentence in Jackson State prison. After K.'s death she testified: 'I heard the most beautifulest singing that afternoon after you were here in the morning. I couldn't think where it came from. I came in here and Mrs. K. was out. I looked into the bed-room and saw it was Mr. K. I never knew he could sing before.' The next day he fell asleep in apparent trust in Jesus. Many gathered to hear the Word read and preached at the funeral, and by request a cottage meeting was appointed at the house of the widow for the next Thursday evening. At this meeting seven persons promised to accept the Saviour. Others have since sought peace in believing. These incidents indicate the nature of some of our city mission work, which is practically a boundless field."

—The Guide to Holiness and Northern Christian Advocate publish the fact that the Mississippi Methodist Episcopal conference has lately passed resolutions condemning secret societies. This is a grand step in reform. Will churches at the North mark where the breaking away from the lodge curse begins?

—The Moody and Sankey meetings in London Tuesday afternoon and evening last were crowded. A monster meeting of converts was held at St. Panera's Hall.

—One of Mr. Moody's greatest hindrances so he says, is the large number of church members who come to his meetings and keep out the unconverted and non church goers whom he desires to reach. At his first great meeting recently in a new part of London, he asked all who were Christians to rise. Not suspecting what was to follow, about three-fourths of the audience arose, when, quick as he could speak, Mr. Moody said, "Now do not sit down, pass out at once. Glad to know that you are Christians, and so you may go, as I want the sinners to come in." And as the stewards showed the Christians the way out, a great multitude which had been standing at the door crowded in and filled the Tabernacle with the very class which Mr. Moody wished to reach.—Advance.

—The Worcester Daily Spy of Monday, March 24th, reports in a very interesting way a discourse of Bro. E. D. Bailey in the series of meetings in Washburn Hall in that city thus:

"The song service in Washburn Hall yesterday afternoon was again attended by an audience entirely beyond the capacity of the hall. Before the hour of the service the hall, entrances, corridors and fronts and steps of the platforms were crowded. A larger number than usual found it impossible to get within hearing distance. The service was one of marked power. Rev. E. D. Bailey spoke very pointedly and forcibly of the devices of Satan to draw people away from the gospel and from God. The numerous saloons and kindred resorts in our city, which were accomplishing such a vast amount of evil, skepticism and worldliness, were among the most fruitful of these devices. The gospel of Christ, as the power to deliver from these devices, was earnestly presented. The address was eloquent and appropriate and made a deep impression. In the after meeting many powerful testimonies were given. A large number requested prayers and several in the inquiry meeting decided to become Christians. There is a growing interest in these services, and testimonies are constantly being given by those who have been led to become Christians in them. Rev. Mr. Harris of Fitchburg, Rev. T. W. Cottingham and Mr. A. B. Thombs of this city assisted in the services yesterday."

—General Clinton B. Fisk, speaking at the dedication of the Park Avenue church in New York, said that the Methodists have 27,000 churches, and are building 7,000 a year right along.

—The Cook County Sunday-school Association began its twenty-fifth annual convention Thursday last at Farwell Hall. The Secretary's report shows an increase in Cook County during the year of six schools and 6,712 scholars.

—Joseph Cook in his Monday lecture, March 19th, in Tremont Temple, Boston, criticized the new creed provided for the Congregational churches in somewhat severe terms. Dr. Goodwin of the Chicago First Church, in the Congregational ministers' meeting last week said, with regret, that he could not approve the creed as one of the committee, because it does not speak with emphasis upon the inspiration of the Scriptures and the vicarious atonement of Christ. The Congregational press generally approve the document.

—The Congregationalists at Strawberry Point, Iowa, have lately dedicated their first church. Rev. B. M. Amsden, the former pastor, took part in the exercises.

—Rev. J. D. Potter, the evangelist, has just left Brookfield, Mo., for Cameron. At the former place there were inquirers by the hundred and many found peace with God.

—The dedication of a new church in Williamsburg, Ky., the first ever dedicated in the county, and of a new school building for the American Missionary Association, drew together Dr. J. E. Roy of Atlanta, Dr. Wm. Hays Ward of the Independent, Pres. Fairchild of Berea College, and Secretary James Powell of the A. M. A., who all shared in the services of the day.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

of Kansas.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

of Connecticut.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

DO LIKEWISE.

At the Lockport convention steps were taken to organize American clubs throughout Niagara county in the line of a vigorous campaign, and the following persons were appointed delegates to the Chicago convention in June:

Peter D. Miller, Charlotte.
John Alberty, Lockport.
Tristram Corliss, Lockport.
Thomas Allen, Randall Road.
Homer Swiek, South Wilson.
O. P. Scoville, Lewiston.
John Hall, Lockport.
George W. Carl, Lockport.
Myron Orton, Pettin.
Samuel Witmer, Sanborn.

These are representative men of influence and means, and they will not be absent at "roll call" without the very best of reasons.

Every town, county and State in the Union, where there are two, three or more Anti-masons, should at once move in the matter of organization and appoint delegates to the National convention in Chicago. For blanks and helps send to E. D. Bailey, 215 4½ St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

J. P. Stoddard.

OUR NEXT PRESIDENT.

What are the Christian people of the country doing to secure, through either of the two great political parties, the nomination of a Christian citizen for our next President? What are the religious periodicals doing? What efforts are making on the platform where such a man as Joseph Cook speaks to the whole country and to half the civilized world? What are Christian representatives of the people in district and State conventions doing, or proposing to do?

The friends of President Arthur, of Mr. Blaine, of General Logan, of Senator Payne, of Mr. Randall and others, are at work to secure the nomination of their favorite. We are not aware, however, that the friends of any of these, or of other candidates seeking promotion from either the Republican or Democratic party, urge their fitness on the ground of Christian character. Indeed Christian character or Christian principles do not seem to be thought of in the consideration of the availabilities of the different candidates. Some of those who are rising to prominence as candidates have affiliations more or less direct with the Roman Catholic church. While to some people it may seem narrow and bigoted to object to a candidate on this ground, we are willing to say in view of the history of that church, in its relation to civil and municipal government in our own and in other countries, and knowing its position in regard to our public school system, the Christian Sabbath and all moral reforms, that we are opposed to bestowing upon it the prestige and power it would receive from installation in the White House of a family in sympathy with Rome.

Is it not time that the Christian people of the country should exert themselves to obtain a President of pronounced Christian views and sympathies? One who would identify himself openly and decidedly with the soundest evangelicism of the Protestant church? One whose heart would beat, whose brain would act, whose hand would work in accord with our best type of Christianity?

Are the ten millions of Protestant Christians willing that they shall have nothing more to do with the selection of the next President than simply ratify by their votes the choice of the men who usually set up our Presidential candidates?

Have they not the power, if they will use it, to bring forward a Christian statesman and elect him?—one who will give the whole influence of the executive office against Sabbath desecration by the several departments of the government; against Mormonism, or rather Mormon polygamy; against the abominable liquor traffic; against all those secret anti-republican organizations which are now a potent factor in American politics; and who would stand fairly on such a platform as the following, which has been adopted by the "American party?" [The American platform is here inserted.—Ed. Cynosure].

If the Christian people of the country will demand such a platform as the above and back their demand by the power they are capable of wielding, this will be the platform of the grandest political organization that has ever sought the control of the government.

It will not be hard to find the men who would be worthy leaders of this party of "moral ideas." If we were to mention some of them, we would name Judge Strong, Judge Agnew, Felix R. Brunot, and our own General James A. Ekin. All these belong to Pennsylvania. In all the other States of the Union men of equally high character and ability could be found.

If, however, the Christian people of the country cannot secure such a platform as above, and such a man as has been indicated from either of the two great parties they will still have a platform of principles which they can approve and a candidate they can support.—Evangelical Repository.

FARM AND GARDEN.

SORE SHOULDERS IN HORSES.

Early in the spring, at least two weeks before plowing commences, begin bathing the shoulders of each work horse with strong salt brine. I keep in the stalls an old fruit can, and a rag tied to the end of a cob; and it takes but a moment to throw in a handful of salt with some water, stir it up and apply the brine. It toughens and hardens the skin and cools it, allaying inflammation. I do this each evening; after work begins I first wash off the shoulders with clean water. I have never been troubled with sore shoulders since I have taken to carefully selecting collars, keeping them soft with oil, and bathing frequently with the salt water.

The best cure for sore shoulders is rest, and this may be secured without stopping work, by removing the pressure from the irritated spot. One method is to cut a long, narrow slit in the hame groove opposite the soreness, remove part of the stuffing, and make a little depression by pounding the face over the sore. The slit will not injure the collar. Another method is to use pads above and below the tender spot, to keep off the pressure. After considerable experience I consider the best pad one made by stuffing a coat sleeve with hay, about one inch thick between the collar and shoulder, but thinner where it passes under the hames. Hay works into lumps less than rags, hair or wool, and is elastic enough to spring the collar from the shoulders when the draft slackens, giving them opportunity to cool and rest.—American Agriculturist.

POSTS THAT WILL LAST.

The decay of wood embedded in the earth is difficult to guard against; but, according to the British Farmers' Gazette, a simple precaution, costing neither money nor labor, will increase the durability of posts put in the ground by fifty per cent. This is simply by taking care that the wood is inverted—i. e., placed in the opposite direction to that in which it grew. Experiments have proved that oak posts put in the ground in the same position in which they grew, top upward, were rotten in twelve years, while their neighbors, cut from the same tree, and placed top downward in the soil, showed no signs of decay for several years afterward. The theory is that the capillary tubes in the tree are so adjusted as to oppose the rising moisture when the wood is inverted.

STRAWBERRIES ON THE FARM.

The catalogues are confusing with their many varieties, old and new. For home use no new or untried kinds are worth taking as a gift; what we want is fruit and plenty of it. Charles Downing, Bidwell, and Sharpless are among the reliable kinds that have been tested, and may be planted with confidence. Having ordered the plants, prepare a place for them. The size of the bed will of course depend upon the number of plants, which are to be two feet apart each way from one another, and two feet from the margins of the bed. Make the soil rich with old, decomposed manure and ashes, to be worked in as deep as possible by spading. When the plants come, their roots should be shortened or cut back to two-thirds or one-half their former length, and all the dead leaves removed. In planting, open a wide hole with the hand and spreading the roots in all directions, separating those that are matted, carefully work the earth in among them, and having covered them with earth press it firmly over them. The plants will soon start into growth, and new leaves open. It is probable that clusters of flower buds will appear in the center of some of the plants; if so, pinch them off as soon as they are seen, as we now wish to raise plants and not fruit. As the season advances runners will be formed, and at length a bud will appear upon the end of each and finally take root. If the runners do not become fixed readily—as they are often blown about by the winds—place a clod of earth upon them to hold them fast. After the plant from the first bud has grown to some size, that will throw out runners, and so on, all the season. The object being to raise as many plants as possible, the runners should be watched, and not allowed to interfere with one another, but distributed evenly over the bed. If necessary, water the bed, and pull up by hand all weeds that appear.—American Agriculturist.

THE SUNFLOWER AS AN OIL PLANT.

Inquiries have recently been made of us concerning the cultivation of the sunflower on a large scale for the sake of the oil contained in its seeds. The sunflower as an oil plant is sparingly cultivated in France, and to a greater extent in Southern Russia. In this country, aside from castor oil and linseed, very little has been done in cultivating oil-bearing plants. We have now less need of cultivating them than formerly, as the products of petroleum afford a wonderfully cheap illuminating oil, while oil for other uses is obtained cheaply from cotton seeds, formerly a waste product. Abroad the sunflower is not regarded with much favor as an oil-bearing plant, as the yield is only about fifteen per cent. of the weight of the seeds, while cotton seed (hulled) yields fifty per cent. The ashes of the sunflower stem contain a very large amount of potash, showing that the crop draws very heavily upon the soil for one of its most valuable plant constituents, and would soon impoverish it.—American Agriculturist.

Orange county, N. Y., has given special attention to the breeding of fast horses, greatly to the detriment of its interests every way. The local Farmer well says—what is doubtless true in other sections also—that for each trotter marketed there for a fair price, at five years old, fifty have been sold for less than cost of service of their sires. "Financially, the whole business has been a curse, and it has had a demoralizing influence as well in many other directions."

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle: DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

IN BRIEF.

It is reported that the French government is about to lay a further length of 4,530 miles of underground telegraph wires, the cost of which will be about $11,000,000.

The Hon. Thomas Cornell has headed a subscription with $1,000 for a monument to be erected to Lieutenant Chipp, of the ill-fated Arctic steamer Jeannette, in Rondout, New York.

The late Richard Somers Smith of Philadelphia, was the third of six brothers, all of whom lived to celebrate their golden weddings. He was born in 1789, and consequently lived under the administration of every President the United States has yet had.

Scene: an Irish cabin. Pat is ill. Doctor has just called. "Well Pat. have you taken the box of pills I sent you?" "Yes sir, be jabers, I have, but I don't feel any better yet; maybe the lid hasn't come off yet!"

The mill owner who turned the fire hose upon some of his disorderly employes, explained his conduct by saying he was only washing his hands.

The blowing down of an oak near Washington, Ga., revealed a little heap of gold and jewels, diamonds, rubies and pearls, said to be worth $20,000. It is supposed that they are part of the treasures lost by members of the Confederate cabinet.

A long span of wire: the longest span of telegraph wire in the world is said to be stretched across the Kistnah river from hill to hill (each hill being twelve hundred feet high), between Bezorah and Sectanagrum in India. The span is a little over six thousand feet in length. The only contrivance used in stretching this cable across the river was a common windlass.

It indicates the extent to which the slave trade was carried on in the Soudan, the fact that when Col. Baker, then Governor General of Southern Egypt, marched into that country, he found one Arab dealer ready to oppose him with 11,000 armed followers. In the battle which followed 2,000 of them were slain and the remainder put to flight. He afterwards found twenty-five depots into which the Arab had gathered not less than 10,000 slave women. These depots were for the time broken up. It is a part of the spirit of the insurrection there at the present time to restore this detestable traffic.

Not many years ago the occurrence of copper, mica and soapstone vessels in the Indian graves of our Eastern States pointed, it was supposed, to a vast aboriginal commerce. The researches of practical archæologists, however, are constantly bringing to light new sources of supply, that were formerly worked much nearer to the mounds and graves where their productions found their last resting place. The finding of many half-finished pots and rude tools at Chula, Va., was soon followed by the discovery of several large soapstone quarries in the District of Columbia. J. D. McGuire, of Ellicott City, Md., has found soapstone quarries in Maryland, and after considerable research, has discovered how they were worked.

The correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate writes: I do not remember to have ever seen any Icelanders in this country until the other day, when at the mouth of Lake Superior, on a Canadian steamer, I saw one hundred and forty. With one exception there were none over five feet five inches in height. They wore moccasins but otherwise they were clad rather after the German style. The one having charge of the company spoke English perfectly, was intelligent, gentlemanly, and very willingly answered my questions relative to his people. He assured me all were church members—Lutherans—had their Bibles, and would have their pastors when they shall have arrived at the place of destination near Lake Winnipeg. I learned that two hundred and fifty had passed through these locks at St. Mary's Falls but two days before, which together made 390, and these were to be followed by others. At this rate how long before that cold and almost barren island will become depopulated? Its population of 70,000 could improve their condition by immigrating to our Northwest, but not in their morals. It is said that there is a Bible in every home in Iceland, not for ornament, but for use; and that these Bible-reading people have no use for theaters, prisons, sheriffs, artillery, or soldiery.

REMINISCENCES OF ROCHESTER.

THE FALLS OF THE GENESEE AND SAM PATCH'S FATAL LEAP—ONE OF ITS BUSINESS HOUSES AND ITS GREAT MAGNITUDE.

The present floods, which are either devastating or threatening the conntry in every direction, are justly cause for apprehension. No matter whether they come suddenly or by slow degrees, they are, in either case, a great evil and much to be dreaded, and yet America will always be troubled by these spring overflows. Probably one of the most disastrous that was ever known occurred in Rochester, N. Y., about twenty years ago. The Genesee river, just above the falls, where Sam Patch made his final and fatal leap, became completely blockaded by ice, forming an impassable dam, and the water coming down the Genesee river overflowed the prineipal portion of the city of Rochester. This catastrophe would have been repeated the present year had not the energy and foresight of the city authorities prevented it. The writer happened to be in Rochester at that time and was greatly interested in the manner in which this great catastrophe was averted. Every few moments a roar like the peals of thunder or the booming of cannon would be heard, and in order to see this ice-blasting process, the writer went to the top of the new Warner building, which overlooks the Genesee river. From here he was not only enabled to see the process uninterruptedly, but also the magnificent building which has just been completed. This is unquestionably the finest building devoted to business and manufacturing purposes in America, being entirely fire-proof, eight stories high, and containing over four and a quarter acres of flooring. Mr. Warner treated your correspondent very courteously, and in the course of the conversation said:

"We are doing a tremendous business and are far behind in our orders. This is the season of the year when people, no matter how strong their constitutions may be, feel more or less the pain and indisposition, the headaches, colds, neuralgia, rheumatism, dull pains, sore throats, coughs—all the 1,001 ills that flesh is heir to come this time of the year, if at all. It is natural, therefore, that we should be very busy. This is specially true of our Safe Rheumatic Cure, and it is crowding us very sharply for a new remedy."

"Singular, but I had forgotten that you do not advertise to cure all diseases from one bottle, as is done generally by many other medicine men, but I supposed Warner's Safe Cure was for the cure of rheumatism."

"And so it has been until our remedy which was especially for rheumatism and neuralgia was introduced. We have been three years perfecting this new remedy. Study first taught us there were certain powerful elements in Warner's Safe Cure, better known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, that made wonderful cures in chronic and acute rheumatism, but during our investigation, we learned of a remarkable cure at a celebrated springs, and put experts to investigate and found that the springs did not contain any valuable properties but the course of treatment that was being given there was performing all the benefit. By carefully combining the active principles of this remedy with our Safe Cure, we have produced our Safe Rheumatic Cure, and the cures it is effecting are simply wonderful, and I do not doubt it will become as popular as our Safe Cure."

"You seem to talk freely in regard to your remedies and appear to have no secrets, Mr. Warner."

"None whatever. The physician with his hundred calls and one hundred diseases, is necessarily compelled to guess at a great deal. We are enabled to follow up and perfect, while physicians can only experiment with their hundred patients and hundred diseases. With the ordinary physician the code binds him down, so that if he makes a discovery, he is bound to give it to the other physicians, which, of course, discourages investigation to a great extent. This is why the great discoveries in medical science of late years have been made by chemists and scientists and not by physicians, and it in a measure accounts for the great value of our remedies, also for the remarkable success of all those doctors who make a specialty of one or two diseases."

"And you find that you are curing as great a number of people as ever before?"

"Yes, a far greater number. We never sold so much of our medicine as now and never knew of so many remarkable cures."

The writer departed after the above interview, but was greatly impressed, not only by the sincerity of Mr. Warner, but by the vastness of all he saw. Mr. Warner's medicines are used throughout the entire length and breadth of the land and we doubt not the results they are effecting are really as wonderful as they are related to be.

Hand Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees; paper cover.....35c

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History and Minutes of the National Christian Association. Containing the History of the National Christian Association and the Minutes of its Conventions at Syracuse, N. Y., and Pittsburg, Pa. 289 pages; cloth, 75 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 25c. per doz. $2.25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

ANTI-SECRECY TRACTS.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The Fitz John Porter bill still lies upon the table of the Speaker of the House, with the amendments of the Senate, but an attempt will be made to secure its consideration this week. It is pretty well understood that the President will veto the bill if it ever reaches him.

—In furnishing supplies for the relief of the sufferers from the overflow of the Mississipi river, the Secretary of War will follow the same general plan employed with so much success in the case of the sufferers from the Ohio floods.

—Robert Smalls, the well known colored politician of South Carolina, has been elected to Congress to fill the unexpired term of the late E. W. M. Mackey. He will be given a grand reception by the colored people of the District. They have hired a carriage with four white horses to bring him from the depot, and there will be an escort of all the colored military companies in the District. Smalls is a man of considerable ability, and is respected by everybody.

—The joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution to extend the right of suffrage to women, reported favorably to the Senate to-day from the Committee on Woman Suffrage by Senator Palmer, provides that the legislatures of the several States be asked to ratify the following article, which it proposes as an amendment to the Constitution:

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article.

—The bill for the extension of the whisky tax was brought up last week and overwhelmingly defeated after a debate of two days in the House. The vote was 185 to 83.

COUNTRY.

—Berner, who murdered a Mr. Kirk in cold blood for money, and who confessed the crime, was acquitted by a Cincinnati jury last week of the crime of murder, and was only condemned for manslaughter. The public indignation rose to such a pitch that an indignation meeting was held Friday night in the great Music Hall at the call of prominent citizens. Crowds by the thousand filled the streets, unable to enter the building. The temper of the meeting was soon beyond control through indignation at the shameful conduct of lawyers and jury. Ropes were brandished and as the meeting broke up the mob took possession of the streets and attempted to break into the jail to lynch some of the twenty-five murderers confined there. They were repulsed after much firing back and forth. The local military were called out and several were killed or wounded. The mob hung about during Saturday and resumed their attacks at night. Before morning the court-house near the jail was sacked and burned, and continual firing struck down scores of victims. The mob resumed its work Sunday night with more victims, the whole number killed being 75 and 150 wounded. Militia were ordered out from all parts of the State, and the U. S. troops were also called for. By Monday noon it was believed that the worst was over and quiet restored.

—The first through train from the City of Mexico to Chicago arrived Friday morning, the avant courier of a large traffic between the two cities.

—The National convention of inventors opened Tuesday at Cincinnati, with 2,000 delegates in attendance.

—The taxable property of Missouri this year is placed at $719,000,000, an increase of $80,000,000 in two years.

—Two earthquake shocks, one lasting fifteen seconds, occurred at San Francisco Tuesday afternoon. The people rushed from their houses in terror, and several structures near the water front were severely damaged.

—The Hungarian Countess de Racouska stopping at Philadelphia, shot and seriously wounded a 12-year-old boy, early Tuesday morning, who had been sent to request her to extinguish her gas. The Countess is in jail.

—At the annual meeting of the Bell Telephone Company at Boston Tuesday the year's earnings were reported to be $2,295,594, and dividends amounting to $1,051,479 had been paid. The earnings of the company in Canada will warrant 6 per cent dividends.

—The bill prohibiting the buying or selling of grain or other produce on fictitious contracts or margins passed the Iowa House Wednesday night. The act had already passed the Senate.

—The Indiana State Temperance Union, in annual session in Indianapolis, decided to hold a political convention and nominate a straightout Prohibition ticket in the event that neither the Republican nor Democratic conventions declared in favor of prohibition.

—Dan Dowd, James Howard, O. W. Semple, William Delane and Dan Kelly, bandits, were hanged at tombstone, A. T., Friday afternoon; William R. McDonald was executed at San Bernardino, Cal., and Joe Howard paid the extreme penalty at Columbia, S. C.—all for murder.

—A mass meeting at Lincoln, Ill., Wednesday denounced the acquittal of O. A. Carpenter of the murder of Zora Burns. The resolutions adopted expressed the belief that Carpenter is guilty of the crime, and demand that he leave Logan county without unnecessary delay.

—A cyclone at Loudon and Pittsburg, Ky., Tuesday night, wrecked the Methodist church and many dwellings, the house of Mr. Broughton being blown down, killing his wife and two children. A dozen persons are reported as fatally injured and several others slightly.

—At Newton, Lenoir, and Mecklenburg, S. C., Tuesday night, a cyclone destroyed hundreds of houses, and probably a dozen persons were killed, among the victims being a whole family and six women.

—Cyclones Tuesday afternoon ravaged the country near Dayton, Ohio, and Colemansville and Falmouth, Ky. Near the former place houses and barns were leveled and two persons killed, while Colemansville was completely wrecked, ten people losing their lives. Near Falmouth forest trees were mowed down in great numbers.

—The Bell Telephone Company at Boston, Thursday, in experimenting with a No. 12 wire and an ordinary instrument, could hear the faintest whisper in an attempted conversation with New York.

—Near Ansonia, Conn., Wednesday afternoon three dams gave way, the surging waters devastating a tract of country a mile long and 20 to 170 yards wide, involving a total damage of $100,000.

—The Citizens' League of Chicago, for the enforcement of State laws against saloons, has taken an active interest in the State League, and a regular organization will be perfected in every large city of the State. Andrew Paxton has been chosen State Agent, and will devote all the time he can spare from the league work in this city to pushing the work throughout the State. It is proposed to make the fight in every county and elect as many of the legislators as possible. The campaign is to be fought hand to hand in every district.

—Representatives of the various labor organizations of the State of Illinois, together with delegates from the granges of the State, met in mass convention in Chicago last week.

—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ontario have petitioned for the introduction of temperance text books in the schools, and are sanguine that their request will be granted.

—In the New York Assembly Thursday night a bill was reported prohibiting the manufacture or sale of any substitutes for butter, and appropriating $30,000 to carry out the objects of the measure.

FOREIGN.

—Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, the youngest son of Queen Victoria, died suddenly Friday at Cannes, in the south of France.

—Prussia orders the state payment of salaries of the Catholic clergy of the diocese of Cologne to be resumed, beginning January last.

—General Gourko, Governor General of Poland, recently convened the principal officials of that province and gave them notice that the Czar meant there should be an energetic Russification of Poland.

—Thursday General Graham advanced to Tamanieb and burned the village, the Arabs fleeing after making slight resistance. The Cairo authorities consider that Osman Digna's retreat without a decisive battle leaves the opening of the Berber route unsettled, but the campaign is thought to be over.

—A dispatch on Friday from Suakim says the Tenth Hussars, the York and Lancaster regiment, and the Irish Fusileers have embarked for home. The sheiks of the Samarar, Danilet and Hoorah tribes, who represent 5,000 people living between Suakim and Kassala, have come in and have promised to assist in the capture of Osman Digna, whose prestige has been destroyed.

President Arthur, it is said, is very fond of playing "poker" but since he entered the White House he has never played a game of cards, at least not in the executive mansion. It would be a pleasant thing to say of our President that he had, out of consideration for the moral principle of the people, which condemns card-playing, been willing to forego this questionable amusement. Had he had respect to the equally strong sentiment of the people in favor of continuing the temperence regime of Lucy Hays and Mrs. Garfield, we might give him this credit. But there must be some other reason. If Mr. Arthur's poker-playing was as expensive as that of some men he might well have ceased on the principle of simple economy. There are some other expenses about the White House that have perhaps taken the place of the game. The President gives frequent dinners. Fifty to sixty guests are invited to each and the cost of each plate, including the wines, is said to be not less than ten dollars. These sacrifices to the maws of epicures have thus cost Mr. Arthur some $6,000 or more the past season. It is hard to say that this is much better than poker playing.

Illinois has a statute against stock and grain gambling, but it does not seem that the Chicago Board of Trade pays much regard to the matter and the papers join the violation of law by daily printing the price of options just as they do of racing pools in their season. The Ohio legislature has just passed a bill against the dealing in "margins" or "futures" in oil, stocks and provisions as against the public policy. The penalty attached to this law is a fine of from $50 to $1,000 and from one to three months in jail. If Ohio will enforce this law and sharply punish its violation other States which have similar statutes may take courage and finally drive out this popular but pernicious kind of gambling.

The German government has just paid a salary to a Roman Catholic bishop for the first time since the passage of the Falk laws in 1872 and '73. The restoration of the Romish church has so far proceeded that only the dioceses of Cologne, Guesen-Posen and Munster remain under disability. Nine out of the twelve dioceses are now in working order. The backward steps which have been taken by Bismarck in this later journey "to Canossa" are told in another part of this paper. It is a significant fact that most of the Jesuit missionaries are Germans, though they are educated at Jesuit seminaries in Holland or England. The Jesuits have in foreign mission work alone 1,602 priests, 799 teachers and 971 "lay-brethren." If they can send such an army to heathen lands the forces operating in the home fields must be as formidable in number as they are dreadful in their secret, comprehensive and unscrupulous methods.

Of the ultimate causes of the great Cincinnati riot, which are carefully eliminated from the confusion of gore and fire and wounds and misery by several writers in this number of the Cynosure, none are more dark or potent than the unlawful and fearful bonds of the lodge. The actual perjury which all this burden of corruption of courts represents is something fearful to contemplate; and if our nation escapes judgment it must be because we are forgiven much as a people. The London St. James Gazette tells a story of melancholy Irish humor which shows exactly the state of thousands of our neighbors who are under the false bonds of lodgery: "The other day a priest in Kerry went to his bishop. 'I want you, he said, 'to give me a general dispensing power for cases of perjury.' 'For perjury?' said his lordship. 'What do the people want with that?' 'Faith!' answered the good father, 'they can't get on without it. For, first of all, the moonlighters come to them and swear them that they must say that they didn't know who they were; and then there's the Arrears Act, and they have to take the oath they're not worth a farthing; and you know in the Land Court they can't get a reduction till they say they can't pay their rent. In fact, my lord, the poor people have to perjure themselves at every turn?'"

During the Cincinnati riot various undefined rumors were sent over the wires about the appearance of secret Nihilistic bodies in the fray; and the German Turner societies were also reported in secret meeting, as if the fate of the city depended upon the concealed deliberation of these men. Probably much of this was but rumor, but "a very prominent old citizen" told an Inter Ocean correspondent that a secret organization of 500 men had set a night to attack the jail and lynch the worst murderers confined there, but the Music Hall meeting and the mob got there before them. It is a fact, according to the same correspondent, that the whole city was placarded with a small yellow bill containing only the figures 3-10-30 and a star. The old gentleman's explanation of this bill is a reasonable one.

The patrons of the Friends' Boarding School at Providence, Rhode Island, are about to place a marble bust of John Bright, the great English statesman and philanthropist in the hall of that institution. Mr. Bright being informed of the project has written a letter of acknowledgment which is so full of sympathy for America and of hope for the era of international peace that it is worth transcribing: "I did what I could to prevent discord between the two English nations and to teach our people the nature of the great issue which depended on the conflict in which, twenty years ago, your people were engaged. I lamented the conflict, but I wished England should offer her sympathy on the side of freedom to the slave, and in favor of the perpetual union of your great republic. When I look back on the past, I look with unalloyed satisfaction, and would withdraw no word I uttered in connection with the contest on which England and the civilized world looked with profound interest. The question of peace, to which you refer, claims the sympathy of all Christian nations. On your continent we may hope your growing millions may henceforth know nothing of war. None can assail you, and you are anxious to abstain from the quarrels of other nations. Europe unhappily is a great camp. All its nations are armed as if expecting invasion from its neighbor, unconscious apparently that great armies tempt to war the moment any cause of dispute arises. The potentates and the governments of Europe, I doubt not, dread war. They seek to guard themselves against it by arrangements. We in England are not free from blame, but with us the love of peace is increasing, and no government can engage in war without risking and even losing the support of the people. We are so involved with territory and populations over half the globe that difficulties are almost constantly arising, and our danger of wars is greater than almost any other nation. I am, however, confident our feeling against war is sensibly increasing, and I trust and believe the moral sense of our people will more and more condemn it."

MOB LAW AND ITS REMEDIES.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The recent terrible riot in Cincinnati indicates a most unhealthy state of society and points unmistakably to some malign and occult influence that could occasion and execute these deeds of wickedness. It is a matter of profound interest not to Cincinnati alone, but to the nation and the world that we find and remove the source of evil before other cities become involved in like calamities.

A brutal murder was committed; the evidence was unquestionable and confessed; and yet the jury returned a verdict which the judge declared to be an outrage on justice, and the people felt was with a deliberate purpose to set aside its demands. Sixteen or more other murderers were in the jail awaiting trial, who under similar influences seemed likely to get a similar verdict.

It was but one of many similar instances. Dukes of Pennsylvania committed the double crime of the seduction of Miss Nutt and the murder of her father. The facts developed were undeniable, and yet the jury acquitted him. When young Nutt killed the murderer, all men felt that however unjustifiable the act of the rash young man, and however unreasonable the verdict of his acquittal on the plea of insanity, yet he had simply executed the vengeance which the law should have done, and from some malign influence had failed to do.

This continued immunity of crime, and these popular protests of violence and blood indicate:

1. That there is, somewhere in the machinery of our civil society, a something that defeats the administration of justice, makes law a mockery and our courts but meaningless forms.

2. That in the absence of any other adequate explanation we have a right to infer that this perverting influence is in those secret combinations that are sworn to mutual protection and which constitute another government hidden from, and hence not responsible to public opinion; and with laws and covenants inconsistent with the laws of the land. Besides Freemasonry, which Wm. H. Seward, Francis Granger, Millard Fillmore, and many others declared that "it defeats the administration of justice, and tramples on every government that it cannot control," the whole framework of society is honey-combed with similar institutions; some of which are secret in the sense that a part of the covenant is, that the existence of, and membership in them is to be kept a profound secret. These societies have been organized in Cincinnati. They are the Nihilists of America, not plotting for the overthrow of the forms of government, but rather subverting its laws and perverting our courts into shields and buttresses for crime.

3. That utterly inadequate, unwise and unjustifiable as are these outbursts of outraged justice—they indicate the need of a great reformation in civil society and especially in the administration of law. Such a reformation is especially needful here in Washington, where the ancient prophet might well exclaim, "And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off, for truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey."

4. In all forms of disease the first indication is to search out the cause, and remove it. Civil society is no exception. There can be no remedy while the foundations of justice are clogged by the influence of these selfish combinations. Any institution whose existence, covenants, laws and penalties are not open to public inspection is a standing menace to public justice and the authority of the State. The remedy is in making all such societies open to government inspectinn, and providing by law that no juror shall be accepted who is a member of a secret society and when either party is also a member of such society.

5. Favoring and exciting causes are often widely different. Sober-minded people, however much they deplore the perversion of justice will not resort to mob violence as the remedy. Until men are intoxicated by some more potent influence than the eloquence of orators they will continue to be law-abiding. Mad men compose mobs, and whatever may have been the cause of discontent, it always needs the incitement of strong drink. The conspirators against our National Union could never get even a vote for armed rebellion until they were inflamed with alcohol. It is very certain that had there been no saloons in Cincinnati there would have been no mob.

Cincinnati has been taught a terrible lesson which not that city alone, but all others should heed, that the toleration of the traffic in intoxicating drinks is a perpetual injury, and a standing menace of the public peace. The remedy is prohibition. Not this alone, but including this we may hope for a triumph of justice and the supremacy of law.

MASONRY AND CRIME.

Our bad criminal laws, and their worse administration, are driving the people to acts of desperation. They are beginning to feel, not only that the law furnishes no protection to life, but that it cannot be relied on to convict and punish the worst criminals. Trials for murder are mere mockeries of justice. Those who complain about it, find the cause in the incompetence or criminal sympathy of jurors, selected because they confess themselves to be know-nothings; or in the entanglements growing out of endless and senseless legal technicalities; or in the venality of lawyers, who for money will undertake for men whom they know to be vile criminals; to the willingness of judges, on any pretext, to grant delays and rehearings; or to the quibbles of the higher court judges, who treat with suspicion every verdict of guilty, and set it aside on technical grounds the most immaterial.

There is doubtless much truth in all this complaining, but why do the complainers always overlook the chief defects in criminal law and proceedings, and the main reason why great criminals go unpunished? Do they not know when murder is deliberately planned, the murderer looks to the chances of escape, and is apt to have resort to means of insurance against detection and conviction? Do they know nothing of the magic of oaths, grips, signs and passwords? Have they not heard and seen that Masonry recognizes no crime in a Mason but a violation of Masonic law, and that it can always be relied on to screen one of the order who has merely violated a law of the land? Masonry invariably secures immunity from punishment to its own members, whatever the crime they commit, if it be not against itself, and it is almost the only society that thinks it wise or politic to do this. When a Mason commits a high crime, the whole enginery of the lodge is set to work to save him from conviction and punishment. The power of the press is invoked to manufacture public opinion in his favor, and the careful reader can easily distinguish the editorials and correspondence inspired by oath-bound brethren. How careful are they to say that the accused is eminently respectable, and that the best public sentiment is in his favor! How careful the members of the craft are to see that the whole machinery of the court is adjusted to secure a safe verdict! His trial, if possible, must be before a judge who is a Mason; though no judge, if decently honest or modest, could try his accused confederate of the lodge. There must be a safe number of Masons on the jury, though no Mason should ever be allowed on a jury in any case in which a sworn brother is interested. Witnesses are summoned, or made willing, or spirited away, or impeached, as Masonic emergency requires. A divided jury is always possible, when Masonic tactics are relied on, and the fact itself discourages resort to a new trial. If, despite all Masonic methods, a brother is convicted of crime, the grip and oath are yet potent with the constable and the turnkey, and the convicted felon is allowed to "skip." Can the public learn nothing as to the need of criminal law reform, from the trials of Vanderpool, Howgate, Carpenter and hundreds more? Nobody now expects a Masonic murderer to be convicted, no matter what the evidence of his guilt. Unless our courts can be rescued from the control of the lodge, the people may well tremble for the cause of liberty and justice, and be often tempted to invoke the "higher law" to redress great wrongs.

OUTWARD BOUND.

TO MY FRIENDS, MR. AND MRS. J. BLANCHARD.

There was a vessel strong and true, built by a Master's hand,
With flowing sheets and blipper prow she glided from the land,
Out on the ocean blue and deep either for woe or weal,
Her sky-sails gleaming in the sun, and fathoms deep her keel.

Beside the wheel the pilot stood with heedful eye and brain;
No stronger hand or truer eye, sailed vessel o'er the main:
Men called him Honor; at his post he stood erect and true,
With heart unquailed by wind or tide, or storm that ever blew.

Upon the crosstrees, looking out o'er ocean's breast immense,
With dauntless heart and falcon eye stood sleepless Vigilance;
Each friendly bark he hailed afar, each pirate hull descried,
And never had his warning true one circumstance belied.

There was not one of all the crew who did not well revere
The captain with his clear blue eye and aspect half severe;
His gray hair spoke an aged man—yet his was fadeless youth;
He passed among the sons of men, as valiant Captain Truth.

Oh! goodly was that vessel's course when from the land she bore,
With joyous plaudits from her deck and thunders from the shore,
With every sail swelled by the breeze before the wind she ran,
A nobler vessel never moved by any art of man.

But soon across that peaceful sky the tempest clouds were rolled,
And in its belfry, thunder swung, the bell of fate was tolled:
Straight down that noble vessel went—down in the deep, deep sea,
As when amidst the battle falls a champion of the free.

But when the waves were closed above,—ah, what a change was there!
The vessel sailed another sea, borne by another air,
Another sky had arched above, celestial and serene,
And all the lights of glory hung, where but the storm had been.

And still that gallant vessel sails with all her canvas spread,
Moves all that crew with ten-fold life, men count among the dead;
Beyond our cloudy land of storms, beyond the moon's dark bars,
She sails God's archipelago of systems and of stars.

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

BY EDMOND RONAYNE.

"Give none offence neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles nor to the church of God." 1 Cor. 10:32.

In this little passage of God's Word, the Holy Ghost through the apostle brings before us three distinct and separate bodies of people: the Jews, the Gentiles and the church of God. Under the Mosaic dispensation and up to the day of Pentecost there were on the earth but the two bodies, Jews and Gentiles. But the Lord Jesus Christ having glorified God down here on account of sin, having "finished" the work of atonement and "having obtained eternal redemption" for his people, and being, by virtue of that glorious work, exalted to God's right hand, the Holy Ghost is sent down from heaven to testify of Christ and through the proclamation of the Gospel to call out from among Jews and Gentiles "a people to his name." The people thus called out and separated first from among the Jews as in Acts 2, and afterwards from among the Gentiles as in Acts 10, and so on from that time down to the present, are God's heavenly people and denominated by the Holy Ghost "the church of God," but never the church of Christ. The church indeed belongs to Christ, she is his beautiful Bride, his peculiar treasure, having "loved her and given himself for her" (Eph. 5:25); but she has been from all eternity, next to Christ himself, the center of all God's counsels for the glory of his Son. And she is moreover that wonderful structure in which God will display in all the ages and throughout eternity "the exceeding riches of his grace." The first intimation concerning the church which we find in God's Word is in Matt. 16:18, where the Father, having revealed to Peter who Jesus is—"Christ the Son of the living God"—Jesus assures him that "upon this rock"—that which he had then confessed, Christ the Son of the living God—"I will build my church and the gates of hades shall not prevail against it." You will observe he does not say, "I have built" or "I am building," but "I will build," or something that he was to do in the future; and the foundations upon which this building, which he was thus going to erect in the future was to stand, he denominates "this rock." Well, then, in the Acts of the Apostles we find this unique structure being built up: first one hundred and twenty on the morning of the day of Pentecost, then three thousand more added by the Lord that same day, and the number "of the men" increasing to five thousand in Acts 4:4. Christ the Head having taken his seat in heaven the Holy Ghost comes down to carry on the work in his name and to prepare for him a "body" down here. This body is composed of true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ and of none else, and Peter, to whom the revelation of the foundation was given calls every member of it a living stone—"Ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house." 1 Pet. 2:5. Christ, the rock, the foundation, the "Living Stone," (1 Pet. 2:4) and believers in him, those who receive and trust him during this the time of his rejection by the world, all "living stones" having his life, his nature (1 Jno. 5:12; 2 Pet. 1:4), being united to him, "members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones," (Eph. 5:30), and consequently "members one of another." And so when Saul of Tarsus in his wicked madness was striving with all the energy of his nature to destroy this wonderful thing which the Holy Ghost was building, the Lord Jesus himself arrested from heaven his persecuting career and revealed to him the ever blessed fact of the absolute union of those poor, persecuted believers on the earth with a glorified man in heaven. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou ME?" Acts 9.

But as already stated, up to this time the assembly of God was composed exclusively of Jews, but now Peter is chosen, according to the Lord's promise in Matt. 16:19, to "open the door of faith to the Gentiles;" the family and friends of Cornelius are baptized with the Holy Ghost (Acts 10:14) as were the one hundred and twenty Jewish disciples at Pentecost, and thus we have the Jew and Gentile "baptized into one body by the one Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:13), and united to Christ in glory and made in him "one new man." Eph. 2:15. This union of Jew and Gentile into one body on earth, and with Christ in heaven is the "Mystery of God" in Col. 2:2, the mystery of the church in Eph. 3:2–6, and which was "kept secret since the world began" (Rom. 16:25), and was now for the first time revealed to Paul, who was especially raised up "to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." Eph. 3:8.

Concerning this wonderful structure thus being erected by "the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," it is stated in Eph. 2:20, 21, "Jesus Christ the chief corner stone in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord;" and of the members of this marvelous building it is said "ye are fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God" (Eph. 2:19), and "builded together an habitation of God through the Spirit. Eph. 2:22. Their calling is heavenly (Heb. 3:1); their blessings are "all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies" (Eph. 1:3); their place is in the heavenlies, quickened together with Christ, raised up together with him and seated in him in the heavenlies. Eph. 2:5, 6. They are citizens of heaven (Phil. 3:20), and during their sojourn down here in this terrible scene of darkness, sin and death, they are but "strangers and pilgrims." In the world but not of it, sharing in none of its pursuits or pleasures, their eyes ever watching and their hearts ever listening for the return of that Blessed One who redeemed them to himself with his own precious blood.

This is but a faint outline of what the church of God ought to be, and of the position which true believers in Christ ought to occupy during this interval while the Lord Jesus is hidden in the heavens consequent upon his rejection by the world; but alas! alas! how far different from all this is the place and portion of that which calls herself the church to-day. Like everything else committed to man in the place of responsibility, from Adam down, he has most lamentably failed in his testimony for Christ and the irretrievable ruin and confusion around are but the living witnesses of his sad failure. The Apostle John towards the close of the first century could say of the church in his day, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God and such we are, therefore the world knoweth us not because it knew him not." 1 Jno. 3:1. Can this language, beloved friends, be applied even in the remotest degree to anything you behold in professing Christendom to-day? "The world knoweth us not." Is this true even in the faintest manner of any portion of the professing church in these last days of bustling activity and loud profession? Which are the two most popular institutions to-day in this land of boasted commercial advancement and superior intelligence? The church and the theatre. The Word of God has neither a place in the hearts nor in the hands of professing Christians, and the great majority of church members are so lamentably ignorant of God's truth that they could not even turn to the books of the Bible. There is a great deal of profession, a great deal of noise, and a vast amount of religious zeal manifested in these last and perilous times; but ah! beloved friends, where is the real testimony for Christ and the rejection by the world for his name? It is indeed one thing to be rejected because of our own fleshly doings, or because of some peculiar mode of acting in the denomination to which we may belong, but it is another thing altogether to be rejected because of our testimony for Christ and for the glory that is due to his name. Can a heavenly man remain in a Masonic lodge? Not at all. Can a citizen of heaven take any part in the politics of this world? Why, beloved friends, if he lived for God and was loyal to Christ as he ought to be, the world would cast him out as it cast Christ out. Can "pilgrims and strangers" mix up in the strife and clamor of the politics of the countries through which they pass? By no means; and neither could the children of God down here if they were living as God would have them during the absence of his Son. May the Lord help us to realize our true place and our responsibility in these "last days" of empty profession and Laodicean boastfulness, and may our hearts be stirred up more and more in faithfulness to him and to hear and heed the midnight cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Matt. 25: 6.

SHORT SERMON.

Text:—On whom the tower of Siloam fell.

My Brethren:—People are very apt to resemble the god whom they worship. If you dig up the statue of an ancient Cyprian, you will probably find a smirk or silly smile upon his features, which had doubtless been acquired by the worship of Venus, the goddess of beauty, whom the original had hoped to please by simpering.

The ancient Calvinist is supposed to have always worn a long face, being deeply impressed with the wrath of a righteous God against sinners.

The worshiper of mammon in Wall Street usually has a knit brow, and care-worn face, unless he may have happened to make a strike.

The worshiper of the jug often has the triumphant look of a king, and assumes a reckless swagger, until, finally awakening to his sober senses, he discovers how foolish he has been.

So with the man who is drunk on party spirit. When party spirit enters the soul of man and extrudes therefrom the Spirit of God, he feels, especially if his party is in power, like a king; nay, like a very god. He becomes reckless, and dashes aside both the laws of God and man.

Doubtless they on whom the tower of Siloam fell were of this class. They probably worshiped some party; followed some multitude to do evil; were perhaps opposed to Rome; or were partisans of the Pharisees; or opponents of reformers; had become obstinate, reckless, self-willed. It would doubtless have been in vain to tell them that the laws of gravity, acting on an old undermined tower, resembling Judaism itself, might fall and crush them.

The worshiper of the lodge has two faces. He is terribly murderous and severe against reformers, whom he hates as the devil does a saint; but towards all others he has a sleek, animal, self-satisfied look, having made his own election (to office) secure.

But, my friends, no worse, no fouler spirit ever enters the heart of man than that party spirit which is drugged with Freemasonry. It inspires men to do the most villainous deeds, and to glory in them. The Democratic party, inspired by the Ku-Klux lodge, terrifies, outrages and murders men; while the Republican party, inspired by the Masonic lodge, delights to have Ku-Klux terrors, outrages and murders committed as a means of bringing discredit upon the Democrats and bringing to themselves a renewed lease of power.

My brethren, fear drunkenness from alcohol as much as you please; but of all intoxication fear that most which comes from party spirit. When that spirit goeth into a man, the Spirit of God abandons him, and he enters into back-pay grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles; land-grabs; Indian war outrages; false courage; condonement of treason; fraudulent pensions; river-and-harbor jobs; Star-route frauds, etc., etc.

My friends; you can hardly follow either the Democratic or the Republican multitude without doing wickedly. Therefore vote against them, on all occasions, now and forever, world without end.

So Mote it be!

ENEMIES OF CIVILIZATION.

[From an article by Judge J. A. Jamieson in the North American Review.]

One of the causes which, it was supposed, might tend to the destruction of our civilization, is such a radical perversion of the reasoning faculty itself that its verdicts would not correspond to the truth of things; and the supposition was made that a sect should maintain that the end justifies the means and, accordingly, that homicide, even of the innocent, though generally a crime, becomes praiseworthy when deemed necessary to the propagation of the tenets of the sect. What could be done with such teaching as that? Assuming that the teaching would be conducted in secret, or that, if public, the old prejudice in favor of freedom of speech and of the press would prevent its suppression by law, recourse could only be had to measures tending to counteract the evil consequences. To this end, two things might be done: one, to compel the education of the young and to direct it, in order to protect them from the perverting influences of such instruction; and the other, to refute the false reasoning. Of the two, the former would be the more effective, since to be of much avail refutation must reach the minds sought to be influenced by it. The "Provincial Letters" of Pascal in vain refuted, as is generally thought, his Jesuit adversaries. Those letters have been read mainly by Protestants, and if they have prevented the lapse of these to Rome, they have not diminished materially the number of Rome's adherents. It is a dangerous fallacy that "error is powerless for harm when truth is left free to combat it." There must be a combat, and for that, truth must not only be free to advance, but it must advance; and it must be able to strike the enemy in his strongholds. This could be done, in the case supposed, only where society had enabled it to reach the young by compelling them to receive the education it should itself prescribe.

Another widely operating cause grows out of the relations of capital and labor. The conflict between these great forces has developed in our day questions and conditions, industrial, social, and political, of extreme importance and delicacy. How they are to be met and treated can be best shown by considering two of the many phases assumed by the warring parties. The first of these may be characterized as honest labor versus honest capital; and the second, as the associate guild of assassins—the Nihilist and the dynamitard—versus honest labor and capital.

How shall society deal with these foes, not only at war with each other, but advancing apparently for a deadly assault upon her? Here again we must repeat that the attitude of society itself, especially toward the first, the warring elements of which are credited by us with honesty of purpose, is to the last degree important. Society must be quick to concede whatever is reasonable and just in the demands, and to sympathize with the wrongs of each. The nobility of labor, the vulgarity of idleness, and the meanness and wickedness of grinding the faces of the poor, must be felt and taught. Let society emphasize these truths; that human nature receives the stamp it bears of nobleness, not from the faineant rich, but from the laboring poor, who constitute the mass of mankind; that to earn his bread by the sweat of his face is at once the destiny and the unspeakable blessing of man; and that infinite harm has been done by the old wives' fable that labor was laid upon him as a curse. Thus estimating the parties, what can society do to arrest the dangers threatened from their conflicts? As the most promising field for its effort is the young, whom it has both the power and the right to mould, education should be compulsory, and it should be specially adapted to meet the social conditions of the time. The child should be taught that there is no more real antagonism between labor and capital than between the boy and the man; that labor is capital in a rudimentary stage; that seeking to become capital, it is constantly realizing its aim by simple growth. Let labor see that the measure meted out by itself to capital today will be measured out to it to-morrow when it has assumed a more advanced form and position, and let it cease to be jealous of that into which it desires and is destined to ripen. On the other hand, what posture should capital assume toward labor? The answer is that of trustee for it, as well as for itself. the bitterness of the existing struggle between the two will subside when capital shall feel that the law protects it in the possession and enjoyment of what it calls its own, for the good of itself and of those by whose aid it was acquired. The fate of families demonstrates that nothing is so fatal in every sense as the attempt to bring up the children of the rich as drones, and to entail upon them alone the wealth accumulated by their fathers. It is, moreover, to be exacted from capital that it shall abate its haughty contempt for labor; that it shall elevate and dignify it by participating in it, and by numbering its own sons and daughters in its ranks; and, finally, that it shall forestall the calamities threatened by the vastly superior force of the laboring masses by just and timely concessions, and by unforced solicitude for their welfare. Nor is it enough that they severally cultivate the right spirit toward each other; when they cannot agree they must learn to arbitrate their differences, and to forego the exercise of their extreme right to strike or to lock out as too costly and too indecisive. When, by the growth of moderation and of the spirit of compromise, the two powers have demonstrated that they can be trusted to deal with the interests of each other, society will ordain that there shall be three separate legislative bodies, one chosen by labor, one by capital,—to whom all questions affecting their respective interests shall, in the first instance, be submitted,—and the third, the ordinary legislature known to our constitutions, charged to enact into laws the compromises formulated by the other two; or, in case of their disagreement, to establish just measures for them, after having exhausted the usual legislative expedients for avoiding a deadlock.

TO CANOSSA AT LAST.

In January, 1077, Henry IV., the excommunicated Emperor of Germany, but a few months before the mightiest monarch in the world, stood for three days and nights, clad only in a shirt of hair, in the courtyard of the palace of Pope Gregory VII. at Canossa. When at length he had done sufficient penance the Pope admitted him to his presence, received his unconditional submission and gave him absolution. The parallel to that scene was when recently the Crown Prince of Germany paid a visit of ceremony to His Holiness, Leo XIII., kissed his hand and was embraced by him. The accessories were different from those at Canossa; the Prince was welcomed with all splendor, and being a Protestant was not required to make an unconditional submission to the Pope's authority. The two visits had this in common however, that they marked an end of a hard struggle between the most powerful monarch of Europe and the Papacy, and the triumph of the latter. In a great debate in the Reichstag in May, 1872, Bismarck uttered these memorable words: "Of this you may be sure, that we will not go to Canossa, either in our ecclesiastical or political relations." This proud boast is now falsified.

The way has been preparing for this end of the Kulturkampf (literally, worship-fight), for several years. A word or two about the origin of this contest, as well as of the steps by which the result has been reached, may be of service. At the time when the decrees of the Vatican Council were promulgated the Catholic religion was established in Prussia as well as the Protestant. The bishops and pastors were appointed by the Ministry of Public Worship, and their salaries were paid out of the public treasury. It was clearly seen by Bismarck that the new power lodged by these decrees in the hands of the Pope would in fact make the Catholic prelates independent of the State, and measures were taken to make them acknowledge their allegiance to the State to have precedence over that they owed to the Pope. The Catholic Department of the Ministry of Public Worship was abolished; the Jesuits were expelled; the "Falk laws" were passed, making the prelates entirely subject to the State, and prescribing a gymnasium and University as a prerequisite to the clerical office; civil marriage was made compulsory, and marriages celebrated by the Catholic clergy were declared illegal; and finally the salaries of recalcitrant clergy were withheld, with the object of starving them into submission. The feelings of the German people were greatly embittered by some private correspondence of the Pope with the Emperor William, in which the latter was exhorted to part with his misleading counsellors who had urged him to the approval of these laws, and use his great personal influence for their repeal.

For a time the contest thus begun was carried on with every appearance of success by the Prussian Government. But Bismarck had to deal with an antagonist that never wavers in its purpose and never knows when it is defeated. In the course of a few years his reactionary policy in internal politics and his determined advocacy of a protectionist policy in the revenue laws, alienated him from the National Liberal party, and compelled him to seek other alliances. He could not govern without a majority, he was too stubborn to yield to the Liberals, and resign he would not. His determination was to sweep away all obstacles that withstood his despotic will. The election of a Pope of more liberal tendencies than those of Pius IX. was opportune. The new Pope was anxious for peace with Prussia, and Bismarck was disposed to listen to propositions for compromise. In return for votes from the clericals in the Reichstag he first relaxed the severity of the administration of the "Falk laws," and in so doing broke with Minister Falk, who had drawn them. Concession has since followed concession, until now affairs are very nearly in the condition in which they were before the anti-Catholic legislation began. There is, however, one important exception: the obnoxious laws have never been repealed, and might be re-enforced at any time. The compromise at which Prussia and the Papacy seem to have arrived is that the former shall not be compelled to humble its pride by openly repealing the laws, but shall allow them to become a dead letter. The re-establishment of diplomatic relations between the Pope and the King of Prussia took place some time ago, and the visit of the Crown Prince is a public pledge that the last vestige of strife has vanished, and all is peace. Bismarck has kept his majority, but at what a cost!—Examiner.

The Christian Union makes a comparative showing of the liquor traffic with that in real necessities. In the United States there is annually spent $900,000,000 for liquor, $505,000,000 for bread, $303,000 000 for meat, $290,000,000 for iron and steel, $237,000,000 for sawed lumber, $210,000,000 for cotton goods, $196,000,000 for boots and shoes, $155,000,000 for sugar and molasses and $85,000,000 for public education.

On Thursday last, March 20, the Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine, reached his 80th birthday. His extraordinary physical and mental vigor at this advanced age affords a conspicuous exemplification of the benefits of total abstinence. May he live to see the now rapidly-approaching triumph of prohibition in national politics.—N. Y. Witness.

NO COMPROMISE.

A NOBLE AND MAGNIFICENT ARTICLE.

BY REV. L. DAVIS, D. D.

Thirty years ago Charles Sumner said, "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy,—Freemasonry and slavery,—and they must be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it." That Mr. Sumner was right respecting slavery is now universally conceded. No one is now weak enough to criticise his view on that subject. The facts of history and the results of our late civil war abundantly vindicate his judgment as to slavery. It is well known that ten years after these memorable words fell from the lips of this great scholar and statesman, slavery in this country went down in a sea of blood. Although the sword was used as an instrument, the hand of God was in it. This is now clear enough to us all.

Mr. Sumner lived long enough to see the downfall of slavery, but died leaving it to men of like spirit and purpose to break the power of Freemasonry and secretism in general. This is now the one great work to be done. I hold with Mr. Sumner that "this power must be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it." It may be said that this is a chimera of the brain, or at least the view of the ignorant. But let it be remembered that not a few of the most enlightened and gifted of our statesmen have held the same view, and openly avowed it. Notably among these may be mentioned the Adamses, Hon. John C. Spencer, chief-justice of New York, William H. Seward, Thaddeus Stephens, Hon. Richard Rush, Daniel Webster, Hon. Henry Wilson, and Wendell Phillips. Mr. Phillips said in 1880, "Every Freemason swears to break the laws, commit the greatest crimes, and repudiate Christianity." In the same address he said, "Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence." Oh, how these brave and earnest words seem to ring in the chambers of our souls! They were written but a short time before his death; and now that he is gone let cowardly politicians and skulking preachers go to his fresh grave and learn how to be honest and brave. Wendell Phillips had convictions, and the rare courage to utter them. Such men are usually called fanatics. But this criticism is both stale and weak, especially if applied to Mr. Phillips. His natural endowments were indeed of the highest order. His education was also most liberal and thorough. For more than a generation he charmed and instructed, by his eloquence and wisdom, thousands of the most cultured people of our time. Certainly such a man could not be a fanatic. And then what shall we say of those other illustrious men mentioned above? Nor these alone, for hundreds of eminent statesmen, scholars, and divines have in like manner openly denounced all secret orders as dangerous to society. Were all these ignorant fanatics? If so, God grant that all our legislative halls, as well as every pulpit in the land, may be filled with men of like spirit and purpose. We want men who believe something on every question of public interest and are willing to say so. Let there be no twisting and squirming. Take a position and defend it like a man. If Baal-worship (secretism) be a crime against God, say so, and like the great and good men referred to, denounce it in the name of your Lord and Master.—Religious Telescope.

—A contemporary contains an extended obituary notice of one who, in a certain place, was "a consistent member of the United Presbyterian church for twelve years." The funeral services were conducted in the church and the pastor delivered a "feeling and appropriate sermon for the occasion." When, however, the information is given that the deceased "was a member of the Knights of Honor," and when the members of Apollo Lodge adopt and publish resolutions relating to the death of their "brother," some skepticism is raised as to his having been a "consistent member of the United Presbyterian church." It is possible also, as is not unfrequently the case, that the person in question concealed the fact of his connection with the lodge from his pastor and fellow members in the church, which, if it was done in this case, makes it still more difficult to sustain the declaration of consistency.—Chris. Instructor.

—The sin of omission is, according to Joseph Cook, the core of the new Congregational creed's offending. A sin, this, which we are generally inclined to overlook. Not, however, when it concerns declarations and manifestoes. If the statutes of the land should omit to denounce certain crimes, it would be a grave fault indeed. So it comes to pass that in what purport to be full creed statements and exhaustive denominational regulations, the sin of omission is as much to be guarded against as the sin of commission (if not more).—Standard.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

LETTER FROM A PROHIBITIONIST.

The following, from a leading Prohibitionist, is written in a spirit so excellent that it is deemed best to give it to the Cynosure, with such comments as may tend to remove any mist that may have enveloped the author or any other candid person seeking for light along this line; and

First, as to the name: We think the point against "American" not well taken, for the excellent reason, the platform is so far removed from anything suggesting "Know Nothingism."

If the point made against the "waiting for developments in the South," really involved the party as so acting, it would be an eminently just criticism. The writer, however, only had in mind that class of persons of whom the Prohibitionists themselves complain—who are kept in the Republican ranks by the dread of seeing the Democrats in power, ere the country is completely saved by Republican measures. The party has not waited; individuals who ought long ago to have been in its ranks, have. Our friend will understand this.

"Its secrecy! What does that mean?" Not what the writer suggests. Neither of the ruling parties endorse Masonry or oath-bound secrecy in their platforms, yet this secretism controls in the councils of both parties. Evidence of this is found in the fact that a large portion of the offices in State and nation are filled by members of secret societies, and few would dare claim that superior merit placed them there. It would ill accord with the spirit of these institutions to be publicly endorsed by any party, but they intend to rule in each all the same.

Our friend thinks there should be a discrimination in favor of the secret temperance societies, because a "great many good and honest persons are to be found in them." He does not seem to have a very exalted opinion of these organizations despite the "good people." Such are not the leading spirits in these societies. Let him go up into Grand Lodge, Division, etc., and he will find Masons and Odd-fellows who pull the strings, while the "good people" in the subordinate lodges act the "jumping-jack." This has not been so well known as it will be.

Nothing can be surer than that, in the Masonic lodges especially, the rum interest finds a useful and a powerful ally; and as Masons are to be found in all the minor orders, so is their baleful influence felt there. Their obligations go wherever a Mason goes, and hence secret temperance societies are to be avoided. If the facts were before the people they would demonstrate that Freemasonry has been more advanced by them than has temperance. And to this intent it is believed they were originally created.

The party that saves this country from the rum traffic and other disorders must be free from the manipulations of the lodge power. Our friend is free to acknowledge the possibility that an obligation may rest on a Mason or an Odd-fellow to help a rum-seller, but thinks that no such possibility exists in the secret temperance orders. And why not, pray? The Mason and the Odd-fellow in becoming a Son of Temperance or Good Templar, casts off no prior claims. His obligation goes with him, and that obligation is paramount to all others. See what Rob. Morris says of the Mason's Covenant, Webb's Monitor, page 240: "The covenant [i. e., the obligation, or oath,] is irrevocable. Even though a Mason may be suspended or expelled, though he may withdraw from the lodge, journey into countries where Masons cannot be found, or become a subject of despotic governments that persecute, or a communicant of bigoted churches, that denounce Masonry, he cannot cast off or nullify his Masonic covenant. No law of the land can affect it—no anathema of the church can weaken it. It is irrevocable."

The man so enslaved, and who considers his Masonic oaths binding, is a fit tool for conspirators, but is unfitted for membership in a Christian church or for citizenship in a free country. He is a slave!—unfit to rule or help to make the rulers of a free people. The "Prohibition Home Protection party" needs to protect itself from the influence of such oath-bound associates.

Again, our friend thinks that where a Prohibitionist is also a Mason, and a clashing should come between his honest convictions as a Prohibitionist, and his obligation to assist a Masonic brother who is a saloon-keeper, the saloon would not always triumph; that the "decision would be according to the temperament of the person himself, and the strength of the calls made upon him!" Exactly! His saloon brother's call upon him is re-enforced by as many death penalties as each has taken degrees; and he who adheres to Masonry will feel the strength of the saloon calls upon him and act accordingly, or he is a traitor to Masonry.

Again, he thinks if Masons would obey such obligations, they must "be men of weak moral principle, anyway, and not reliable anywhere." No Anti-mason could have drawn a clearer inference.

"I think the negroes are peculiarly liable to be unduly influenced by secret societies." I ask, how more so than white men? The obligations are the same, enforced by the same death penalties.

The writer says: "In our party prohibition is the supreme issue. In the American party anti-secrecy is the supreme issue." Not quite correct. With us, his two are one. The lodge and saloon must fall together. So there is really but one issue.

"Now the instant result of a union between the American and P. H. P. parties would be a row." Evidently. There can be no union or fusion between the two parties as constituted, but good men in the P. H. P. party can come to us, where they can serve the right by open and manly methods, such as God and their own judgments will approve. Other points might be touched upon, but space forbids. We thank our friend for his letter, and hope our remarks may prove as interesting to him as his were to us. J. L. B.

Bro. L.—I am in receipt of your paper, the Washington National Republican of Jan. 23d, containing an appeal to our National Committee chairman, and to others of our P. H. P. party leaders, emanating from leaders of the American party. This I have read and re-read, and also read it aloud to my family. I propose in this letter to make some comments on it, and if I expose my woful ignorance on the subject of the position and views of the American party, please bear in mind that it has not been a special study with me as it has to yourself and others, and comes with the mist of novelty to my mind, comparatively speaking.

While the appeal simply asks for a union of the two parties in the series of conventions in Washington, D. C., in Northampton, Mass., in Ohio, and finally in Chicago, the list of reasons given seems to apply to the topic of a union of the two parties at the polls. I can conceive of practical and financial reasons bearing both pro and con on the subject of fusion conventions, that would have no bearing whatever on the subject of fusion tickets and united voting action.

I will take the appeal as its paragraphs are numbered:

1. The name is not the essential thing: the principle is the all-important matter. The name should be such as to help the spreading of the principle. P. H. P. is a cumbrous name as I now view it. "American" is an indefinite name, and has suggestions of the "Know Nothing" movement, being thus a handle for unscrupulous opponents to use against the party.

2. Am glad to know that prohibition has two organized parties in its behalf. It is no disgrace to a party to be small. I sometimes think it an honor to belong to a small party; yet that any party, holding what it believes to be the truth should knowingly wait for developments in the South before pressing its own claims there seems passing strange. That sentence in the second paragraph is to me inexplicable. The fact that any party has been able to put the license parties into a minority in many localities is gratifying.

3. The list given of those opposed to secret societies is large. It is said that these large Christian bodies cannot be brought into a prohibition party "unless its secrecy is dropped." "Its secrecy!" What does that mean? Does it mean that its leaders take confidential counsel together as to party policy, needs and methods, as you and I are continually doing? If it means that, I don't think that any person or church has any right to interfere with our doing so. If it means that some of the members of the party are members of secret temperance societies, and that this fact involves the party in responsibility for the existence of such societies, I cannot agree with that inference. The party is responsible for its legislative and executive acts when it comes into power, and in the meantime is responsible for its declarations of principles, which in no case, to my knowledge, endorses secret societies of any sort. I presume some members, and leading members too, may be Catholics, Methodists, infidels, Universalists, Baptists, etc., etc., yet the party has nothing to do with that fact, and cannot be held responsible for the personal preferences of its members, and cannot recognize such preferences so long as the men stand firm and true to the principles of the party.

It seems to me that just here a line should be drawn between secret temperance societies and other secret orders. It is possible, for instance, in Masons and Oddfellows and such orders, for a strong obligation to exist to help rumsellers. No such possibility exists in the secret temperance orders, for they unitedly oppose them and their work, after their feeble and many times useless fashion. I am frank to confess that my own experience in these orders does not leave with me a high admiration of their practical workings, though their principles, laws and rituals embody some grand truths. I think I have seen quite a spirit of trifling in the meetings. I suppose, however, that other meetings might have been more effective than those I attended. It is possible, I suppose, to make those meetings represent the personality of their members, so that earnest, zealous, positive men might make their societies display like attributes. So I don't feel like condemning all such orders on my slight knowledge of some of them. I believe good men and women go into them with good motives, and innocent of intent to do harm to the community or to the genius and spirit of our institutions, and would be surprised to learn the act was anything but praiseworthy. Now a voting and a nominating union between the two parties would, as I now believe, involve the acceptance by our people of the tenets of the American party, including a more or less explicit condemnation of secret temperance orders, which would, of course, be an offense to many of the well-meaning and unselfish members thereof, who have by habit and association become attached to such orders.

I know that Lincoln declared that "no government could long exist part slave and part free." But the question of slavery was a fundamental one, and his saying was true. Whether the question of "secretism" so-called is equally fundamental is not yet established in my mind. So I am not yet convinced that our party cannot exist with some members in it who choose to work in secret societies. There may be in some way yet unknown to me some influence of "secretism" tending to undermine the true pluck and principle which members of our party so much need. I am open to conviction, but ask for evidence on this point.

4. Where a Prohibitionist is also a Mason, and has a clear consciousness of an obligation to sustain a brother Mason in a business which his prohibition principle abhors, I am quite sure that the struggle between these rival ties will not always end in the triumph of the saloon. It would be decided according to the temperament of the person himself, and the strength of the calls made upon him. Granting that the Masonic obligation calls for sustaining a brother, not only directly, by personal action towards him, but also indirectly, by so voting as not to injure in a remote contingency that brother's business, if, I say, the obligation is as far reaching as that, then I grant that a percentage of Masonic Prohibitionists would fail us under pressure. Yet they would be men of weak moral principle any way, and not reliable any where.

We shall try to get all the colored voters we can away from the Republican party who have used them and misused them, and deliberately flung them as prey to the saloon tiger. I trust the American party will do the same, for one grand step forward will be successfully taken towards prohibition when the Republicans, under license leadership, are overthrown. I think the negroes are peculiarly liable to be unduly influenced by secret societies and sacrifice time, money and possibly principle, at their dictation.

6. All truth is one, all true reforms harmonize, I suppose. Yet how many people tell us that the temperance cause languished from 1860 to 1870, because, they say, "the war and its fruits must be looked after." Temperance could not be looked after because their idea of patriotism must be made the supreme, absorbing issue. That statement is often made and I have never heard it challenged. Have you? Yet, if all reforms harmonize, why could not these be attended to simultaneously? To my mind the answer to this question gives the keynote to the solution of this whole problem of the relations between the two parties. In our party prohibition is the supreme issue. In the American party anti-secrecy is the supreme issue. In the nature of things there cannot, in my mind, be two issues, each supreme. We are apt to act with one predominating motive. With me and with our party prohibition is that motive. I believe it to be a righteous one.

At present we in our town are under pressure to yield our organization and devote our energies to a movement proclaiming "moral suasion only," as its platform. We shall not do it, not because moral suasion is wrong, for it is not wrong, but because our best energies are due to the truth we hold supreme, and we cannot accept a platform that shall embarrass us, or divide our love between two objects. Now the instant result of a union between the American and the P. H. P. parties would be a row. Our work would be at a standstill, while we defended our course, and sought to make peace by convincing our present members of the validity of the claims of the American party. Our attention would necessarily be drawn to a study of those claims and their basis, and our energies would be withdrawn from an attack upon the license parties. How long this would continue, or what the outcome would be, I cannot say. I can only say, I am married to prohibition, and our platform condemns polygamy, so I cannot accept another spouse if it is "leap-year." Pardon the trifling language. I think you comprehend my position.

In what you have read in this letter I trust you will see no disrespect nor spirit of ridicule of the American party. I honor them as far as I can learn of them for their sincerity and independence, and in so far as they represent truth I wish them all prosperity in increasing their own vote and helping us overthrow the license parties. If you discover shallow reasoning here I am sorry. It is not my fault, but my misfortune.

As I most heartily respect you and your views, I have tried in good faith to give a candid examination to the appeal which you sent me. This letter is the result. You are at liberty to show it to any one, but I should be glad to have you return it to me when convenient, with any comment you see fit to make upon it.

Ever your friend and brother,

LITERATURE.

Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs. By John Kenrick, M. A. Two volumes in one. pp. 902. Price $1. John B. Alden, New York.

The oldest and "the basest of the kingdoms" has for a year or two, because of its geographical situation, and relations with the civilization of Europe, become the center of interest for a large part of the world. The demand for books and lectures upon Egypt has therefore been considerably increased, and among the others the republication of Kenrick's work. The great value of this work lies in its compendious yet comprehensive statement of facts ascertained by discovery and of the writings of ancient historians and geographers. The work was compiled some years ago and therefore does not include the discoveries and conclusions of several eminent scholars during the last few years. These are often voluminous and useless except to the special student, and are also much involved in theories, yet would have furnished matter for a large and useful appendix to this volume. The history, religion, social and political customs, mechanical arts, architecture, etc., of ancient Egypt are well explained, and due space is given also to the climate and physical character of the country. The value of the work for popular information respecting Egypt will hardly be over-estimated and the publisher has furnished a worthy book at so low a price as to be within reach of all who have any desire for information upon the subject.

Chinese Classics: a translation by James Legge, D. D., of the London Missionary Society. Part I., Confucius. Part II. Mencius. pp. 219; price, $1. John B. Alden, New York.

The moral philosophy of one-third of the human race cannot be a matter of indifference to the Christian church whose mission it is to carry the Gospel to all. Such information may to a considerable degree be obtained from these translations, which form perhaps the most important part of Dr. Legge's work. The doctrines of Confucius relate principally to the ethics of political and social life. Dr. Legge argues that he was atheistical, because he ignores a personal God and makes little note of a future life. Other students of Chinese literature defend him from these charges.

The April English Illustrated Magazine continues the "Unsentimental Journey through Cornwall," which is the finest illustrated article of the number, and permits those who never visit that part of England an opportunity of gaining a fine conception of its romantic scenery. Every student of English history will read "Changes at Charing Cross" and make a careful study of the frequent illustrations. Not inferior to this in any respect is the "Belfry of Bruges." Archibald Forbes the most celebrated of war correspondents tells in a graphic way how he became engaged in that profession. McMillan and Co., New York.

Vick's Monthly for April confesses the coming of spring and gives notes of value to those preparing for out door work. The spring flowers of Colorado have an illustrated article and a fine colored plate of the passion flower opens the number.

A name for the baby! "What shall we name it? a dictionary of baptismal names for children, containing 2,000 names with their meaning and the countries from which they originated," is one of the curiosities of literature which may be useful in families of numerous children. John C. Stockwell, 25 Ann St., New York.

Mrs. Helen Jackson (H. H.) will write in the May Century of "The Women of the Bee-Hive," meaning the Mormon women, with whom she feels great sympathy, regarding them as a conscientious and suffering class whose religious position has been misunderstood. Thomas Hughes, M. P., will contribute to the same number an important paper on "Trades-Unionism in England."

Temperance is obviously making progress in Britain. The decrease in the quantity of wine and spirits used last year as compared with ten years ago is nearly five millions of gallons, notwithstanding a considerable increase in the population.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"I'VE BEEN THAR."

Bloomington, Ill.

On hearing this expression used by a gentleman while conversing on the subject of Freemasonry, we were at once carried back to the times of anti-slavery agitation.

Persons who had lived where slavery prevailed supposed themselves eminently qualified to judge of the moral character of the institution from their experience of its inside workings. "I've been thar," said they, "and I know that niggers is better off in slavery than they are in freedom." They knew many slave-holders who were kind and generous to their slaves. They were well fed and clothed. They were fat, hearty and jolly. They were better off than free negroes, and therefore slavery could not be wrong. To such persons the right to slave property was the same as that to any other. To aid the escape of slaves was the same as any stealing. The treatment accorded an Abolitionist was the same as that accorded to a horse thief. To talk to such a person of the moral turpitude of one man holding another in slavery was quite useless. Hadn't he been there, and didn't he know all about it? Were not slave-holders gentlemen, and were not niggers naturally lazy? Were not preachers slave-holders? and did not the patriarchs hold slaves? Does not the Bible command servants to obey their masters? and did not Paul send back a runaway?

Birth and education under slavery had entirely unfitted such persons to judge of the moral character of the institution. "To see ourselves as others see us," is quite as difficult to-day as it ever was.

But if slavery was capable of creating such a moral obliquity, much more is the secret oath-bound lodge capable of warping the moral sense. Should you question the propriety of extra-judicial oaths, they refuse to consider the question. They "have been thar." Should you doubt the propriety of owing allegiance to another government than the United States, they have no doubts on this score as they "have been thar."

Should you speak of the danger of a league offensive and defensive with the worst of men, they scout the idea. Haven't they "been thar, and ain't the lodge full of preachers and church members?" Isn't it ancient and honorable? Was not Christ, the apostles, Washington, and all the Presidents good Masons? Is not the lodge the most moral and benevolent institution on earth? And this you can never gainsay because you have "never been thar."

Aside from the pity you must have for the poor devotee of lodge craft, is it not a fact that outsiders know more of the principles and working of lodgery than he does? With the great cloud of witnesses we have to the inside nature of the thing, and the clear view we enjoy of its every-day fruits; and when we have the word of God as a plain and simple test to try it, are we not much better prepared to judge of its merits than the poor, hoodwinked candidate for idiotic mysteries, however great a virtue he may make of the fact that he has "been thar?"

This also serves as a convenient refuge when pressed in argument that you have never "been thar." To him the lodge is a church or not, is a convivial club or not, is an insurance company or not, is a benevolent and moral reform society or not, just as his purpose requires; and you are powerless to disprove it because you "haven't been thar."

When you desire to praise the lodge you have abundant knowledge and liberty to talk or write, but should you try to question its greatness or goodness then you know nothing about it and have no right to talk, because you have never "been thar." How long will intelligent men suffer this stultifying process to propagate one of the worst relics of the dark ages? Whitcomb.

MASONS DISAGREE.

Delavan, Ill.

Dear Cynosure.—Keep the ball rolling that adhering Masons will equivocate and cannot be trusted for the truth, as the following incident will show. It was told me by a friend in whom the utmost confidence may be placed. Three friends met whom I will designate A, B, and C. Friends A and B were at the house of C. A owed his knowledge of Masonry to books, such as Morgan's exposure and others. B and C were real Masons, and just as they all were seated around the table of the latter, the conversation turned on the truth of Morgan's book. A referred to the book as an exposure of Masonry. B denied its truth in very positive language. C listened intently till B closed his sentence, and then replied to him in the following vigorous language: "You lie, and you know you lie; and you know that I know you lie. You know that I am a Royal Arch Mason as well as yourself." The difference between B and C is this: B would sell his soul to the devil for less than a mess of pottage, even for a mess of so-called Masonic secrets, while C thought more of manly truth than he did of Masonry, and dared to rebuke the other to his face.

Here let me bear testimony to the truth of Morgan's, Ronayne's, and other exposures of Masonry as far as I went in the sublimely ridiculous farce and falsehood that make up the three first degrees, namely, Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and the wonderful tragedy of murdering, burying, and raising to life of a poor miserable dupe, called in the play "Hiram Abiff;" and all this to get that silly substitute of a word Mah-hah-bone, which to me was explained to mean, "There is 'Marrow in the bone.'" Dear Cynosure, can you give us a better definition? Yours for light on Masonry,

D. VanDeventer.

FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PASADENA, Cal., Mar. 23, 1884.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Although in the midst of green fields and flowers, full blooming peach and apricot orchards, and among the golden oranges and lemons of southern California, surrounded, too, by many kind and warm-hearted Christian brethren and sisters, with good meetings, yet here as in other portions of God's heritage there are thorns. Yes, there is an undermining current as destructive to the true church of Christ as can be found anywhere. Pasadena is about as clear of this as any place I ever knew, yet this State as a whole is very much composed of a class of selfish people, or those who care but little for anything except their own interests. They are not sociable enough. The secret society men you know, claim that is one of their aims, to teach sociabilty, but this like many other claims is false. I presume there is not a State in the Union more bitterly cursed with secret societies and combinations than this.

I send you to-day a report of a new order (to me at least), which I clipped from the San Francisco Call. I hope you will publish it and give the Cynosure readers some light on it if you can. These combinations here seem as destructive to anything that opposes them as the miner's hydraulic force is to the undermining of the mountains where gold is sought. Yet, thank God, the light is springing forth, men of God fearless in their work for the Master, by the help of their great Leader, are making inroads on Satan's forces, and we pray that the time will soon come when here in California there will be a large State organization auxiliary to the N. C. A.

We believe Bro. Stoddard felt the necessity of this when in his remarks at the Washington meeting he said there must be similar headquarters at Boston and San Francisco. I believe the latter place at least should be prayerfully considered by all Cynosure workers, and the work started as soon as practicable.

This winter notwithstanding the unusual amount of rain here, has been the most pleasant winter of my life. There has not been frost enough to kill all the tomato vines, and nearly all kinds of vegetables have been plenty all winter. The great land and building boom is still progressing, and is likely to for a few years yet. We ask all reformers seeking homes in a warm climate to call at Pasadena and they will surely be pleased. We will do all we can for them.

With love to all, especially Cynosure readers, I am as ever, yours in Christ, T. K. BUFFKIN.

NOTE.—The order referred to is the B'nai B'rith, a Jewish secret society, whose object is to promote the good fellowship of that sect by allowances to sick members, and an insurance at death. It has existed for some time, and so far as we are informed, does not receive other than Jews into membership, a limitation which is of importance.

BAPTISM AND LODGERY.

A tract under the title "What is Baptism?" published in Kentucky for Sunday-schools, etc., carries in it training of reverence for lodgery in the following terms:

"It (baptism) is a symbol of Christ's government. The United States flag is a symbol of this government: the three links is a symbol of Odd-fellowship, the square aud compass of Freemasonry. Would one who is loyal to his country sneer at the flag? Would the loyal lodge member sneer at its symbol? Would a loving mother ridicule the photograph of her dead child? So will not the man who loves Jesus speak lightly of baptism." We italicize the words about the lodge.

Well, whether baptism is or is not the symbol of Christ's government is not our question, for no matter what the form of the symbol used, we would warn against the "deceivableness of unrighteousness" in using the patriotic flag, the sacred symbols of the Gospel, or of allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as decoy ducks to win "loyal" regard for that "unfruitful work of darkness", Freemasonry! The photograph of a dead child, dear indeed to the fond mother, must also be degraded to the same level as loyalty to Masonry!

Such tracts, however true or perfect in part, carry the poison with them to destroy true and supreme loyalty to Christ. If the language has been used inadvertently it ought to be expunged at once, and all the tracts which contain it destroyed, so that its views otherwise may not become secondary to the cunning devotees of lodgery. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch!" T. H.

BRO. MOFFATT SPEAKS FOR HIMSELF.

ALBION, Iowa, March 28, 1884.

MR. EDITOR:—I can have no controversy with our friend, General J. W. Phelps, in Sergeant Mason's case, which has no parallel. Sergeant Mason was tempted beyond his power of endurance. Hence I differ with the General in that particular case. I could but think his conscience was less stringent when he was in the army directing men to shoot other men (of which act I approve). I always read Gen. Phelps' articles with much interest and satisfaction, as I did his last one. I consider him a champion of our most needed reform. I wish to correct General Phelps' idea that "I have seemingly acted with the party in power," which I have not done in forty years.

With all deference to the ability and wisdom of Gen. Phelps, I must say also that I am unable to understand his logic on prohibition. I have done what I could in my humble sphere for fifty-six years to stop the liquor traffic. I am fully convinced that nothing short of prohibition can stop that accursed traffic, which, in connection with Masonry, is the devil's fort. I claim that no man is my peer as an Anti-mason, according to my ability and means. I was eightcen years old when the Masons murdered Morgan, and for the first time learned that ministers would lie. I would use the word "prohibit" instead of "limit," as Gen. Phelps says.

Jeff. Davis—the government paid $100,000 for his capture, then put him in prison, carpeted the floor so the step of the guard should not disturb him; then gave him $27 a week to select his rations. A man who had been the means of famishing and starving to death thousands of good soldiers; who deserved a hundred deaths, could he have suffered so many. Another case of outraged justice by Masonic protection. Had that guard shot Jeff. Davis dead, justice would have been done so far as his life could atone, and no doubt millions would have rejoiced at his death. Justice is always right; can't be wrong. A. C. MOFFATT.

PITH AND POINT.

IS NOT SECRECY GOOD?

I have just commenced taking your paper, and, in connection with the labors of Bro. Hunting, it has been the means in God's hands of opening my eyes wonderfully in regard to the nature and pernicious effect of secret societies, especially on the Christian. I had noticed before some individual cases where they appeared to be very damaging to the Christian life, but I did not know enough of their nature to see as I now do that they were certainly designed by their author, Satan, for this very purpose, to overthrow the kingdom of Christ. Since my eyes have been thus opened I have taken part in a public debate on the subject in our Lyceum, and in studying up the question more fully for this purpose this question arose in my mind, which I would like light on from yourself or some of your correspondents. The question is this: Ought secret societies to be opposed because they are wrong in themselves, regardless of their object; or is it only their object that makes them wrong? Or, in other words, would a secret organization for a good purpose be right? Such, for instance, as the Union League organized in the South to support the Government against the Ku-Klux Klan. It has seemed to me that a secret organization is only a strong form of organization, more effectual than an open one because its mode of working is covered up from the opposition, consequently they cannot prepare to meet its attacks. Now if this be so and we can do a good work such as temperance more effectually through them, we cannot oppose them as a whole. On the other hand, if in themselves they are wrong regardless of their object, it seems to me we cannot stop short of destroying all organizations, for it seems to me that if it is right to organize at all for a good object it is right to organize in the most effectual manner. Please shed a little light on one in the dark.—WM. KNIGHT, Russell, Kan.

The brother's logic is wrong. Secrecy is not strength; it is rather an evidence of weakness. The animals that are most secretive in their habits are those which depend upon cunning and not on force. Men who rely on this characteristic for success in any endeavor, as a rule, testify to the immorality of their business, as the sneak thief or the assassin, and not upon the goodness of their cause. The greatest movement that was inaugurated on this earth had no secrecy like the lodge, for Christ and his disciples were the most open of teachers. Every good work since is like theirs. No argument for secret lodges can be drawn from a state of war any more than for murder. The brother can find the argument on this subject well written out in N. C. A. tract No. 15, and in Rev. R. T. Cross' Sermon on Secretism.

ANTI-MASONS, WRITE FOR YOUR PAPER!

Every true man would be willing that, of the multitudes of the communications received, the editor should cause "the survival of the fittest." If his contributions should be rejected, let him relate his experience, what he has heard, seen and felt respecting secret societies. I judge that we should not conclude that a rejected manuscript has no merit, but that there were other communications a little bit better. I shall write as often as possible, and if my articles shall be crowded out, shall consider it all right; for my heart is in the work and my wish is that the Association shall publish the very best they can get or produce. The paper has improved very much, as it probably would have done had it continued under Bro. Cook's management; and it will doubtless continue to improve if we pray earnestly and continually (as the Cynosure has requested of its reader), for its success, and the success of all the laborers for reform. But we should not only pray always but labor in every possible way to help forward the reform, and show that we ourselves are reformers. The writer improves every opportunity to solicit subscribers for the reform papers and to oppose secretism, but my opportunities are but few. I rejoice in the Washington movement.—C. GRANGER, Clarence, Ill.

Organized opposition to the liquor interest in Norwich, Conn., has reduced the number of licenses in New London county, of which Norwich is the second place in point of population, from 201 in 1880, to 102 in 1884, and something like 100 unlicensed saloons have also been closed in the same period. This decrease in the liquor traffic has been brought about in the face of an increase in the population of the county of four thousand since 1880

GOLDEN TEXT.—We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness.—1 Cor. 1:23.

CHRIST THE POWER OF GOD. I. Christ is the power of God because in the Divine-Human Saviour are all the sources of power by which sin can be overcome. (1) Conviction of sin; (2) a way of forgiveness; (3) a revelation of God and heaven, and duty; (4) divine authority; (5) human sympathy; (6) divine aid in the Holy Spirit; (7) a revelation of our danger; (8) a kindling of hope; (9) the drawing of the love of God; (10) a perfect example. II. Christ is shown to be the power of God by the obstacles it overcomes. Power is measured in two ways: by the difficulties it overcomes, and by what it does in spite of these difficulties. Now the cleansing of the human heart from sin, the removal of sin from the world, is the most difficult achievement proposed to man. Human art and civilization and labor can do almost everything but this. Here human religions and philosophies are a failure. Here is that which says "Thus far, and no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." III. Christ is shown to be the power of God by what it has accomplished notwithstanding this obstacle. It has changed the face of the world, it has renovated its morals, it has lifted whole nations to a high state of civilization, it is renewing the worst of men, and yearly changing multitudes of lives for the better. It has doubled the number of Christians in the last eighty years. If you take a map of the world like those made by the Government Census Bureau, and put the countries in white where is the highest morality and the greatest happiness, and darken the color as the morality darkens, and place beside it a missionary map with the Christianized countries in white, while the color darkens as the Christianity grows impure, and the countries descend into the blackness of heathenism, the two maps will almost exactly coincide. Where is the most of Christ crucified, there is the most morality and the happiest lives. IV. Christ is the power of God, not only in overcoming sin, but for destroying all other evils—sickness, sorrow, death, temptation, ignorance.—Peloubet.

CHRIST CRUCIFIED, THE WISDOM OF GOD. (1) In seeking the wisest and best object—our redemption from sin. (2) By making an atonement and overcoming the governmental in the way of the pardon of sin, so that God can forgive sin and yet not make his very mercy increase crime. No government and no other system has ever solved this problem. (3) In his power of convicting men of sin, showing by the cost of the salvation how great is the evil and danger, and contrasting human sin with divine love. (4) In his power of touching and melting the human heart, so that it will seek salvation and desire holiness. (5) By his sending the Holy Spirit to renew the soul and give it life and light. (6) In answering the longings of the soul for certain knowledge of the life beyond. (7) By setting before men a perfect example of a holy life. (8) By the divine and human natures united in Christ—the human, so that we may see God and feel his sympathy and love; the divine, so that he has all power to save to the uttermost, and all of our love and worship of the human Saviour shall be love and worship of God. (9) Christ shows in a wonderful way the love of God to men.—Peloubet.

CHRIST UNTO US SANCTIFICATION. It is the privilege, nay, the duty, of every Christian to be not only pardoned and accepted, but sanctified; for the apostle says, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification," and the command is, "Be ye holy and sin not." An infidel, who had been noted for intemperate habits and fiery temper, was converted. He conquered the love for strong drink; he gave up without a struggle both smoking and chewing. He was wonderfully happy in the knowledge of his acceptance with God. But his besetting sin, his fiery temper, he tried in vain to conquer. He could suppress, but he could not exterminate it. He could prevent the angry blow, he could check the angry word, but he could not keep out the bitter, tormenting feeling. Long and earnestly he struggled to be free from the power of this sin, but in vain. There was only a deepened conviction and sadness of heart. At length he had explained to him the perfect way of holiness by faith. He was taught to trust Christ to cleanse him from all sin, just as he had trusted him to forgive sin. He placed himself, burden and all, in Jesus' hands, and believed that he took from him this terrible temper. The next day a severe trial was permitted to come to him. His answer to the insolent man, whom six months before he would have felled to the earth with a single blow, was, "I will not quarrel with you. I will pray for you. If you will not do right and fulfil your part of the bargain, I will do both yours and mine. God bless you." The man turned and left without a word, but he did what he came refusing to do. Christ can save us from our besetting sin, and give us power over our enemies.—The Illustrator.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

CHRISTIANITY PREACHES THE CROSS, MASONRY ANOTHER GOSPEL.

1. To preach Christ crucified is the only way to save the world. Vs. 17, 18. The Jews preached ceremonial rites, and the Greeks preached philosophy, but all the time the world was growing worse instead of better. Cruelty, licentiousness and avarice pervaded every rank in society. What the world needed was the knowledge of a Saviour, crucified to save sinners. The preaching of this great truth is needed by the world now as much as then, and anything which prevents men from receiving it is a foe to their salvation. Liquor is such a foe. Preaching has no effect on a brain maddened by whisky and gin or brutalized with beer. The conscience and all those mental and moral faculties by which we discern and embrace truth are deadened in the inebriate. Tobacco has the same effect, though in a less degree. This forms one of the highest and most potent reasons why every one who loves Jesus, though but a little child, should work and pray for the temperance reform. Freemasonry and all the minor secret orders obscure this great truth of Christ's atonement by preaching a doctrine of works, and promising salvation to the moral and immoral alike. But this is not all. They draw off attention from serious things by dances, banquets and other worldly entertainments, and so prevent revivals of religion.

2. No system of error can stand against the preaching of the Cross. Vs. 19–26. The same power which was strong enough to cast down the idols of Greece and Rome, and overthrow all their elaborate systems of philosophy can overthrow falsehood now. Masonry claims the support of many distinguished names, but if all the great men in the world supported it God could make their wisdom foolishness. The question is not how great, or how wise, or even how good are the people who support any particular system, but whether that system is in accordance with God's word.

3. God uses weak instruments for mighty results. Vs. 26–31. One of Martin Luther's school-masters named John Trebonius always took off his hat when he entered into the presence of his boys, and on being asked the reason said, "How can I tell but that among them there may be some one whose words of power will shake the world?" This much impressed Luther, then a poor charity scholar singing in the streets for his daily bread. We never can tell who God may choose to do great things for the world, but we are sure that boys who drink, and smoke, and break the Sabbath, and read dime novels, will never make leaders in any noble work for humanity. The great tasks of the future must be done by the children of to-day. "God loves the weak and small," and the poorest boy or girl who is now trying to do his will may be honored as his instrument by generations yet to come.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

LINES.

SUGGESTED BY THE DEATH OF MY FRIEND, C. L. BLANCHARD.

Under the stars where our loved ones are lying,
We soon shall be resting as sweetly as they,
We soon shall unravel the myst'ry of dying
And walk in the calm of eternity's day.

Ah! soon through the gates as on chariots of fire
We shall sweep as Elijah once swept on before,
And hear the sweet songs of heaven's grand choir
And forget all the sorrows and griefs we once bore.

Oh! a rapturous greeting is waiting us there
On that glorious shore with the loved and the blest,
Where there is no more sorrow no grief and no care
To cloud the blue sky of that Eden of rest.

Then, what tho' our harps on the willows now hang,
And our hearts feel the pain of life's exquisite woe,
A song shall be given for every pang
And Gilead's sweet balm o'er our sorrows shall flow.

OBITUARY.

Seaton L. Harness departed this life Feb. 11, 1884. Father Harness was born in Mercer Co., Kentucky, June 10, 1813. In 1830 he, with others, emigrated to Fulton Co., Illinois, embraced religion Oct. 6, 1831, and united with the Cumberland Presbyterian church Dec. 21, the same year, and was baptized March 18, 1832, by Rev. John Berry. This year the Indians commenced hostilities against the white settlers of Illinois, and Father Harness enlisted as a soldier in the celebrated 'Blackhawk war," Gen. Henry and Major Stillman commanding. On the 21st of December, 1835, he was united in wedlock to Miss Melinda Smith, who survives him. In the spring of 1839 he emigrated to Jefferson Co., Iowa, and settled in Liberty Township. The first election for this township, after the organization of the county, was held in his house, as the history of Jefferson county shows. In the spring of 1846 he removed to Van-Buren county, near Birmingham, where he spent the remainder of his days. He loved the house of God, and was always found in his place ready to work for the Master.

Notwithstanding the church of his choice had no rule against fellowshipping the adherents of secret clans, he claimed to be the Lord's free man, detested the sham benevolence and the counterfeit religion of Freemasonry and kindred brotherhoods, and was a constant reader of the Cynosure, and a praying and voting Anti-mason.

More than a year prior to his death he "set his house in order," made a disposition of his earthly affairs, and was only waiting for his Saviour to call him home. Although he suffered much he never murmured, always praising the Lord for his goodness. Father Harness leaves a wife and five children, four sons and one daughter, to mourn his loss. May his mantle fall on his children. W. H. H.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed. but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1884.

We have, and hope soon to give our readers a very interesting letter from Conrad Stegner, Northfield, Minn.,—his conversion on a man-of-war ship in the Pacific Ocean; how he became a Prohibitionist and escaped from tobacco, interwoven with much entertaining matter. He also sends an old temperance paper containing an article by the good Dr. Marsh in 1835, against secret temperance orders, which turned that able and venerable man out of the secretaryship, and put Mr. J. N. Stearns, who joined the secret orders, in his place. Mr. Stegner writes German-English which we must copy before printing it. He has since sent us a short letter against woman suffrage.

REFORM is from a Latin word which means beauty, and its adjective, formosa, means beautiful. So far is Reform from being a harsh and hateful thing, it is a re-forming, or restoring society as God and nature made and meant it, when it has been warped out of shape and disfigured. The little old town of Alexandria, six miles below Washington, is a little quiet paradise to what it was when Franklin and Armfield's slave-prison was the leading institution, and negroes caught in the streets at night without a pass were whipped, or whipable by any white man who met them. Alexandria is *re*formed as a crushed rose restored to its fragrance and bloom, or a warped star to its beams, angles and brilliancy. Who would not be a REformer?

JUNE 18, 1773, JOHN WESLEY read the book Jachin and Boaz which cost the author his life. In his (Wesley's) Works vol. 4, p. 398, he says of that expose: "I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry! In the face of such a record as this, Masons have been found foolhardy enough to claim Wesley to be a Mason! So they claimed J. Q. Adams and his son Charles Francis in the face of their whole Anti-masonic lives. And what is almost as wonderful, the original mother Methodist Christian Advocate of New York comes out with a clear vindication of him from the Masonic falsehood. Surely the day is dawning.

THE CHICAGO LEVER has this strange paragraph a month or so after our American Prohibition Convention at Washington which was addressed by leading Prohibitionists like Dr. Miner of Boston, and others:

> But little has been said in the papers in regard to a convention held in Washington, D. C., on February 22. This convention, as it appears, was a radical Prohibition convention. The Washington Critic, in speaking of the resolutions reported by the committee, says:
> "The resolutions demand civil rights for all, and the protection of the home and fireside from the use of, and traffic in intoxicating liquors; deprecate the existence of all secret combinations and lodges, and of monopolies which disregard the rights of labor; oppose all combination of capitalist or laborer, which result in strikes or distress; demand the ballot on equal terms for every citizen, with restrictions as shall apply equally to all citizens, native or adopted, and this without respect to nationality, sex or creed; and recommend a uniform national currency, and the recognition of the Bible in the public schools. A supplementary resolution against protective liquor leagues was also adopted."—Lever, Mar. 27.

The Lever is mistaken. All the Washington dailies gave fair reports of our convention, and the handsome and talented American Reformer of New York, gave a fair and full notice before the Lever ventured to notice without naming it. The Lever approves of the secret deistical lodges. Does this explain its un-Christian course?

THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE of March 26th, gives an article by W. S. Titus entitled "The Wolf getting in," in which the writer says "A faction of the U. B. Church is attempting the wolf [devil's] paw under the guise of secretism." The next number, April 2, contains a powerful article by the same writer, who says there "still exists in our church a fearful struggle against the lodge power," and calls for the education of children against it. But in the same number, April 2d, the brave, venerable and good Dr. Davis excels even his former self. We make room for Dr. Davis's whole article, "No Compromise." And the same excellent number quotes from the mother M. E. Advocate of New York, Wesley's vindication from the false and wicked claim that he was a Mason. Well done, brother Hott! Go on in this good way and Bishop Wright and Prof. Tobey will be lost in the general glow, and "the Brethren" be "united in Christ."

> "The Lever has already signified its willingness to support Dr. R. H. McDonald of San Francisco as the Prohibition candidate for President, provided always that the Pittsburg Convention does not object."—Chicago Lever, April 3d.

Dr. McDonald has an excellent reputation among good men in California, as a Prohibitionist. But he is a Mason and decided advocate of the lodge which has sworn him into the terrible Masonic alliance with every Mason who is a brewer, distiller, saloonist or drunken Knight Templar. What assurance can Prohibitionists have that he will violate his secret Masonic oaths and be true to Prohibition? If he will betray the lodge and Masons whom he has sworn to "extricate," when he sees them "engaged in any difficulty," how can he be trusted? The Lever must and will yet see and say that fealty to the lodge and to Prohibition at the same time is a moral impossibility.

"WHY IS WOMAN SUFFRAGE UNPOPULAR?"

It has been, but can scarcely be said to be so now. Nebraska polls, in all, a hundred thousand votes. When woman suffrage was submitted to the voters, above one-third of them voted for it. If the whole poll of the United States were taken, the proportion would doubtless be about the same. This is not unpopularity.

But this cause was for years unpopular:

1. Because its first advocates were associates of those who abjured all voting by both men or women, on the ground that civil government by force was itself wrong, and to be come out from.

2. That the sacred Scriptures, "those old musty parchments," were of no binding force.

3. They asserted human equality to such an extent that, in Milford, N. H., a meeting was held where a chairman was objected to because it gave him superiority to the rest.

4. Theodore D. Weld, a man of great beauty of character and force of eloquence, at his marriage with Angelina E. Grimke, abjured all official headship in the new family, which certainly was not a Christian marriage.

5. Applying this doctrine of the absolute natural equality of men and women, the poet Shelley avowed that, "Any law which compelled the husband and wife to live together after they had ceased to love each other, was an intolerable tyranny." So he cast off his first broken-hearted young wife, and took up with Mary Wolstonecraft, who, though holding the same views of marriage, compelled him to be legally married to her, to secure her rights.

6. This false doctrine of the natural physical equality of men and women, led some women to affect men's clothing, in contempt of reason and Scripture.

7. Some of the leaders, as Henry C. Wright, became consulters of familiar spirits.

8. It was stated to me in Washington that Victoria Woodhull, of free-love notoriety, appeared on the platform at some woman suffrage conventions, and was cordially greeted by leaders of the body.

But it is claimed that the cause of woman suffrage has already cast off the infidelity of its origin, as chemistry has cast off alchemy; astronomy, star-gazing, casting nativities and astrology, and republicanism, the rantings of the Fifth-monarchy Levellers.

The late Washington Convention was opened with prayer; though some of the women were said to be infidels, or semi-infidels. And against adverse inferences from the above and other early follies and eccentricities of "woman's rights," it is held by friends of universal suffrage excepting illiteracy, etc., to be applied to the sexes alike:

1. That, in the words of Mrs. Mary B. Willard, "The women now asking the ballot, would neither have desired or dared to demand it for themselves, on the ground of equality or rights; but who ask it in the interests of humanity and mercy."

2. That it is full seventy years since temperance has been publicly agitated; that the argument has long since been carried; and that the liquor-curse has been and still is licensed by male suffrage. When they go up with petitions the legislators tell them "their cause is good and right," but "women have no votes; and we shall be left at home, if we vote against the brewery, distillery and the saloon."

It is further alleged that, a sa rule, women are more moral than men; that two-thirds of the Christian church members in the United States are females. Distillers and brewers declare that "the ballot in women's hands means the destruction of their business;" and they ought to know. Of the millions of mullatto children, born out of wedlock, hundreds, if not thousands are the children of white men, to one born of a white mother. All the experiments thus far, where women have had a chance to act, seem to justify giving them the ballot. And though it is not true that men are tyrants and oppressors of women; but, on the contrary, are disposed to favor them, yet their deprivation of the ballot does operate harshly in multitudes of cases; and in all cases, deprives them of the ordinary motives to study the theory and practice of government; classes them with idiots, imbeciles, convicts and other classes of non-voters; and deprives them of the consideration in society which they would have with ballots in their hands. And as to family discord, unrocked cradles, and buttonless coats, the Bible, reason and nature will vindicate themselves, after the suffrage, as before. And as every enlargement of woman's sphere up from that of a barbarian commodity of bargain and sale, has borne a double blessing in it to herself and society at large. As mixed education in colleges is proving itself altogether the safest and the best, we see no reason why mixed voting at the polls should not prove equally benign. The Ohio irruption of women into the temperance cause, unlike the old Crusades of men, from which it took its name, has not resembled those other crusades in the vices, follies, madness and blood which Peter the Hermit spread from England to Palestine. It began in prayer, proceeded by argument and entreaty, and seems likely to end in benediction. And the women who rally under the magic letters W. C. T. U. love their husbands and children no less, while their influence falls on our whole country refreshing as dew-drops and as holy as light.

THE CINCINNATI MOB.

This terrible upheaval is, at length, suppressed. So far as we recollect, it is the first case in which our regiments of militia have shot down their fellow citizens by scores to suppress a mob.

Our readers already know the facts. Twenty-three murderers were in the Cincinnati jail. The worst one of them, Berner, was by a wicked jury given twenty years imprisonment with a prospect of pardon for his crime of cold-blooded, deliberate murder. An indignation meeting was called by good, law-a-biding citizens to censure the judicial corruption. Beer and bad leaders took possession of the crowd, the red flag of the secret European Socialists was raised (which is since explained into a sheriff's vendue flag), the great Court House, containing the land-titles of the city and county was burned; and there would have been a general jail delivery by lynching but for the military execution of half a hundred, more or less, of the rioters. Streets were barricaded, and Cincinnati became, from Friday to Sunday night, the Paris of America.

The editor of the Cynosure was a pastor in Cincinnati for nine years, and while there, became cognizant of the following facts, which may throw some light on this holocaust of criminal woe:

1. Dr. Lyman Beecher, then pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, used to say that labor for Christ in Cincinnati came to the least of any place he had ever seen.

2. Elam P. Langdon, a prominent Methodist citizen, who rode with me in a carriage at the last funeral I attended, said in conversation, that he considered the Masonic order fully equal in worth to any of the religious denominations. They were wealthy, he said, owning and renting at that time, one entire block in the city.

3. A woman, who, with her husband, had paid dues promptly, for over a quarter of a century, at her husband's death, applied for the promised funeral and widow's aid. She was refused because the dues were not paid during his sickness. I published the facts in her case and from fifty to one hundred men followed me to the Ohio river, which I was to cross, to put me in. I then preached in my pulpit against secret societies. This was forty-nine years ago. The sermon was popular and was reviewed in the Princeton Repertory. The lodge has hounded me since.

4. E. M. Gregory and other Masons started the secret temperance orders there. I advised my people not to join and kept them out.

5. A pro-slavery mob, led by Jo. Graham, broke and threw into the Ohio, three presses, and the city was three days and nights in the power of that mob. Many were killed.

6. Almost every Sabbath witnessed a secret society parade with bands of music. And thousands of youth of both sexes took their first lessons in Sabbath-breaking and other vices, by following these semi-sacred funeral processions to the wooded bluffs about the city. An Indian chief hung himself in a steamboat cabin at the wharf on Thursday, in hot summer weather. The Masons got the corpse, kept it someway till the next Sabbath, and buried it "with Masonic honors." It was a great turn-out.

7. John D. Caldwell, Grand Secretary of "Select Masters" in Ohio, said to me, "We respect such gentlemen as you, because you are sincere; and you must be aware that we are disintegrating your churches." This was the first time that fact had ever occurred to me.

The forces which move multitudes, like those which move worlds, are hidden. What set that maddened crowd, enraged at the non-enforcement of law, to assail the law, and burn the Court House? The reasons were various:

1. Where the lodge decides the cases, the Court House sinks into popular contempt. There were doubtless, in those crowds, few whose minds and consciences had not been crammed with secret oaths and obligations; and a man who has many oaths, like a woman with many husbands, reverences none.

2. Masons at midnight within tyled doors play at murder of Hiram Abiff, in a pretended joke. And men who play with daggers of lath learn to stab with those of steel.

3. It wanted but half a dozen Irish and German anti-social conspirators trained by land league and Nihilist logic to hate all government, religion and property, to produce the scene of horror through which Cincinnati has passed.

THE NEW CREED.

We wish all Congregationalists who read this paper to understand it. Take the following help from Joseph Cook's Prelude, March 17th, of which the editior of the Religious Telescope says: "It is the most powerful arraignment of a church-creed we have ever read. It is withal fronted with a sharp edge of a practical kind which bodes well for evangelical Christianity."

Here follows Mr. Cook's summing up of the creed:

5. The new creed is a fast and loose compromise. It is a tissue of latitudinarian loop-holes. What would be the result of adopting it? A millenium of milk and water. The new creed represents rather what a few holders of eccentric doctrines could be brought to sign than what the denomination, as represented in its councils or the working faith of its active churches, really holds. As, in a spring, the water sinks to the lowest level of the banks around it, so, in the new creed, the doctrine sinks to the lowest level represented by the various conflicting views of the committee which drew it up.

Seven men were appointed by the St. Louis meeting of the National Congregational Council, (1880) to appoint twenty-five men to draw up and print their Congregational creed. Three of the twenty-five refused to sign it when drawn up.

Of those who signed it Dr. W. W. Patton while editor of the Advance wrote of the St. Louis ordinance, licensing brothels, with monthly examinations of the inmates: "Let the experiment proceed, till we see the best it has to offer."

Dr. Zachary Eddy was made a Mason "in due form" while pastor of Hon. Seth M. Gates, Warsaw, New York. Mr. Gates was a Leroy seceder from the lodge, and endorsed Morgan's revelation, and stood by it till his death.

The "new creeds" which have been good for anything have been written by the light of the flames of martyrdom, and by men who were willing to die for their belief in the Word of God.

This new Congregational, like the "Tariff-for-revenue and Tariff-for-protection creeds is got up merely to hold a party together. Such creeds staved off the slave-question for long years. So this "new creed" is to keep ministers busy while the lodges are carrying the membership of their churches into the organized deism of secretism. How fit are such men to teach the doctrines of Christ whom the lodge hates, rivals, excludes and ridicules by setting a drunken lodge-master to raise the dead as "The King of Judah?"

—Bro. P. S. Feemster, the Kansas agent, has been sick at home with lung fever, which attacked him in February, and has left him with a troublesome cough.

—Bro. Hinman writes from Washington of the continued sickness of Bro. Galloway in Florida. He has sent on a little money to the sick brother, and asks if there is more that can be spared to buy a few comforts for one who has borne many afflictions.

—Rev. A. A. Phelps, who has been engaged in mission work in Nashville, Tenn., has returned to Lima, New York, and is engaged in Gospel and temperance work. Bro. Phelps was on the committee of resolutions of the last Worcester National Convention.

—Due diligence will be used to prevent any fraudulent or otherwise improper advertisement appearing in the Cynosure; but if by any means such an one should appear we will esteem it a great favor on the part of those who detect it to notify us promptly.

—Bro. Springstien wishes his regret manifested that there was no mention of God the Father or Jesus Christ in the call for the Michigan State Convention. Truly, without him we can "do nothing."

—The unhappy news comes from Pittsburg that Rev. Dr. Milligan, of the First Reformed Presbyterian church, is in a very low, perhaps critical condition. Consultation with eminent physicians of New York gives occasion for much alarm. Mrs. C. A. Blanchard, daughter of Dr. Milligan leaves Wheaton this week for Pittsburg.

—Later from Kansas, Bro. McMillan of Olathe, Secretary of the State Association, sends word that we regret to put in type, that because of long continued illness Bro. Fcemster has sent in his resignation as State agent. We sincerely hope that his healtb may be early restored, and that his superior abilities may find constant employment either in Kansas or elsewhere.

THE GRAND ARMY RITUAL.

Several are writing that the ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic advertised in the Cynosure is defective and incorrect. We have been told as much by seceders from that order, who yet affirmed that it was right in the main. Bro. Shaw of the Michigan Holiness Record, Grand Rapids, lately reviewed the character of the order, and was informed by J. R. Bowen, pastor of the M. E. church, Elm Hall, Michigan, that he misrepresented "that excellent order." He writes:

"I was for three years a soldier, and havc for some time been a member of the G. A. R., an organization to which I can conscientiously belong without in any way compromising my religion or duties as a minister of the Gospel. Had I ever discovered a thing in any way contrary to religion I should surely have left the post at once and forever. As to your statements: 1st. No one is ever blindfolded, or his vision in any way obscured; 2nd. No such a thing as a coffin, spade, shovel, or any other "implements of execution" are ever used or seen in our post; neither is there such a thing as a guard representing a firing party; such things are only born in a diseased imagination; 3d. No member is ever in any way required to take such an oath as you state to commit murder, or an oath that can in any way be so construed. In making such statements you either ignorantly or deliberately tell unmitigated falsehoods and grossly insult thousands of good Christian men, who served in defense of our country. God's cause never demands falsehood, and when you make such in regard to the army post one naturally loses confidence in what you say about other things."

Bro. Shaw appealed to the publisher of the ritual, who replies:

"My ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic was, as title page shows, issued in 1875, and was copied from a printed copy containing almost every word (all but a few special 'secrets' not in the print) and with the same title page as mine, except my imprint at the bottom. Copy was furnished by a former member of the order who vouched for its correctness and furnished a few 'secrets' not in the print of copy, but all of the 'ceremonies' were in print including the obligation, coffin scene, etc. Soon after this ritual was issued its substantial correctness was repeatedly vouched for verbally and by correspondents, but such correspondence has not been preserved. My memory is that D. J. Ellsworth of Windsor, Conn., found but a single error in it, and wrote me that he knew it to be correct with that exception.

"It is, however, undoubtedly true that the ritual has been considerably changed within the past two years as I have been repeatedly told by members of the order. With the evidence I have before me I am forced to believe Rev. J. R. Bowen falsifies, and you are at liberty to publish this or make any use of it which you think proper, especially if you publish any part of his letter.

"Cordially yours, EZRA A. COOK."

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

REFORM NEWS.

A CONSCIENTIOUS DEACON.

I met recently a man who was deacon in a Baptist church, an Odd-fellow, and a member of thc G. A. R. Hc expressed his opinion of me personally and of the business in which I was engaged. His father, he said, was a good man and a Mason, and he would join if he had money enough. He very strongly asserted that the Grand Army do not use a coffin in their initiations, which I was very ready to admit; but when I said, "You will not deny that the I. O. O. F. have both a coffin and a skeleton," he replied warmly, "I will not be catechised," and strongly intimated that it would bc very agreeable to his feelings if I would leave his house immediately.

In the same town there was a flank movement to "rope in" the few outspoken Antis by means of a temperance boom. A witty speaker, imported from a neighboring State, gave several stirring lectures and proposed to form a "Prohibition Society," with private sessions. Some two hundred, as I was told, united in organizing the society, some protesting against the secrecy, but waved their scruples to render service in putting the saloons out of the town. One elderly and conscientious man, however, declined to be initiated, and so he was appointed "Outside Guardian" to sift thc crowd. A book of instructions was given him which he kindly permitted me to see. It was none other than the constitution aud by-laws of a Good Templar lodge, with the customary obligation and ceremonies. Thus, under pretext of forming a "Prohibition Society" with private meetings for business, the lodge was worming itself into the community and drawing within its coils some at least who had hitherto refused to worship at any save the Christian altar. Satan transformed into an angel of light by turning the noble cause of prohibition into a recruiting agency for one of the darkest systems ever devised for the destruction of men. When will the people learn wisdom and shun the snares spread in secret for their destruction.

THE INDIAN PROBLEM.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa.

"Godliness is profitable unto all things." If there were need of proof of this declaration it would be found in thc great advantage of peaceful and Christian methods of dealing with the Indians over the plan of either feeding them as paupers or hunting them as savages.

Yesterday I visited the Indian Training school at Carlisle, Pa.; was most kindly received by the attendant physician, Dr. Given, and furnished with some items which I think may interest the Cynosure readers.

There are now under the care of the school 450 scholars from 11 to 21 years of age, about one-third of whom are girls. Capt. Pratt, who is now absent in New Mexico, is expected to return with fifty more. They represent thirty-seven tribes and speak as many languages, so that it becomes a matter of necessity that they all learn to speak English in order to understand each other. This makes an English education easier here than in those Western schools where all speak the same language, and where it is found very difficult to teach them to speak English; partly because it is not a necessity, and partly because they are very sensitive to ridicule on account of failure to speak correctly. All pupils are now received for five years and devote one half of each working day to study and one half to some industrial pursuit, the knowledge of which shall help them in after life. Besides the routine of an English education these Indian boys cultivate 160 acres of land, on which they raised last year 1,600 bushels of wheat, 1,000 bushels of corn, 1,000 bushels of potatoes, besides hay and garden vegetables. Besides they have blacksmith, wagon, harness, shoe and tin shops, and a printing office, which publishes the Morning Star.

Last year these boys made two hundred and fifty sets of double harness, fifteen thousand pieces of tinware, and seven tons of stovepipe.

Nor have the arts and duties of domestic life been neglected. All clothing is made on the premises. Two boys make 260 pounds of flour into good bread each day, and the girls do all the laundry and chamber work.

But that they may more fully learn the duties, as well as comforts of home life, a considerable number are kept, for a part of the year at least, on farms in the country, where they have training in Christian families. At present there are about eighty in the country, and last year there were 150.

The Home.

HOW TO GROW OLD.

Far from the storms that are lashing the ocean,
Nearer each day to the pleasant home-light;
Far from the waves that are big with commotion,
Under full sail, and the harbor in sight:
Growing old cheerfully,
Cheerful and bright.

Past all the winds that are adverse and chilling,
Past all the islands that lured thee to rest,
Past all the currents that lured thee unwilling,
Far from thy course to the Land of the Blest:
Growing old Peacefully,
Peaceful and blest.

Never a feeling of envy or sorrow
When the bright faces of children are seen;
Never a year from the young would's thou borrow,
Thou dost remember what lieth between:
Growing old willingly,
Thankful, serene.

Hearts at the sound of thy coming are lightened,
Ready and willing thy hand to relieve;
Many a face at thy kind word has brightened—
"It is more blessed to give than to receive:"
Growing old happily,
Ceasing to grieve.

Eyes that grow dim to the earth and its glory
Have a sweet recompense youth cannot know;
Ears that grow dull to the world and its story
Drink in the songs that from Paradise flow:
Growing old graciously,
Christian-like grow.

THE BIBLE AND THE CRITICS.

In discussing the question of public biblical criticism, which has been raised by the action of the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, a careful distinction must be made at the outset between that sober, scholarly, and reverent criticism which helps men to a clearer knowledge, and therefore deeper appreciation, of the Word of God, and the wild onslaughts upon holy Scripture, which, when addressed to a congregation of persons entirely untrained in the subtle science of criticism, threaten to deprive them of all that is positive in Christianity. Dr. Newton's criticisms are of the latter class. They are, for the most part, either attacks upon the Bible which have been answered again and again, or theories which, supported by one or two brilliant names, have nevertheless not been accepted by anything like a general consensus of scholars.

During the present century, the attacks on the Bible have been chiefly along two lines: the objections of physical science, and the difficulties of historical, ethical, and textual criticisms. As to natural science, it is always shifting,—the dogmas to to-day becoming the exploded theories of to-morrow. Its point of attack has been chiefly the Mosaic account of creation, and so positive and arrogant has it been that some of weak faith have trembled. But most of these theories have been disproved, and Moses again and again vindicated. For example, a few years ago scientists told us that, as vegetation depended for its growth on the actinic principle in the sun's rays, it was ridiculous to believe, as Moses states, that it appeared on the third day, while the sunlight was not seen till the fourth. Now, however, it is generally accepted that the peculiar vegetation of the Carboniferous period, which answers to that of the third day, must have been prior to any direct rays of the sun reaching the earth, as it could only have been produced under the conditions of heat, shade, and humidity. So Moses was right, and so-called science wrong; and the point of attack of yesterday is, to-day, an evidence of accuracy in the Mosaic cosmogony, inexplicable apart from a belief in its inspiration. Science, which is always advancing, and therefore always changing, does not so much disperse the darkness in which we are involved, as expose the ignes fatui we mistook for light; and, while accepting its theories as working hypotheses in the fields of investigation, surely we may hesitate to apply them to the very different plane of revealed truth.

The study of the annals of the war which unbelieving criticism has waged against the different books of the Bible leads to much the same conclusion. As an instance, let us take the book of Daniel, because the assault on Daniel has been considered by this school one of its greatest triumphs. Let us examine one objection, that the book is historically inaccurate because—

(1) Belshazzar was not the last king of Babylon;

(2) The last king was not related to Nebuchadnezzar;

(3) The last king was not slain at the capture of Babylon.

For some time the enemy seemed to have a very strong case, since Herodotus, Berosus, Abydenus, Ptolemy's Canon, etc., all agree that the name of the last king was Nabonadius, or Labynetus II. He was one of the conspirators who murdered Laborosoarchod, and was not of royal blood; he was at Borsippa when Babylon was taken, afterward surrendered, and, instead of being put to death by Cyrus, was made Governor of Carmania; and further, the name of Belshazzar is not even mentioned by any historian. Altogether, the biblical account seemed irreconcilable with secular history. In 1838, M. Quatremere, in the "Annales de Philosophie Chretienne," suggested as a possible solution of the difficulty that Belshazzar, a scion of the royal family of Nebuchadnezzar, had been associated with Nabonadius in the kingdom, in order to strengthen the usurper's position, just as the first Mameluke Sultan of Egypt was obliged to associate with himself a young child of the family of Saladin. This was but the hypothesis of a devout and learned critic, who was laboring to explain difficulties in the Word of God, and not to make them.

But in 1854 the name of Belshazzar was deciphered from cuneiform inscriptions at one and the same time, independently, by Oppert in Lower Chaldæa and by Rawlinson in England; and later an inscription was translated by Dr. Hinckes, which showed that Belshazzar was the eldest son of Nabonadius, and of royal blood, since the usurper seems to have married a daughter of Nebuchadnezzar, and that he was made co-regent. He appears to have been intrusted with the defense of Babylon, while the king, after being defeated by Cyrus in the open country, shut himself up in Borsippa, and on learning of the capture of Babylon and death of Belshazzar, surrendered and was made Governor of Carmania.

Here again the point of attack of one age becomes in the next an evidence of extreme accuracy, and this explanation is borne out by a very remarkable and undesigned coincidence. In Dan. 5: 16, Belshazzer says that Daniel shall be third ruler of the kingdom. Why third? Because he was only second himself. This is but one instance, but I believe I am acquainted with nearly all that has been advanced against the book of Daniel, and I do not know any objection that has not been satisfactorily answered.

As a science, criticism is in its infancy. Critics even of the same unbelieving school disagree on almost every point except that of endeavoring to destroy as much as possible of the Word of God,—to name two of the most celebrated, Ewald and Baur. Ewald is quite certain that the Gospel which bears the apostle's name is the work of St. John, and that the Apocalypse is not; Baur, on the other hand, from exactly the same evidence, concludes beyond a doubt that, while the Gospel is not St. John's, the Apocalypse is his only authentic work in the New Testament. The Tubingen school, educated in an atmos phere of doubt, and with the tradition that for every critic to start a view of his own is the right thing, doubtless counts in its ranks some great scholars; but we must remember that they are but a small minority among the Biblical scholars of the world, and that men by their training as well fitted as themselves to appreciate the force of a critical objection, have seen no cause to be shaken by these attacks, but have met and replied to them.—Dr. Mortimer in the North Am. Review.

A SPARROW'S LOVE.

I returned home from the chase, and wandered through an alley in my garden. My dog bounded before me. Suddenly he checked himself, and moved forward cautiously, as if he scented game. I glanced down the alley, and perceived a young sparrow with a yellow beak and down upon its head. He had fallen out of the nest (the wind was shaking the beeches in the alley violently), and lay motionless and helpless on the ground, with his little unfledged wings extended. The dog approached it softly, when suddenly an old sparrow, with a black breast, quitted a neighboring tree, dropped like a stone right before the dog's nose, and, with a ruffled plumage and chirping desperately and pitifully, sprang twice at the open, grinning mouth. He had come to protect his little one at the cost of his own life. His little body trembled all over, his voice was hoarse, he was in agony—he offered himself.

The dog must have seemed a gigantic monster to him. But, in spite of that, he had not remained safe on his lofty bough A power stronger than his own will had forced him down. The dog stood still, and turned away. It seemed as though he also felt this power. I hastened to call him back, and went away with a feeling of respect. Yes; smile not! I felt a respect for this heroic little bird and for the depth of his paternal love.

Love, I reflected, is stronger than death and the fear of death; it is love alone that supports and animates all.—Tourgenieff.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

A GREAT DUTCHMAN.

(Condensed from an article in the "Congregationalist," by Rev. C. B. Rice.)

William the Silent was born in 1533. His father might have been living, as the children will understand, when Columbus discovered America; though I do not think he was. He was one of a family of twelve children. Others of the family besides him grew up to be persons of great usefulness; and this was partly because they all had a most excellent mother, who was a wise friend and helper to them, not only while they were children, but for many years afterwards. The father of William was not rich; but when the boy himself was eleven years old he became, by the death of a cousin, the heir to very great possessions and to many titles of honor and power. Most of the property that came to him in this way was in Holland or in regions near by, which we will now call by the same name; but there was also a town in the south of France that came to William, on account of which he was often called the "Prince of Orange."

The boy soon went away from his home to be brought up after the fashion of those times among princes. He was taught to speak in many languages; and he studied war and government. The kings and great men of that age made much account of rich fare and fine living in their houses; and besides that they spent a large part of their time in carrying on wars with one another, and in trying to deceive one another as to what they meant to do. It was a great thing with William that, living with such men, he did not learn to be false. I cannot say that he was always exactly true; but along with these other men his whole course was straight, like the flight of an arrow over a field of snakes.

Holland was then subject to the king of Spain; and the king of Spain was master besides of the most of Italy, and of nearly all the land that was thought to be worth owning in North and South America; and Spain was the greatest power by far in the whole world. When William was about twenty-six years old he was at Paris upon some public matters, and the king of France told him of a plan he had with the king of Spain, to murder at one stroke all the Protestants in France and Holland. The French king thought that William knew of it, and would be glad to have him talk about it. William had not known of it before, and was not glad to hear of it. But he neither spoke nor looked as if he were in any way surprised; and he did not say a word of what he thought about it, only he began to make plans to stop it. It was because he was able to keep back his thoughts at this time and at other times when few men could have done it, that he came to be called "The Silent." William was ready enough to talk, and was lively and gay in social companies, when he had any time for it. He lived richly, too, in his early years, as other princes did; and he might have spent his whole life in that way if he had chosen.

But there were other things for him to do. The great Reformation which had begun under Luther a few years before he was born, had spread over many parts of Western Europe; and many of the people of Holland had become Protestants. The popes and the kings that held to the pope were doing all they could to stop the Reformation. Laws were made in Holland by which no one might have a book written by any of the reformers, or might speak or even think, in favor of what the reformers believed, or according to what he of his own mind might learn out of the Bible, without being put to death. If people held on doing these things they were burned; if they were willing to leave off, having once done them, they were only buried alive or beheaded. Multitudes of women, as well as men were put to death; and children died sometimes with their fathers and mothers. Fifty thousand persons were thus killed in these provinces of Spain within fifteen or twenty years.

The king of Spain, at the time to which we have now come, was Philip II. He set all his mind, such as it was, upon the business of stopping all thinking in religion that was not like his own and the pope's; and he wrote continually from Spain to have the men and women who did not think with him killed faster and faster. And they were killed.

But William the Silent was now setting his thoughts upon saving these people and freeing his country. He was careful and wise in trying to do it. He sincerely meant to serve the king, too, while he might and did what he could to turn him to better ways. He was slow in thinking of rebellion. He was a Catholic, too, himself in his early manhood, although his mother was not; and he came slowly over to be a Protestant, as his thoughts were turned upon such matters, and at a time when he risked his life and all that he had by making the change.

But at last there was no other way but to fight. The whole population, except a few persons mentioned by name, had been at one time condemned to die, by a religious court called the Holy Inquisition and by Philip, —though they could not all be put thus to death. And in 1567 Philip sent the Duke of Alva, a great soldier and in all ways a bloody man, to make shorter work of the Reformation. He put to death eighteen hundred persons in less than three months. William was forced to flee for a time from the country. But he went on preparing such resistance as he could. The work was slow and hard. There was hardly ever a fighting so unequal. The armies he raised were beaten again and again. He had but few trustworthy and skilful men to help him. Many were ready to betray him and sell out the cause. Philip would buy those he could not kill.

If Holland had been all land it might never have been free; but Holland is half ocean, and the ocean saved the land. The patriots clung upon the islands, and fought from boats along the rivers and canals; and they let in the waters often around their cities when they were besieged; and the winds and waves themselves fought for them, sometimes after a wonderful manner, that every one should read of; and some of the people stood ready, if nothing else might do, to turn the waters over the whole country and sail away to some new land. But they got slowly a foothold in their own land that they could keep in spite of Spain. William was all the while directing. He looked through the plans that were formed against them. He sought friends for them abroad. He kept them clear of false friends and of false hopes of peace, which Philip gave. He held up their courage when they were ready to despair. He taught them to be careful when they had gained some success. He sought nothing for himself. He took no power except what it was most needful he should take: he took but part of what was urged upon him; and less, perhaps, than he should have taken. He was steadfast and wise and unselfish; and he came thus to be called and to be, as Washington was, the "father of his country;" and under his hand, and under the great providence of God, there rose up a nation that began to be strong and prosperous, even though there was no ending of war.

Philip saw that the war never could end after his mind, while this wise and brave and great-hearted man lived to look through his plans and turn back his soldiers. So, with such a mind as he had and with the advice of a cardinal, a great officer of the Catholic church, he offered to pay 25,000 gold crowns to any one who would kill William, and to make the man or his family "noble" after his kind. There were men enough to try it; and at length, after many attempts, and having been nearly killed once before, he was shot by that man whose name I have already given. It was on the 10th of July, 1584. William was fifty-one years old; only a little older than President Garfield and only a little younger than President Lincoln. His last words were the prayer: "My God, have mercy on this poor people."

There was need of such a prayer. The one hope of the land seemed gone; the people seemed ready to despair. But they did not, and the prayer was answered. The people had some helpers from abroad; and they held on stoutly to help themselves on land and sea; and other wise and brave men rose up among them, and Holland was free; though the war went on for half a century.

You see how William the Silent was standing in that age as a white marble island might stand in the midst of an ocean, keeping its place and its whiteness while storms and dark waters are dashing always upon it. To look upon such a sight, and upon others that are like it in the past, will help you as you grow up to do good and honor God, whatever others may do; and it will help you also, I think, to try and make some beginning in standing up for these great things while you are yet children.— Christian Intelligencer.

TEMPERANCE.

LEGAL PROHIBITION.

S. M. KENNEDY.

Write it over heaven's gate,
Write it e're it be too late;
Write it on the sun and moon,
Write it not a whit too soon;
Write it on the face of Mars,
Write it on the myriad stars;
Write it high and write it low,
Write it everywhere you go;
Write it on the nation's dome,
Write it in each happy home;
Write it on the maiden's heart,
Write it—act the manly part;
Write it where a man is found,
Write it all the world around;
Write it on the undriven snow,
Write it—write it— be not slow,
Write it—write the demon's fate,
Write it on the school-boy's slate;
Write it large and write it well,
Write it on the gates of hell—
LEGAL PROHIBITION!

Chicago.

EUREKA! I found in the saloon-cursed city of Lockport, N. Y., what I should be glad to find in every city and town I visit—a prohibition hotel. It is kept by D. C. Tower, on Canal street near Niagara street, and easy of access from the depots and business part of the city. Temperance men in Niagara county and others visiting Lockport should seek out and patronize the house that boldly advertises its principles on its front.

TEMPERANCE AND PHYSICAL ENDURANCE.

Weston, the well-known American athlete, has just completed the great feat of walking 5,000 miles in 100 days. He is a total abstainer, and the performance was undertaken to prove that the stimulus of intoxicants was unnecessary for the accomplishment of trials of physical endurance. The whole matter was in charge of a London temperance society, and has been advertised all over the world as a grand temperance argument. A demonstration of the same nature was made last November in London, as the following dispatch of Nov. 11th, 1884, to the Inter Ocean of this city describes:

Mr. Keeble, the noted temperance advocate, has become quite a lion among the temperance and church people. He completed yesterday in the city one of the greatest feats of physical endurance on record. Its accomplishment was undertaken for the purpose of proving to the world that the physical system of a sound man who never uses alcohol is capable of sustaining greater and more protracted fatigue than is the physical system of an equally sound man accustomed to its use even in moderation. Mr. Keeble had in most of his temperance lectures insisted upon this point, and generally challenged his opponents to undertake a test with him. Being a man of fine physique, his challenges were not accepted. He then determined to exemplify in his own powers of endurance the virtues of temperance by a feat of endurance in walking, choosing that because he had no experience either as a professional or amateur pedestrian, and regarding walking as the completest form of physical exertion. He undertook to walk 1,000 miles within 445 hours, and to average during the entire period two and one-quarter miles per hour. No person but himself believed he would ever succeed, but he said he would, because he meant to in the interest of religion and humanity. Yesterday he finished his 1,000th mile within the allotted time, and ended apparently fresh and certainly in excellent spirits and health. A dispute arose at the completion of the next to the last mile, growing out of the decimal difficulty in adjusting the time in the last mile to the total distance to be covered, and Mr. Keeble continued walking until the dispute was settled. It was referred to the sporting judges, who happened to be at the time in another part of the city, and before the decision, which was in favor of the pedestrian, was delivered on the premises, Mr. Keeble had walked 456 hours, and covered a total of 1,025 miles, finishing in good condition.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON PROHIBITION.

The reasons why prohibition should be enacted were stated by Mr. Phillips in an address on Metroplitan Police, a number of years ago, as follows:

"A drunken people can never be the basis of a free government. It is the corner-stone neither of virtue, prosperity, nor progress. To us, therefore, the title deeds of whose estates and the safety of whose lives depend upon the tranquility of the streets, upon the virtue of the masses, the presence of any vice which brutalizes the average mass of mankind, and tends to make it more readily the tool of intriguing and corrupt leaders, is necessarily a stab at the very life of the nation. To prevent the open sale of intoxicating liquor has been the method selected by the State to help its citizens to be virtuous; in other words, the State has enacted what is called the Maine liquor law. You may drink in your own parlors, you may make what indulgences you please your daily rule—the State does not touch you there: there you injure only yourself and those you directly influence—that the State cannot reach. But when you open your doors and say to your fellow-citizens, "Come and indulge," the State has a right to ask, "In what do you invite them to indulge? Is it something that helps, or something that harms the community?"—Christian Standard.

NO VIRTUE IN THE WINE CUP.

Sir William Gale, in the course of his examination before a committee of the House of Lords on intemperance, said that alcoholic liquors are never useful to a man in health. "What," said the Duke of Westminster, the chairman, "when a man is exhausted by overwork is there no benefit in a glass of wine?" "Never," said the witness; "few men are oftener weary from overwork than I am, but I never take wine, because it is a mischief and not a benefit."

"Is there no good whatever in wine at any time, to a man in health?" said the chairman. "No good whatever at any time comes from it to a man in health," said one of the most famous medical men in England. I heard a Canon Wilberforce, in Exeter Hall, London, tell a story pertinent to this matter. He said a lady of quality whom he knew well had become a teetotaler by his persuasion. She was afterward traveling in France, and in a railroad accident was seriously wounded. The surgeon said to her:

"Madam, what are your habits?"

"What do you mean by that, sir?"

"I mean what are your habits as to the use of wine?"

"I take none whatever, sir."

"Then you will pull through. If you were accustomed to wine it would be extremely doubtful."—Boston Traveler.

THE CHURCHES.

—The anniversary exercises at Allegheny Theological Seminary, United Presbyterian, were held Mar. 25 and 26. Rev. Dr. J. P. Lytle of Sago, Ohio, was chosen president of the Board of Directors. Dr. J. T. Cooper, of Pittsburgh, preached the Baccalaureate sermon. Thirty-five students were in attendance and ten graduated.

—The U. P. Presbytery of Chicago at its late meeting, elected Rev. Dr. Meloy of this city as its ministerial delegate to the General Assembly which meets in St. Louis during the last of May.

—Bro. W. O. Dinius of Montpelier, Ohio, has the joy of reporting that in four revival meetings in the United Brethren churches of that vicinity over a hundred persons were converted to Christ or aroused from a backslidden state.

—In a revival at Greenville, Ohio, conducted by United Brethren, there have been also over 100 conversions. The great work of grace is a great encouragement to all the churches.

—A gathering of the friends of Rev. David Thompson of Monmouth, one of the contributors of the Cynosure, was held on the 18th ult., to commemorate the 50th anniversary of his entering the ministry. Pres. J. B. McMichael presided, and Dr. T. H. Hanna of the First U. P. Church presented a collection of very valuable books in behalf of the pastor and congregation of Mt. Hope, Pa.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway of Vernon, Wis., has lately received a token of esteem from his congregation in a purse of $118.

—Dr. Judson Smith, professor of Church history at Oberlin, Ohio, has been selected for the responsible position of secretary of the American Board of Missions. He has accepted the position, and it is thought will have charge of the foreign work of the Board of Africa and China. He is known as a fine scholar and earnest worker. His article on Luther in the January number of the Bibliotheca Sacra was one of the best that the Luther year produced.

—Rev. Y. J. Allen, missionary to China from the M. E. church, South, has completed arrangements for the establishment of an American college in Shanghai. He has engaged a corps of nine female and five male teachers, who will depart for China in a few days. Miss Laura Haywood, principal of the Atlanta High School, sister of Rev. Atticus G. Haywood who is so well known in connection with the educational work among the negroes of the South, takes a leading place among the ladies in the new institution.

—Rev. Henry Morgan, pastor of the Independent Methodist church on Shawmut avenue, Boston, died on the 22d ult. of pneumonia, at the age of 59. For 25 years he has labored among the poor of Boston, fighting gambling, drunkenness and the social evil, and with equal animosity the Roman Catholic church, whose priesthood he accused of fostering all vices. He has published several books, "Ned Nevins the Newsboy" being the best and the best known.

—The Midland reports the two United Presbyterian churches of St. Louis in a flourishing condition. Rev. John A. Wilson came to the first church in 1876, when it had ninety members. It has now two hundred and the growth is steady, strong and healthful. The Grand Ave. church, Rev. T. C. McKelvey, is just coming out of the mission state with a very promising work before it.

—Two hundred and seventy-two new Lutheran houses of worship were dedicated in this country last year. Of these, 162 were built by German, 62 by English, 7 by German-English, 26 by Swedish, 7 by Norwegian, 7 by Norwegian-Danish, and 1 by Danish congregations.

—When Rev. Myron Winslow Pinkerton, who died on his way to Umzilla's country, first went out, he called on Moffit, in London, home from his fifty years of missionary service in South Africa. The scene, as related by Secretary Clark, who was with him, was very impressive. "When Queen Mary," said the white-haired veteran, "Bloody Mary, who could never forgive herself for surrendering her last stronghold in France, was near her end, she said to her attendants, 'When I die you will find Calais graven on my heart.' When I die," said Moffit, "you will find Africa graven on my heart." Then he laid his hands on the heads of Pinkerton and his wife breathed upon them his blessing.

—The first printing done on the west side of the Rocky Mountains was a small school-book in the Nez Perces language. It was executed on a press which, with the type and paper, cost about $450, a donation to the Oregon Mission from fifty female members of the native church at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands.

—The Gospel in all Lands' Year Book for 1884 gives tables representing the present condition of Foreign Mission work and Societies as follows:

American, 28 societies, 760 ordained and 99 lay missionaries, 1,007 female missionaries, 1,159 ordained native helpers and 5,036 others. The native communicants reported number 198,587. British societies 25, missionaries ordained 1,863, lay 378, female 695; native helpers ordained 1,279, others 14,552; communicants 352,196. Continental societies 22, missionaries ordained 417, lay 142, female 314; native helpers ordained 73. others 1,883; communicants 71,734. Total, societies 75, missionaries ordained 3,040, lay 619, female 2,016; native helpers ordained 2,511, others 21,471, communicants 622,517.

The contributions of Protestant churches in Great Britain and America for 1882 for Foreign Missions were about $8,600,000. Of the amount about one third was contributed in America. In addition to this the contributions of the Continental Missionary Societies amounted to $950,000, making a grand total of over $9,550,000 for Foreign Missions.

—Within four years the Methodist Episcopal church has expended $6,455,000 for religious publications, and the Methodist Book Concern has supplied $3,500,000 worth of literature.

—Captain Bundy held divine service in this city at the Lumber Exchange docks, foot of Franklin street, Thursday afternoon, taking his text from 1 Cor. 13:4: "Charity suffereth long and is kind." A large assemblage of sailors and long-shoremen listened to the sermon, besides many of the lumber-dealers and other gentlemen who happened along.

—Rev. P. A. Seguin has arranged for two services in French during the week at the Railroad Mission on State St. in Chicago; and for two also at the Lumbermen's Mission in the southwest part of the city.

—The third General Council of the Reformed churches throughout the world will meet in Belfast, Ireland, on the 24th of June next, and continue its sessions about ten days. The General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held in Stockholm, Sweden, from August 31st to September 8th. A large number of delegates will go from this country to attend these conventions.

—There has not been a time since the days of George Fox that Friends have been so active in missionary work as they are to-day. Their missions are extending and gathering strength and influence. In the East we have Syria, India and Madagascar; in the West, Mexico and Jamaica, to say nothing of our Indian work and the work in the Southern States. In most of these places we have many native members who are active Christians, and are doing much for the salvation of others. We have meetings established in which God is worshiped with more life and power than in some of our meetings in more favored lands: and we have schools where the children and in some instances grown persons, are being fitted by education for useful life-work. Behind all this we have a church that is becoming more and more a missionary church, thereby partaking of the spirit of our Master who said, "Go ye into all the world."—Christian Worker.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN MISSION SCHOOL AT NORFOLK, VA.

The Norfolk Virginian of Mar. 20th notices at some length and with much satisfaction the successful establishment of a noble mission work in that city. The following is an abridgment of its article:

The Freedmen's Mission Board of the United Presbyterian church began operations soon after the war at Vicksburg, Nashville and other points. Later on a flourishing college was established at Knoxville, Tenn., and two good schools were planted in Mecklenburg county, Va., one at Chase City, and the other at Abbyville hard by. The college at Knoxville has at present some 300 students, and is doing a good work in educating its students in the higher branches.

These schools all proved so successful that the board decided to extend its work still further, and with this purpose in view Rev. M. Clarke, of Pittsburg, was authorized to look about for an eligible location where a college could be established similar in its appointments to the one at Knoxville.

The board decided with him that Norfolk furnished the most desirable location, and a school was established here in the early part of last year. Very much to his surprise, the school opened with some 100 pupils, and Mrs. Clarke assisted her husband until another teacher could be secured, and has continued in the work since that time.

The number of pupils increased from time to time until at the close of the session, on the 29th of May, it was found that there had been some 500 applications during the session, and that the total number enrolled amounted to about 450, with an average daily attendance of over 200.

The school was opened again this year under favorable promise, and it was soon found necessary to increase the number of teachers to six—two gentlemen and four ladies, including the principal. The roll now numbers 740 with a daily attendance of about 400. Of course the whole number cannot be handled at one time in the small apartments now used, and they are taught in two installments—one in the forenoon and the other in the afternoon. Mr. Clarke says the pupils are as a rule very bright and make good progress. Not only is the tuition free, but a large amount of clothing has been distributed among the pupils at a nominal charge.

So satisfactory was the result of his first year's experience, that in November last Mr. Clarke broke ground for a college building on Princess Anne avenue, near Church street. The building is now well under way and will probably be completed by the middle of May. It is a large, handsome, three story brick building with mansard roof, and the ground floor measures 68x80. It contains 9 large rooms about 25x30, besides a large airy chapel 40x60, together with basement, halls, laboratory, cloakrooms, etc. Over the front entrance is a marble tablet, with the following inscription: "Norfolk Mission College, United Presbyterian, 1883." The building will be surmounted by a tower 80 feet high, and will be an ornament to the city as well as an honor to the church it represents. Its estimated cost is about $20,000.

Mr. Clarke has already expended some $12,000 here, and expects to spend on an average five or six thousand dollars a year in the good work he is doing.

The advantages of this system of training of Indians are:

1. There is reasonable probability that each one thus trained will become a self-supporting citizen instead of a pauper, as most reservation Indians now are. He will become a contributor instead of a burden to society.

2. He is a hostage and a pledge of peace with his tribe.

3. Some will become teachers and civilizers of their people.

4. More important than all else, many become Christians.

The experiment here and at Hampton has demonstrated:

1. That the Indian (not the exceptional, but the average Indian) can be educated, civilized and become a Christian.

2. That this can be done with far greater facility at these schools than among the surroundings of barbarous life.

3. That it is in every way easier, cheaper and more humane, to educate Indian youth and fit them for citizenship than to hunt them as savages or maintain them as paupers.

4. That the true solution of the Indian problem is in the education of the Indian youth and their absorption by the people as a part of our civilized citizens.

I will conclude with the following facts and estimates taken from a report by the Secretary of the Interior. The cost of Indian wars from 1872 to 1882 was $223,-891,264.50. Add to this the cost of subsistence, $5,000,-000 a year, and we have an aggregate of $273,891,264, or $27,000,000 a year. There are probably not more than 87,000 Indians of school age in all the territory of the United States, excluding Alaska, and but a fraction of what is thrown away on their maintenance would educate every one of them. In view of these facts it is passing strange that, with an overflowing treasury, there should be such meager appropriations for this object, and that these Indian schools should be constantly hampered and embarrassed for want of support.

H. H. HINMAN.

FROM THE MICHIGAN AGENT.

At the close of my last report I was in Sherwood. Thursday evening was stormy, and but few were present, and stolid indifference was a characteristic of the majority who did come. Sherwood I found to be in a pitiable condition. Here is the Rork college, the Rork church, the Rork students, and the Rork church members, yea, and Mr. Rork himself. The doctrines advocated by Mr. Rork have engendered a deadness in spiritual things. I lectured in the F. M. church. On Friday evening, Feb. 29, I met a larger audience and showed unmistakably the connection between ancient idolatry as practiced in heathendom and present idolatry as practiced in Christendom in the secret chambers. Saturday, March 1, I left for Jackson, and tarried at home over Sabbath for rest.

On Monday I left home for Leslie, west of which place I was announced to speak at the Wicks school-house on this and the following evening. Met a small audience the first evening although the weather was intensely cold. On the second evening more were present, the craft being well represented. All was quiet, however, until the close of the service, when there was considerable spitting of tobacco juice and loud talking, all of which failed to frighten the lecturer or refute the arguments presented.

On Sabbath evening I listened to a sermon from Bro. C. C. Foote in the Presbyterian church at Parma. Some groaned when he referred to Freemasonry. Bro. Foote announced that he would continue the subject on the following evening. I was not present, but learned that Bro. Foote again, among other things, properly and consistently referred to Masonry as a hindrance to walking with Christ. At the close he announced that on the following evening he would preach again from a line of thought upon which he had spent much time and careful study. The meeting was a union meeting between the Baptists and Presbyterians. It will be remembered that only a few weeks previous, in the M. E. church, Bro. Baker had made cutting allusions to the lodge. This being followed by Bro. Foote in the Presbyterian church was too much for Parma. Bro. Foote evidently had no idea of the meeting closing then and there, so he announced as aforesaid. But the "good" Presbyterian preacher arose and stated substantially that as the meeting was not accomplishing anything he thought best to close. Turning to the "good" Baptist preacher he said, "Don't you think so, Bro. Adams?" Bro. Adams said, "Yes." Pointing his finger toward a brother down in the audience he said, "Don't you, brother?" He replied, "Yes." He asked the same of several others, who said "Yes" as promptly as though they had held rehearsal before service. If some one had turned to Bro. Foote and said, "Don't you think you had better take the first train in the morning and go east?" perhaps he would have said, "Yes." He did so at any rate. Fortunately Bro. Foote became somewhat familiar with this kind of ungentlemanly and unchristian treatment some years ago when preaching against slavery. So far as I have been able to learn Parma did not even thank Bro. Foote for his presence and effort. Oh, Parma! God hath it recorded against thee!

A ride of fifty miles by rail and thirteen by stage brought me to the home of Bro. Carpenter in the vicinity of Arnold's Corners. I was announced to speak in the Congregational church, Rev. J. R. Preston, pastor. Here I met a fair audience the first evening, although the mud was deep. I had good attention. Secret societies have never been disturbed here, so it is not surprising if there occurs considerable flinching during the probing of the national wound.

On the second evening I met a large audience. Some estimated that 300 people were present. I gave the "Idolatry of Freemasonry." Some members of the craft were present, and were the first to leave at the close of the lecture. Here I sold no stock but took some subscriptions to the paper, and sold every seven degree exposition I had with me, even to the one I carry as a book of reference, somewhat worn. The sexton told me that, if I should speak there again, the house would not hold the audience if it was a good night. So eager do the people seem to be to hear these truths. From Bro. Carpenter's, where I found hospitality during my stay, I took stage for Coldwater, where I met Bro. Jackson, who took me about thirteen miles in another direction, to California Corners, where posters had been circulated to the effect that I would speak two evenings in the U. B. church.

On the second evening had a good audience and good attention. My Masonic friends were present but kept their jewels. A number of young Odd-fellows were also present. All but one of the expositions of Odd-fellowship were taken after the lecture. The young men said they were going to take them to the lodge and compare notes. A Scotch Covenanter from Ray, Indiana, was present, and at the close of the lecture requested that I come to their church and speak on this subject, to which I agreed. Ray is on the line between Indiana and Michigan. The date for this lecture is not yet fixed. Saturday morning left this place with Bro. Jackson. A ride of fourteen miles brought us to Coldwater, where I attended to accumulated correspondence, and arranged to preach next morning in the U. B. church. Repaired to Bro. Sinclair's, remained over night, and preached as announced in the U. B. church in Ovid. Preached at Fox school house in the afternoon and again at the above church in the evening. From this I announced lectures for Tuesday and Wednesday evenings following.

Tuesday afternoon it rained and in the evening it was intensely dark, somewhat misty and very muddy. Notwithstanding this a number were out to hear. On the following evening it was darker and more muddy, and rained some. But the audience was doubled in numbers and there was good attention while I presented the similarities between the ceremonies of Freemasonry and the ceremonies of false worships all along our past history, for the toleration of which God has cursed whole nations. At the commencement of the second evening's lecture there was an attempt at disturbance. When I arose to sing the opening song a spasm of coughing seized a portion of the audience, which soon became contagious. I waited very quietly until all was still, and not a cough was heard before I sang a note. I would have stood still there one straight half hour if they had continued their coughing. I made no reference whatever to this, only to silently wait until all was still. The leaders felt chagrined. Also when I knelt to pray, a man struck up, "We'll hang Jeff Davis on a sour apple tree." I paid no heed whatever to this, but continued praying. All were quiet but this lone man and myself. He sang through the first verse and ceased, beaten at his own game. I finished my prayer, made no reference to either the man or his song, and went on with the talk. At the close he came forward and apologized. No financial aid from this meeting, but good was done. This is the first lecture of the kind ever held in this place. Sold a few books and took one subscription to the paper. Collected $31.00. Close this report on my way to Jackson to arrange for the annual meeting.

H. A. DAY.

BUSINESS.

Bro. Ferren writes from Ellington, N. Y., of his long acquaintance with the Cynosure, his high appreciation of its merits and of his trials and successes in securing subscribers. He was 28 years old at the time of Morgan's "taking off," and personally knowing to many of the facts in the case. He was present at the unveiling of the monument at Batavia, but ill health at the time and his advanced age prevented him from taking any active part.

Bro. Yankey of Fayetteville, Pa., takes the premium for the BIG LIST. Monday morning his letter brought us a list of thirty names from Chambersburg and vicinity, all of them for one year each. The cause is good enough for some one to make an effort to surpass this record. Who will undertake it?

Buds and Blossoms is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. We shall be happy to introduce this magazine to hundreds of American homes, and have secured a special arrangement from the proprietor. Buds and Blossoms is 75 cents per year; with the Cynosure the two will be $2.50, or any subscriber who has already paid for this paper can get the magazine at the same rate.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

NOTES.

We again wish to call the attention of canvassers for the Cynosure to the necessity of their stating in their letters that there is an extra copy due them, when such is the fact.

1st. Unless you do state it, the subscription clerk may not think of it.

2d. When you send in a few names at a time, it is impossible for us to keep the account so as to know when each has his quota of subscribers, for we have not the time.

3d. Some have preferred not to take any commission though sending in full clubs. But we wish it clearly understood that if anyone who wishes it has failed to receive his extra number of the Cynosure or any commission due, we hope that they will write us at once that we may correct the error.

4th. We are doing the business for you, friends and if it is not done satisfactorily we hope you will write us a personal letter.

A NEW PAMPHLET.

A WOMAN'S VICTORY;

OR

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason —and especially BY HIS WIFE. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. Price, fifteen cents. Ten for a dollar.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

Or the Power of the Secret Empire. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper, 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional selections from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

CROWN OF WILD OLIVE. Elzevir Edition, Bourgeois type, fine cloth, ornamented, 25 cents.

ETHICS OF THE DUST. Elzevir Edition, Bourgeois type, fine cloth, ornamented, 25 cents.

CHOICE WORKS. The three above, bound in one vol., half Russia, red edges, 50 cents.

"The most accomplished English writer living. This dainty Elzevir edition is fit for Queen Titania's hand."—Methodist Magazine, Toronto.

"The type, paper, and binding are fit vehicles to carry to the public some of the best thoughts of the greatest living master of the English language."—Universalist, Chicago.

"At the astonishingly low price of 25 cents each. No more delightful prelude to the study of mineralogy has ever been given than is found in "Ethics of the Dust," and these cheap, yet careful reprints, place them within the reach of all."—The Continent, New York.

"Put forth in such admirable shape as to increase their circulation among all classes. The excellence and cheapness of the publications by this house are making friends throughout the country, and aiding materially in spreading knowledge of desirable literature."—Indianapolis Journal.

"In publishing Ruskin's Choice Works, Mr. Alden has established a fresh claim upon the gratitude of American readers. These books are only examples of the work Mr. Alden is doing. His catalogue comprises most of the best standard works printed in the English language, and his prices throughout are such as to justly entitle him to be called a public benefactor."—Christian Advocate, Buffalo, N. Y.

"The above lovely little books of Ruskin, published by the most enterprising publisher of the day, are worth more than they cost merely to be looked at as ornaments, they are so dainty in design and color. That they are as full of meat as an egg, goes without saying, for Ruskin in his playfulest mood is a teacher of the deepest lessons, both religious and secular, and if he were not, his style is so musical, so bright, that of itself it is a lesson in purity."—Dominion Churchman, Toronto, Canada.

LUCILE VERNON.

This is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"Lucille Vernon" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

It belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical duties. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

HOME AND HEALTH.

REVIVING DROWNED PERSONS.

Dr. A. Voisin communicated to the Rochelle Congress the satisfactory results which have attended the great efforts made for some years past by the Paris Municipality to improve the treatment of drowned persons in that Capital—efforts which Dr. Voisin has been the chief instrument in carrying out. He now reports the results which have been obtained: 1. The almost absolute certainty of restoring life to persons who have remained under water, or "between two waters," for a period varying from a few seconds to five minutes—no one formerly having been saved after three minutes' submersion. 2. He has succeeded in restoring to life persons who have remained under water from five to twenty minutes. 3. These results have been obtained in individuals not merely in a state of syncope, but in an asphyxiated state, as shown by their violaceous face and lips, their open mouth, and flaccid masseters. 4. These results have been gained in consequence of the excellent arrangements made for the rigorous carrying out of Silvester's method; the effectual application of warmth to the whole surface of the body by calorific generators; the ready access of warm baths and cold douches; the keeping the patient quietly in bed for some hours after his restoration—the whole system being administered by a well-trained and disciplined staff, which is kept in constant readiness.—Medical Times and Gazette.

HOME HINTS FOR SPRING.

Bureau and washstand covers are among the most common pieces of fancy work, and are of countless designs. Among the prettiest, this winter, are those of crash or momie cloth, made in scarf pattern, with the ends in embroidery and drawn work, from a quarter to half a yard broad. They may be done with colored silk, but are much prettier when worked with the threads which have been taken from the material. The fringe, which is formed by drawing out threads, when the work is all done, has a broad heading made by alternately taking out and leaving seven or eight threads; and, over those left, working a cross-stitch or feather-stitch. Above this are broad, open patterns of drawn-work, and ribbon may be drawn through, or a bright color placed under. There should be a pin-cushion cover to match. Mantel and window lambrequins are made in the same way, or they may be crocheted with fisherman's twine to imitate the Macrame work, which is so much more difficult. Any pretty pattern of knitted or crocheted edging can be used, and a fringe added, or colored tassels of chenille on each point.

Table linen, in a full, good supply of which a good housekeeper takes pride, is varied and beautiful enough to satify any taste. There are table cloths and napkins suited to every occasion, and every course from soup to coffee and fruit, with appropriate designs in colored or white embroidery; but an initial or monogram, worked in white, with or without fringed sides, which can be washed without fear of losing color, seems most desirable. Damask cloths of red or grayish brown are pretty and economical for breakfast and tea. The latest imported styles for napkins are long and narrow, like towels. These napkins protect the dress very perfectly, and are to be welcomed for this reason.

The large stores in the cities bring out their ginghams, prints and muslins in early spring, and it is well to make up plain summer dresses now. Styles which are simplest and can be done up easily are chosen for such goods. Plain blouse waists plaited or gathered into a belt, a plain overskirt looped high on the hips, with an underskirt tucked or trimmed with gathered flounces, always laundry well. For children, a blouse waist, and skirt of two or three scant ruffles, with a broad sash of the material tied behind, is very pretty.

It is best to make up underclothing early, if done at home. If one wishes a combination of corset-cover, skirt and chemise, which is popular and desirable, a close-fitting polonaise pattern, with the back seams cut off to an ordinary basque length, and two plain breadths gathered on and sewed into the long front side seams, will make a garment quite as satisfactory as those which cost two dollars and a half.—American Agriculturist.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only anbscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philsdelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D.D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, hands omely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

A POLE STAR

In the heavens of civil and religious liberty

—THE—

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies....and other anti-Christian Movements."

Able writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands, and from the different denominations, contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath Observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, pointing out both the evils and the remedy. In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

TERMS: $2.00 per year; special terms to clubs. Send for sample copies.

IN BRIEF.

It has recently been discovered that the pericarp or seed vessel of oats contains a certain substance which has a peculiarly stimulating effect upon the nervous system, this effect never lasting more than an hour, and varying in intensity according to the kind of oats, being more rapid and transitory in its action if the oats have been ground. The new substance is an alkaloid and has received the name of avenine.

—A turn of the tide has occurred in English ship-building. The decline in freights and multiplicity of disasters to English ships within three years have brought the ship-building on the Tyne and Clyde to a total suspension. No new keels are visible. Several thousand men are idle, and those who are at work are employed in the completion of vessels now rapidly approaching completion.

Samuel Wells Williams, late professor of the Chinese language and literature in Yale College, has bequeathed $5,000 to the college, contingent on the death of his sister. The object of the bequest is to establish a fund that the professorship of Chinese be continued, otherwise to educate Chinese students. He has also bequeathed $1,000 and his cabinet of Chinese minerals and curiosities to the theological seminary.

For making luminous paint this is the receipt: Take oyster shells and clean them with warm water. Put them into the fire for half an hour, and then take them out, cool them, pound them fine, and remove the worthless gray parts. Put the powder into a crucible with alternate layers of sulpher. Close the lid and seal it up with sand made into a stiff paste with beer. After the crucible has been over the fire for an hour and afterward cooled the contents will be found to be white. Sift the powder carefully and mix it with gum water. This gives a paint which remains luminous for a long time after dark if it is first exposed to daylight.

The example of Governor Irvin of Idaho, in returning his salary to the treasury has been imitated by General Charles H. Grosvenor of Ohio, who returns to the government the sum of $3,975, which he recently received under the arrears of pensions act. General Grosvenor says that he does not consider himself justly entitled to the money, but does not want it credited to the conscience fund. It is therefore placed among what is known as "miscellaneous receipts." A great many people have received as large and in some cases larger sums than this under the arrears of pensions act who are not so much entitled to the money as General Grosvenor was, a gallant soldier, and carries with him the wounds which testify to his courage.

A tuneful enemy of ex-Secretary Blaine, by the name of Rosewig, has given him the most cruel blow he has received for many a day. Rosewig has written a piece of music for the piano, entitled "The James G. Blaine Grand March," and it is about as wretched a composition as was ever published. Mr. Blaine is having copies sent him at the rate of five or six a day, and his musical friends are continually offering to play it for him. The matter has become such a nuisance that any package that comes to the house in the shape of a roll of music is now commited to the waste paper basket without being opened, and in the future an allusion to the "march" will be received in the Blaine household with painful silence. The anti-Blaine men are already in negotiation with all the hand-organ manufacturers in the country to include the "march" in their repertoires, and Mr. Blaine's musical admirer will probably become celebrated.

An ancient manuscript of great interest to the Christian world has lately been discovered in a library in Constantinople, and published by the Archbishop of Nicomedia. It is entitled, "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," and its date is placed by competent scholars as far back as A. D. 120 to 160. In fact, it is the earliest Christian writing in our possession apart from the New Testament. Its length is about the same as that of the Epistle to the Galatians. The original is in Greek, and German translations have within the past few weeks reached this country. Now the Greek itself is here; and a translation by President Roswell D. Hitchcock and Professor Francis Brown, of the Union Seminary, with an introduction, will be published this week by the Scribners. The writing is chiefly important on account of the light it throws on the organization of the primitive church. Says one of the scholars who has seen the book: "The deductions from the contents of this important manuscript are at variance with nearly every polity established. They are all shown to be later growths or developments. The Episcopalian will find slender ground for the Apostolic succession; the Presbyterian loses his ruling elder; the Baptist gets water 'poured' on him, and the Congregationalist gets small comfort. Each denomination will continue on its own way, no doubt, but this document will serve to emphasize the fact rather more than suspected before, that to make a claim is not equivalent to proving it."

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. DR. JOHN BULL'S

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The residents of Idaho are very much alarmed over the spread of Mormonism in that Territory. Delegate Singiser, of Idaho, in a letter to Senator Platt at Washington, urges the passage of the bill re-apportioning the Legislature of the Territory. He says that prominent people from all over the Territory have written him urging its passage as a necessity in curtailing the rapidly growing power of the Mormon church. Out of the total membership of the Legislature ten of the thirty-six were Mormons.

—There was an interesting incident, says the Inter Ocean, in the House when Congressman Wise, of Virginia, arose to move that the Secretary of War be authorized to loan several United States flags belonging to the government to the citizens of Richmond to drape a hall in which a fair for the benefit of disabled Confederate soldiers is to be held. The motion was adopted with significant unanimity.

—The members of the House are preparing to flood the country with political speeches, and have authorized the Doorkeeper to employ assistance in the folding-room, where they are folded and wrapped. This occurs every Presidential year, and, as usually is the case, the more new men there are in the House the more speeches will be printed. Not one in ten are ever delivered, but the orators get leave to print, and then put their speeches in the Record.

THE CINCINNATI MOB.

—All was quiet during the week in Cincinnati, but the barricades remained about the jail and a regiment of militia remained on guard. Saturday afternoon, on account of much threatening on the streets, guards were doubled and every preparation made to suppress an uprising, business houses even providing armed guards. Great precautions were thought necessary until after the municipal election. The Sabbath passed quietly.

—Governor Hoadly suggests to the Ohio Legislature that it offer a reward for the arrest of the murderer of Captain Desmond, killed during the Cincinnati riot, and that an appropriation for the relief of Desmond's mother be made. A bill was also introduced that citizens may recover from the State damages for property destroyed during riots.

—The full list of killed and wounded will never be made known. The thing is impossible, as every man of the wounded who could walk away unobserved did so. The best list shows thirty-nine killed and 122 wounded. The list of the killed is probably correct, and the deaths of the wounded will increase it probably to fifty. Experts maintain that the wounded who will recover cannot be fewer than 200.

COUNTRY.

—The trunk line roads will carry delegates and visitors to the Republican and Democratic conventions at Chicago for one unlimited fare for the round trip.

—Three boys, the sons of Cincinnati business men, while driving a spring wagon, were killed Saturday evening by a locomotive at the Spring Grove Cemetery crossing.

—A Texas Pacific train was wrecked near Cisco, Texas, Saturday morning, the baggage car and three coaches tumbling down an embankment. Seven persons were killed and many injured.

—The tug Peter Smith exploded her boiler off Vermillion, on Lake Erie, Sunday, killing two engineers and Captain Smith, of the schooner Sherman, who was on a pleasure trip.

—The City Marshal of Shreve, Ohio, crushed the skull of an inoffensive old man because he could not walk enough while drunk. The indignation of the citizens at the assault was so great that the officer was taken to Wooster to escape lynching.

—During March $8,250,000 worth of property was destroyed by fire, and for the first quarter of 1884 the loss was $27,250,000. $3,000,000 in excess of the record for the corresponding period of 1883.

—At the close of the year the Western Kansas Stock-raisers' Association, now in convention at Dodge City, had a membership of ninety-five, who owned 350,000 head of cattle, valued at $10,000,000.

—Southern cotton-mill owners met Thursday at Augusta, Ga., and organized the Southern and Western Manufacturing Association. The gathering is regarded as the most influential one ever held in the South.

—The North Side German saloon-keepers of Chicago have appointed a committee to organize all saloon-keepers' associations in the city with a view to work among the voters, elect the next legislature and repeal the $500 license.

—The steamer Rebecca Everingham burned Thursday morning to the water's edge at Fitzgerald Landing, Chattahoochee River, forty miles below Columbus, Ga. The fire originated in the stern of the steamer, and it is thought from an electric lamp spark. The passengers saved escaped in their night clothes. Thirteen persons were lost.

—What is called a lake whale has just been caught in Lake Michigan. It is nearly twelve feet long and is five feet in circumference, weighing over 1,000 pounds.

—A cyclone thirty miles south of Chattanooga, Tenn., Tuesday night, wrecked many structures, causing the death of seven persons. An express train was blown from the track, the fireman being killed and the engineer wounded.

—A sudden hurricane struck Pittsburg Wednesday forenoon, wrecking many structures, and entirely destroying Oliver & Roberts' wire-mill, in process of construction. Three persons were buried under a ruined building and fatally hurt. The storm swept through the Monongahela Valley, leaving destruction in its path.

—A brief telegram from Springport, Ind., states that a cyclone struck Oakville, Delaware county, Ind., about 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, destroying the entire town. Five persons were killed and several wounded.

—The Chicago, St. Louis & Pacific, and Chicago & Indiana Central Railroads, filed articles of consolidation last week Tuesday, the joint capital being $30,000,000. The combination will be known as the Chicago, St. Louis & Pacific.

—The Indiana Mine Inspector reports 206 collieries in the State, employing 5,403 men, which produced last year 2,560,000 tons of coal. The combined capital is $1,600,000, and the fatal accidents for the period stated numbered eleven.

—By the accident on the Louisville and Nashville Road at Belleville, Ill., Thursday evening, twenty-five persons were wounded. An infant died of its injuries and a half dozen of the victims are believed to be fatally hurt. Two cars left the track and turned over.

—For three days last week forest fires have raged in several counties of Southern North Carolina, destroying turpentine orchards, vast forests of pine, residences, and turpentine distilleries. The fire swept a section of about 150 square miles, leaving the country a blackened wilderness. No lives are reported lost.

FOREIGN.

—The steamer Daniel Steinmann from Antwerp, with five officers, thirty-three sailors and ninety-one passengers, struck about ten o'clock Monday night last week on the Mad Rock shoal, between two and three hundred yards southeast of the light-house on Sambro island, in a dense fog and a fierce gale. She immediately rebounded but a moment later struck on the Gardner shoal, and had an immense hole knocked in her bottom. The water poured into her in a great volume, and she sank within a few minutes after first striking. So far as is yet known only one life-boat was launched, but how many it at first contained cannot be even guessed at. About 11 the men on Sambro island observed the boat making for the shore, and guided it by torches around to a calm cover. Its seven occupants landed safely. Five were of the crew and two passengers. When daylight broke the only portion of the wreck that was visible was the topsail yard, to which two people were seen to be clinging. A boat at once put out and rescued the pair from their perilous position. They proved to be Capt Schoonhoven and a boy passenger, who had clung to a submerged spar all night.

—A dispatch from Cairo April 5th represents General Gordon's position as desperate. The reports from Berber are that the partisans of the Mahdi hold the entire command of the Nile between Khartoum and Shendy. The Governor of Sennaar sent to General Gordon asking for help. The Sennaar garrison, he says, will not be able to hold out another month. General Gordon advises him to try and arrange a capitulation, as help from Khartoum is impossible. The statement made in the House of Commons by the Marquis of Hartington, Secretary of State for War, that General Gordon has never asked for the assistance of English troops is opposed to the official information at Cairo. According to this General Gordon is relying upon relief from Indian troops which he expects to reach him by way of Suakim and Berber. In a private letter to Commander Maxwell, General Gordon writes: "We exist day by day, and though excitement is nice sometimes we can have too much of it. While the responsibility is heavy, I can only place my trust in God's mercy, for there is nothing else.

—The defeat of General Gordon March 16th was caused by the treachery of two black Pashas, who charged into the ranks of their own troops, allowing the enemy to enter the gap made. It is reported they have been court-martialed and shot.

—In the House of Commons, Gladstone replying to Northcote, Thursday, said the time had not yet arrived for sending a peremptory order for General Gordon to withdraw from Khartoum. Gordon was not under orders to remain. He could leave any time he felt so disposed. Gordon believed himself perfectly safe.

—The British Cabinet Friday decided against formally establishing a protectorate over Egypt. In the Lords Earl Granville said the government was not prepared to send a military expedition to the relief of General Gordon. The latest advices from him were assuring.

A GOOD MINISTER says, "I am among a people some of whom will do nothing unless they can have their own way; who will not help put down whisky unless they can vote against tobacco. I do not wish to be like them, and I am hesitating between voting with the Prohibition or the American party." Tobacco, though vile, and to be condemned, is not to be named in the class with the lodge. Tobacco is a hurtful error. The lodge is a "damnable heresy," which is "denying the Lord." Moses, without jails or prisons, had few capital crimes; false-worship was one: but he punished stealing by "restoring double," or at most four-fold. England used to hang for stealing a sheep by a hungry man. So Satan pushes ever to extremes to block reform by multiplying capital sins. The man who puts tobacco on a par with rum is a weak man and ignorant though sincere. So is the Prohibitionist who hopes to overthrow liquor by co-operating with a Christ-excluding lodge. Worship underlies everything else; and false-worship is a fundamental wrong.

The Senate passed the Educational Bill of Mr. H. W. Blair of New Hampshire, last week after many prophecies of its defeat. This bill provides that $77,000,000 shall be appropriated in such a way as to provide for the equalization of school privileges to all children of school age in all States and Territories, without regard to color or race, and gives them an opportunity for education. The expenditure is to extend over eight years, as follows: First year, $7,000,000; second year, $10,000,000; third year, $15,000,000; fourth year, $13,000,000; fifth year, $11,000,000; sixth year, $9,000,000; seventh year, $7,000,000, and eighth year, $5,000,000. The framer of the bill had numerous contingencies to provide against. The illiteracy of the country has its immense bulk in the Southern States, and the jealousy of the Republican Senators from the North was aroused at the probability that politicians could make capital use of this subsidy to forward their personal and ambitious aims. From this fear arose the greatest opposition to the measure. But for years the leaders of the Republican party have advocated such a measure. Judge Tourgee, author of "The Fool's Errand," wrote for it with an eloquent pen as the next great work which the party must take up. Senator Logan introduced a bill to accomplish the same end by means of the whisky tax, and ex-Secretary Blaine urged a modification of Logan's plan. The bill will probably pass the House and soon become law. We are sorry to note that the advanced position of Mr. Blair on the temperance question seemed to inspire the opposition of some of the press correspondents toward the measure.

The abortive attempt of the Cincinnati mob to right a great and fearful wrong will not be altogether a failure. The corruption that had settled like a miasm about our criminal courts needed a terrible and fatal lightening stroke to consume it. Some tokens of a purer atmosphere already appear and they will be more manifest as time passes, and men awaiting trial for capital crimes will be less likely to escape a just penalty now than a month ago. It is said that last year there were in this country fifteen hundred murders and only ninety-three legal executions, while in the same time the lynchings numbered a hundred and eighteen—a result that is not strange in contrast with the first-named facts. The dead of Cincinnati belong to the whole country, and in the economy of justice may be reckoned as part of the penalty the nation must pay for neglecting to enforce the laws against crime.

Gladstone has gained several important, and, from the standpoint of English liberalism, glorious victories during the past few weeks. The attack of the opposition failed because they could propose, not only nothing better. but absolutely nothing worth consideration as a substitute for the policy so ably defended by the Premier. Last week Monday after a great speech Gladstone carried forward the franchise bill one notch nearer success. This measure will extend the franchise to between one and two million more voters in Great Britain and is bitterly fought by some of the Conservative party.

Amid the conflicting reports of the capture of General Gordon at Khartoum in the Soudan by the rebel tribes, varied next day to word that he was recalled, and then again that he is safe from all attacks, it is assuring to read the calm words of his brother, Sir Henry Gordon, who is in direct and as frequent communication with Khartoum as the circumstances allow. He has not the slightest fear for his brother's safety, and regards all the outcry about the treachery of the home government as bosh. The plan originally marked out is being carried out both by Gladstone and Gordon. The latter has nearly completed his work and hopes that his successor may soon be appointed. There are indications that England does not intend to abandon Egypt, and that plans for a fall campaign are carefully maturing.

General Gordon says his brother will not return to England, but will on leaving Egypt return to Western Africa and resume his engagement with the King of the Belgians to take command of the military operations of the International African Association, which now, with Stanley at its head, is developing the trade with the interior by way of the Congo. His life will henceforth be nobly devoted to the civilization of Africa and the extirpation of the slave-trade—a fitting work for a life of singular change, romance and success, devoted to the good of his fellow-men and the glory of his God.

Every star shines for all eyes. Every breeze blows for the whole human race. Every rain drop falls for all life. The light, air, rivers, oceans, mountains, worlds, science, religion, life, all good, yea, God himself, are for all, old and young, male and female, the strong and the weak, everywhere and always. But not so with Masonry. It is for the few, and then only for the strong. Never, nay, never for the weak. Even the weak ones it claims to benefit are limited to only a few accidental cases in connection with themselves. —Reformer.

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT SECRET SOCIETIES?

BY REV. WILLIAM WISHART, D.D.

When we undertake to investigate the subject of secret societies, there is a difficulty or objection which meets us at the very outset; namely, that the works and doings of these societies are so completely covered under a veil of secrecy and darkness as to be beyond the reach of investigation. Behind this objection the friends of secretism often take refuge when they are assailed and boastfully claim that what cannot be known, cannot justly be condemned: What do you know about secret societies? You have never been in the lodge. I suppose I ought to understand this thing —I am a Mason and have been in the lodge, but you can know nothing about it. Such is substantially the language which we often hear from the friends of secretism.

A STRONG PRESUMPTION AGAINST SECRETISM.

But even if we admit all this to be true, it affords a very strong presumption against secret societies. Why is it, that we cannot know the secret counsels and doings of the lodge? We live in a land of liberty where the rights of conscience are both protected and respected. There is no truth whether of reason or revelation that cannot be openly maintained —no duty whether civil or religious that cannot be openly performed without the least fear of molestation or persecution in this land. Why then this secrecy? Why this guarded, oath-bound, and penally enforced concealment? Truth loves the light. An honest man is willing to be searched. But rogues and villains clude examination. As no good reason can be given for this strange and unnecessary concealment, we are forced to the conclusion that it is to be accounted for, on the ground of a bad one. Our Lord gives the true reason—"Men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved." John 3:19. No good cause in this free country of ours needs to be concealed and certainly no bad one ought to be.

SECRETISM LOVES DARKNESS.

Yet it is worthy of remark that even professedly Christian Masons and Odd-fellows are peculiarly fearful of investigation. They hate and shun the light when it comes from such a direction as to shine into the lodge. You may investigate any other subject sacred or secular, and not in the least disturb their tranquility. You may call in question even the authenticity of the sacred Scriptures or the truth and genuineness of our holy religion, and they will preserve their usual calmness and equanimity. But when we undertake to investigate the subject of secret societies or to examine and discuss their character and claims, they not unfrequently grow nervous —sometimes fly into a rage, and utter the most bitter denunciations; and in some parts of the country they even resort to threats and intimidation in order to prevent the free investigation of this subject.

And why is this the case? Are secret societies so high and holy that their pretentions and claims are not to be called in question? Or do the members of these societies suppose that, because they were led into them hoodwinked and with their eyes shut, other men are bound to receive them in the same way? The members of secret societies are by no means backward about proclaiming their utility and excellency. They are commended as schools of virtue and piety, of brotherly love, and benevolence, yea as equal and sometimes superior to the church of God in promoting the temporal and even the eternal well-being of men. But if we undertake to investigate the validity of these lofty claims and pretentions, we are regarded as transcending our proper rights or denounced as if guilty of unpardonable temerity and presumption.

SECRETISM IN CONFLICT WITH RELIGION.

It is, however, a dictate of our holy religion to receive nothing as true and approve of nothing as right without strict trial by the supreme standard of truth and duty. We are not to receive principles and assume obligations without knowing what they are. We are not to renounce the exercise of our own reason and conscience and blindly surrender ourselves up to the keeping and dictation of others. They cannot answer to God for us. Every man must give an account of himself to God, and hence, every man should think for himself, believe for himself, and act for himself. Implicit faith and blind obedience will do for fools and ignorant dupes, but not for intelligent Christians—not for Christ's free men. Yet secretism demands this implicit faith and blind obedience. The rule of God's Word is: "Prove all things: hold fast that which is good." 1 Thes. 5:21. The rule of Masonry is: prove nothing but engage to hold fast every thing whether good or bad.. It will not permit its secrets to be proved or examined outside of the lodge, and it will not permit any man to enter into the lodge until he assumes such obligations as effectually to preclude or foreclose all proper trial or examination of them after he gets to know them. For to what purpose will you inquire into the morality of Masonic oaths after you have already taken them, or investigate the lawfulness of keeping Masonic secrets after you have sworn to keep them, or try the question whether it is lawful to obey Masonic authority after you have pledged yourself by oath to obey it. He who promises without any equivocation or mental reservation forever to conceal and never reveal any of the secrets that shall at any future period be communicated to him as such, promises, and if his promise is sincere, intends to renounce the exercise of his own judgment and conscience in regard to the lawfulness of keeping these secrets when they are revealed, or else promises and intends knowingly and willfully to disobey God in case these secrets are found to be such as he forbids to be kept. But such a promise, every Mason in entering the lodge, makes, and makes, too, under the solemnity of an oath. He who promises to obey the unknown commands of others, promises and, if his promise is sincere, really intends to render a blind obedience to the authority of a fellow man, or else intends knowingly and willfully to obey man rather than God, in case the commands of this fellowman should be contrary to the commands of God. But without such a promise, no man can become a Mason. Such is secretism. It demands that its principles and obligations shall be received without examination. And in this respect it is not only in conflict with the Word of God,

BUT IT IS CONTRARY TO REASON AND COMMON SENSE.

Since the world is so full of counterfeits and impostures, does not common sense tell every man to receive nothing without examination? Everywhere—in religious, in political, in commercial, and in social life, there are pretenders and impostors, and will not every man of reason and common sense be on his guard against deception? You would laugh at the credulity and stupidity of a man who would receive every person and everything as being in reality what they pretend to be. Such a person would soon become the dupe of every impostor and if he would exercise such folly in the commercial affairs of life would soon be robbed of all that he possesses. And the man who would ask and endeavor to persuade his fellowmen to accept of his pretentions or acknowledge his claims without examination, justly lays himself liable to suspicion. What would you think of the merchant who would lock up his goods in darkness and endeavor to persuade his customers not only to buy them without any examination, but also solemnly promise to be pleased with them and never reveal but forever conceal all defects that might be found in them, after they are obtained. Would you not say that he is a dishonest knave, and that those who would purchase anything from him on such terms, are fools and dupes. And so the man who asks you to pay out your money for a parcel of Masonic secrets, before you know what they are, and at the same time to promise, under oath, forever to conceal and never reveal them, is evidently endeavoring to impose a sham upon you, or to make a dupe or tool of you, for the accomplishment of some dark design or wicked purpose. And I say he impeaches your wisdom and insults your intelligence. Tell him that he must bring out his Masonic secrets and spread them on the counter, and let you examine them before you buy.

BUT THE SECRETS ARE OUT.

We have said this much on the supposition that the members of secret societies have been able to keep their secrets from the world, and that the works of darkness performed behind barred doors and watchful sentinels have never been brought to the light. We are, however, by no means prepared to grant this; because with respect to Masonry especially, it is not true. And indeed I believe the same thing may be affirmed of nearly, if not entirely all of the other secret societies. We have good ground to believe that the secrets of Masonry are all out. Yes, its modes of initiation, oaths, grips, passwords, silly rites, and profane ceremonies have all been faithfully revealed. Many Christian men, as Bernard, Finney, Ronayne and others, have been constrained by conscientious motives—by a deep sense of their duty to God and to their fellow-men, to come out from the lodge, to renounce its obligations, and to proclaim its secrets to the world. We are encompassed about with a great cloud of such witnesses, and their number is still on the increase. The members of the lodge indeed tell us that the testimony of these men in regard to the secrets of Masonry, is not to be received; but why is it not to be received?

THESE MEN ARE BOTH COMPETENT AND CREDITABLE WITNESSES.

In the first place, it will be granted, that these men are competent witnesses. They have confessedly been in all the degrees of the lodge concerning which they testify, and they speak from their own personal knowledge and experience. They speak that they do know, and testify what they have seen. They could not be deceived themselves in regard to the facts concerning which they testify; and if they have not declared the truth, it is because they have willfully and maliciously attempted to deceive others, by proclaiming to the world what they know to be false.

Is there then any reason to doubt the credibility of their testimony? We answer emphatically, No! We maintain that the testimony of these men is in the highest degree credible, not only because they are generally men of eminent piety and of acknowledged veracity; but also because they testify against themselves. They confess with sorrow and shame their own sin and guiltiness, in participating in the idolatrous worship, the wicked oaths and horrid profanity of the lodge. Moreover they have renounced Masonry at the hazard of reputation and life. They know that adhering Masons are bound by their Masonic obligations to persecute those who reveal their secrets. It is well known that in some instances they have ventured to take away their lives. But when they dare not attempt this, they feel bound to injure them in their property and reputation—"to oppose their interests, damage their business, and transfer their character after them wherever they may go."

Certainly then the testimony of these men is entitled to the highest degree of credit; for there is no conceivable motive that could have influenced them to attempt to deceive the public by misrepresenting the secrets of Masonry.

OBJECTIONS.

It is objected, however, that adhering Masons declare the revelations given by these seceding Masons, to be false. We answer: That is just what they must regard themselves as bound by oath to declare, on the supposition that these revelations are true. Their oath of secrecy which they still acknowledge as binding, requires them not only not to reveal, but forever to conceal the secrets of Masonry. And of course according to the requisitions of this oath they will declare these revelations to be false. But they reckon a good deal on the credulity, or rather gullibility of their fellow-men, when they suppose that they will receive their testimony in this case. What! Receive the testimony of a man who acknowledges himself under sworn obligation forever to conceal the truth! No sane person would do that. Masons have no right to expect us to believe them when they deny that these revelations are true; for what else can they do, so long as they adhere to their Masonic obligation. But certainly their testimony in this case is not to be received.

Again it is objected, that these men who have renounced the obligations of the lodge, are perjured persons and that their testimony is therefore not to be received. We reply, that if they are perjured, then they have truly revealed the secrets of Masonry. For how else could they violate the oath which requires them always to conceal and never reveal the secrets of Masonry, except by revealing these very secrets? If they have revealed something else, they have not violated their oath, and are not perjured perjured persons. This charge of perjury so often brought against seceding Masons, is an unintentional and therefore a most powerful testimony to the truth of their revelations.

BUT ARE SECEDING MASONS PERJURED PERSONS?

We have conceded this, merely for the sake of the argument; but not for a moment can we admit it to be true. We believe that Masonic oaths are sinful nullities, having no binding force whatever. The obligation of all oaths is limited to things lawful as well as possible. A man can no more place himself under a valid obligation to violate the law of God than to fly to the moon. The obligations of the divine law are supreme and indispensable and cannot be made void by any obligation that is voluntarily assumed or self-imposed. A man, for example, might assume or impose upon himself a valid obligation to marry a woman while she is free, but if he would assume such an obligation in relation to another man's wife, who does not see that his assumed obligation would be absolutely null and void; because it would then be in conflict with the previous and paramount obligation of the law of God? No greater absurdity can be imagined than to suppose that an immoral engagement can be rendered obligatory by calling upon God to witness it, and to punish the non-performance of it. According to this theory any man may at will set aside or make void the revealed authority of God —yea, ignorance, vice, and presumption may at any time enlist and interpose the authority of God in opposition to his own most sacred and unchanging laws. According to this theory, those forty men who bound themselves under a curse neither to eat nor drink till they had killed Paul, were really under obligation to do so, and the Apostle's conduct could hardly be justified when he escaped and so left them either to die by starvation or become perjured persons. Yea, according to this theory bandits and robbers, after they have leagued themselves together and nerved themselves for their intended deeds of cruelty by horrid curses and imprecations, are under obligation to proceed and fulfill their unhallowed designs.

It is true indeed that an oath which binds us to do anything not forbidden by the law of God, is sacredly to be observed, even though it should be to our temporal loss or detriment. Psalm 15:4. And what then? Are we to infer from this, that all oaths are to be sacredly observed and that it is perjury to violate any oath whatever, even though it be an oath which requires us to violate the immutable law of God? There could not be a more baleful and pernicious fallacy. It was this fallacy that led Herod, for his oath's sake to behead John the Baptist (Matt. 14:9): and the scribes and Pharisees in the days of our Lord, had fallen into the same error. They taught that a volantary vow or an assumed obligation was sufficient to annul or make void that immutable precept of the divine law which requires a man to honor his parents. "If a man shall say to his father or mother, it is corban, that is to say a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me, he shall be free. And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother." Mark 7:11, 12. But for such teaching our Lord denounced the scribes and Pharisees as hypocrites and blind guides who were making the Word of God of none effect by their traditions.

MASONIC OATHS ARE THEREFORE NULL AND VOID.

Admitting then that an oath to do wrong, is not obligatory—are Masonic oaths of this kind? Do they require the Mason to do wrong or to violate the law of God? This question we answer without any hesitation in the affirmative. The oath "forever to conceal" the unknown secrets of Masonry; to keep a brother Mason's criminal secrets, murder and treason not excepted; to warn a brother Mason of an approaching danger and to extricate him from his difficulties, whether right or wrong; the imprecation of mutilation and death upon one's self, for revealing the absurd secrets of Masonry or violating its wicked oaths, these and many other oaths in the Masonic system, are positively immoral. They are in direct conflict with the pre-existing and paramount obligations of the law of God. All such oaths are to be repented of but not kept. Moreover when the seceding Mason remembers that he was seduced into these wicked oaths by false assurances and that the same snare is spread for other fect, and farther, that these oaths are fraught with danger to liberty, justice, religion—yea, to both the temporal and eternal well-being of men, may he not justly conclude that he would be guilty of a grievous sin, both against God and man, if he did not come out and expose the whole Masonic system to the world. Such is the conclusion at which seceding Masons have arrived and which has led to the exposure of the whole Masonic system. And we aver that it is correct. The testimony of seceding Masons then, and not that of their Masonic opponents, whose greatest fear is publicity and whose greatest virtue is a silent tongue, is to be received. Hence to the question, What do you know about Masonry? our reply is, that we know all that Masons themselves know, and the only difference is, that we dare tell it.

Hyesville, O.

If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life, he will soon find himself left alone. A man should keep his friendship in constant repair.

AN APPEAL TO WOMAN.

BY A WISCONSIN WIFE.

A few noble women are devoting their time and talents to the work of helping their fellow-beings, but how many there are, who, if spoken to in regard to any of the great questions of the day will answer, "O! I do not meddle much with such things; I leave that for the men to do." They are too careless or to indolent to take any interest in anything outside of their own homes. But do these women ever consider what the consequence of such neglect of duty may be? Do you say, sister, that it does not concern you? That it is nothing to you whether there are liquor saloons and secret lodges in the land or not?

Is it nothing to you, mothers, whose little ones are playing about your knees, that those same innocent boys may sometime fill a drunkard's grave? Is it nothing to you, sisters, whose brothers are the light of your life, that they may sometime meet with the same fate? Is it nothing to you, young maiden, that he to whom you have given all your heart's best affection, is bound by horrible oaths to conceal even from you the foul secrets of the lodge of which he is a member? I tell you again that these questions concern you, and they concern the very life of our nation.

Let our children be trained to know the right and wrong of these questions and we need have little fear of the future. This work devolves chiefly on woman, and it is time for her to rouse herself and do her duty in this respect. It is time for her to see where her influence is given. It is of little matter whether that influence is small or great, it should all be on the right side.

Verily we shall not be held guiltless if we are found sleeping at our posts in time of danger. "Work, for the night is coming when no man can work."

PREACHERS' USE OF THE LODGE.—The editor of the Christian Advocate recently answered the question, "Is a Methodist minister justified in negotiating for his appointment?" in several negative statements, one of which is as follows:

He is not justified in asking individual members of churches to work for him. If he does it as a Christian minister he lowers himself; and if he undertakes to do it as a Mason or an Odd-fellow, working through members of his order, (a thing that we once did not believe had ever been done, but which we have found has been done), he pursues a course which shows him to be unworthy of the appointment he seeks.

We have known ministers of prominence in that church to assert that the lodge influence was used in the church to secure certain appointments, but had not before seen it so prominently admitted by any of the church Advocates. The statement of the editor is a candid and prudent one. There is another fact which, however, underlies all this business. Men join the Odd-fellows and Masons for the express purpose of securing the advantage the order can give them over the uniniated. If they are not to use it they had better save their money and time and character and stay out of the lodge. The advantages to be derived from connection with the lodge are all immeasurably below the use of any truly Christian mind and heart. A Christian minister should not use them and possess them, since others do use them, to the detriment of their fellows. He must not be a partaker in other men's sins.—Telescope.

Of all the acts of cowardice, the meanest is that which leads us to abandon a good cause because it is weak, and join a bad cause because it is strong. The smitten deer is sure to be avoided by the herd; it is the instinct of the brute; but, in the higher law, which reigns in the breast of mankind and womankind, you never saw the smitten son abandoned by the mother. I have, in the great questions of the day, educational and religious, in Scotland and in Ireland, cast in my lot with the minority, which, in due season, became the majority; and when I left any cause, it was because it had waxed strong, and did not need my poor aid. We have to see to it that, in the struggle of life, we stand by right and not by might, being sure that, in the end, the right shall have the might.—Pres. McCosh.

Strange to say that many appear to be attracted by what is hidden. The association which has mysterious signs and meaningless words, to the uninitiated, is sure of patrons, because it appeals to a natural bent of the spirit.—Midland.

BROTHER REFORMERS.

We are workers in one vineyard;
Some are strong and some are weak:
But the smiling of the vintage
Is the common joy we seek.
Some must trail the vine and prune it,
Some must stoop to dress the mould,
But the few can pluck the clusters,
In the autumn's haze and gold.

We are builders, and the temple
Rises slowly day by day;
Some must lay the polished corners
Some the brick of heavy clay,
Only one can place the cap-stone
On the summit grand and high,
While the shout of "Grace unto it,"
Rises to the vaulted sky.

We are fighting in the battle,
But we cannot all command;
Most of us must march at orders,
Forward like a soldier band.
Fame is not the hero's blessing,
But the sense of duty done,
Life and treasure all are ventured
Ere the victory is won.

Golden prizes lie before us,
And the race is open now;
Not the swift alone are victors,
Wearing crowns upon their brow,
For the lame and halt ones running
God hath promised each a gaol;
O my poor and sorrowing brother,
Thou shalt be a victor soul!

Let the blessed kingdom hasten,
When the will of God shall be,
Evermore the law and pleasure
Of his people glad and free;
Would we strive to be the greatest,
Let us then be servants all;
God has crowns and jewels waiting,
For the lowly and the small.

MASONIC RELIGION.

It is sometimes denied that Freemasonry claims to be a religious institution, and that its teaching is that its members simply by being Masons, and without reference to Christ, are saved. The Sunday Mercury, of this city, some time ago defended Masonry against alleged charges brought against it, had these words: "It may truthfully be said that Masonry is, and has always been, as a church, or a religious system, if it may so be considered, wholly free from the bigotry, the intolerance, and the active propagandism which have so disgracefully marred the whole history of Christianity from its inception to the present hour." Again: "It will outlive hereafter as heretofore, all assaults, and its members will here do their beneficent work, quietly and secretly, until the great Grand Master of the Order calls them to a lodge in that 'house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.'" That the "lodge" here referred to may be reached without Christ is taught in these words: "The confession of Christ as a Saviour—the promised Messiah—is made by the Christian church a fundamental condition of salvation. But is there any authority for this outside of the New Testament? It may very properly be made a condition of admission into the Christian church; but who is to determine that it is universal and absolute as a condition of reconciliation to God and admission into heaven? They who undertake to give that doctrine, or any other, so awful a scope and effect must have much more presumption than piety, and are assuming a most terrible responsibility." This is good Masonic authority. He who thus wrote knows what Masonry is, and what it claims to do. Its teaching is, its fundamental principle is, that Masons in every nation on the earth go to the Grand Lodge above at their death. And they are thus saved without reference to Christ or his atonement. These charges against Freemasonry cannot be successfully denied. The very things charged are admitted and claimed by the highest Masonic authority. The burial service that is read at the Mason's grave assumes that these things are true. Yet in the face of these facts there are professedly Christian men, and even ministers of the Gospel, who are Masons, and who sustain and even defend this badly disguised infidelity and heathenism!—Christian Instructor.

Scan very closely the action which demands concealment. The very demand savors of wrong, and a double care should be exercised in such a case, lest it be a wile of the devil.

A GREAT SPEECH IN THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT.

FROM A SPEECH BY HON. EDWARD BLAKE, MARCH 17, 1884, AGAINST THE BILL FOR THE INCORPORATION OF THE ORANGE LODGE.

"But it is not only upon this ground that I personally am opposed to this Act of incorporation. I entertain views on the point to which I am about to address myself which, I dare say, are shared only by a small minority in this House, but none the less do I entertain them. I am OPPOSED TO STATE RECOGNITION OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

I do not care how good their purposes or what their objects may be; I believe it is a mistake to lay down the principle that any secret society should be recognized by the State. I think secret, oath-bound societies are, so far as that point may be brought fairly into question in this case—though I agree that we are to decide it upon our own notions of what is right— I say that such societies are contrary to the spirit of English law as to recognized societies. I know they are contrary to the Quebec criminal law. Now the Quebec criminal law is not to be modified by a private bill in this House. He have power to modify, or repeal or to amend it: and an honorable gentleman has before us a bill for its amenement, upon which I hope to have the opportunity if it comes to a second reading, of pointing out what I understand to be the true principles of action in cases of that description; but I say that the Province of Quebec cannot complain if we propose to amend or modify any portion of the criminal law, simply because that portion of the law is exclusively Quebec law at this moment; for we alone have the power—they have not the power to deal with it. But the way to deal with the criminal law is to amend or repeal it by a general Act; and having amended or repealed it to such an extent, if you think fit, as will make this a legal society, as would make it legal to have such a society in the country, then to proceed to pass your private bill authorizing that corporate entity to be created which is no longer contrary to the law of the land. It seems to me to be that we should repeal a general criminal law pro tanto by the creation of a private corporation; because nobody can doubt that this private bill by which we set up the Orange Society, by which we allow it to continue to extend the number of its lodges and so on ; by which we give it incorporation and State recognition; by which we give it power to hold property—nobody can doubt, I say, that it comes within the criminal law of Quebec. Now that is no way to escape from the operation of the criminal law. A measure might be brought down, as one was brought down in the other chamber last session, dealing with the criminal law on the general principles on which it is thought that it should be dealt with. I still adhere to the view which I have expressed in this House on previous occasions, that unless under the greatest pressure of obvious necessity we should pass common laws for all parts of the Dominion, in respect to those common interests with which we are charged. I conceive it to be an anomaly—perhaps justified in special circumstances, and only to be justified by special and obvious circumstances —that there should be one criminal law for one part of the Dominion and another criminal law for another part; and therefore I think it is fitting that a law should be brought down on the subject of secret societies, making such portions of the Quebec law as it may be deemed fit to retain on the statute book general, and modifying, in the sense which I shall take another opportunity of pointing out, such parts as are not deemed fit to be retained. But it is putting the cart before the horse to legalize by a private bill and vote out of the operation of the subsisting criminal law one institution. Law should be amended first on general principles, and then if you can find that the institution is one which you can legally incorporate, you may proceed to give it incorporation. Now, as I have said, I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies which are, as this professes to be, benevolent—secret societies which do not meddle at all with politcal topics—secret societies whose real action so far as one of the public can know, is not inconsistent with, and does not go beyond the avowed purposes of their association. But I believe the TENDENCY OF SECRECY ITSELF TO BE INJURIOUS.

UNPRECEDENTED AND CERTAINLY VERY INCONVENIENT

I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose. That is my general proposition with reference to secret, oath-bound societies, a point on which, I dare say, as I said before, I am in a small minority; for I suppose the vast bulk of at least the Protestant members of this House belong to one or other of those societies; and I do not wish to be understood as saying that these mischievous tendencies are carried out in many of those societies, the operations of which so far as I know, are beneficial. But these things are to be dealt with on general principles; and I maintain that secrecy is in itself a bad thing; and if societies are beneficial they are beneficial in spite of and not because of this element of secrecy. Now there are of course three attitudes which the State can take towards these societies, that is suppression, recognition and neutrality. And I maintain that unless a society be one for an obviously bad purpose, in this age and under our circumstances, the only course to take is not to suppress, not to recognize it, but to occupy a neutral position with reference to it: not to interfere one way or the other, not to give State recognition, not to attempt—what is in most cases a fruitless attempt—suppression.

Those who talk of the benefits of secret societies have, I think, read the history of early and of later periods, and of very late periods especially, on the continent, in the United Kingdom and in the United States, after a fashion in which I have not read it. I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries is due to secret societies; and I think that we who hail from one or other of the quarters of the United Kingdom we who are doubly interested in the peace, prosperity and contentment of each one of the three United Kingdoms, must have marked from early days what a baneful influence secret societies have had upon that part of the United Kingdom which unfortunately has given so much cause for trouble and humiliation and difficulty to the Parliament of England, and to the English people throughout the world. When you remember the Ribbon Society, the Phœnix Socie,y, the Fenian Society, all the other societies of this class to which I have referred, you will see very easily what immense possibilities of evil there are in the attribute of secrecy. Now sir, this is a view which is shared by many who have thought on this subject. I met the other day in a book which Mr. A. M. Sullivan has not long since written, an observation which struck me as being so pregnant that I shall trouble the House with it. He says:

"I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization, and were often on the whole, more perilous to society than open tyranny."

That is the statement of a very eminent man who was actively engaged in an agitation for what he believes and what many of us believe would be the amelioration of the condition of the Irish people. He saw what an important agency these societies would be; but he saw also from a sad personal experience and from his own observation, what evil and demoralizing tendencies they have.

THE DIFFICULTY AS TO STATE RECOGNITION is this—it is essential; you cannot get rid of it; it is in the circumstance that the society is secret—you cannot determine how far, being secret, it may depart from its professed and avowed objects; how far, being secret, it may go, in what direction it may travel; how far, being ostensibly a religious and benevolent, it may become a political society and not benevolent or religious; how far, being loyal, it may go in the opposite direction, as we know professedly loyal societies have gone in days gone by—how far this may be the case you cannot determine; and therefore I say that State recognition ought not to be given to secret, oath-bound societies. You cannot tell what sort of tyranny may not be exercised by them. It is in the nature of these societies to become tyrannical and despotic. Openness and public discussion are the great guarantees of order, freedom, fairness and moderation. It is in private gatherings of men all of one turn of thought, all of one opinion, that bitterness and misrepresentation and malignity revel and hold high carnival. It is just there that you are sure to have the very worst of that description of difficulty which exists too commonly even in all our public life, and which is tempered only in so far as our discussions are open, in the presence of the world and of men of different opinions. It may be that in oppressed countries, despotically governed, secret societies are

A MELANCHOLY NECESSITY.

It is possible. I do not admit it, but it may be so. It may be the only recourse of those countries which are aspiring to freedom. But that is not the condition of the people of this country. There is nothing here that we want; there is no amelioration of our condition that we desire which we are not free to propose in public gathering, upon which we are not free to engage in public discussion. If we believe that those of a particular creed amongst us entertain sentiments not merely erroneous in point of dogmatic religion (which has nothing to do with the question), but sentiments hostile to the Constitution, or dangerous to social order, we have a right to say so, a right to resist them, a right to challenge their opinions, and a right to challenge them to express their opinions. But we have no right, because we have no necessity, to engage for these purposes in secret societies, which, as I have indicated, have often been the fruitful mothers of malignity, misrepresentation and bigotry. The bill, however, goes much further than simply giving the right to hold property. As I have said, it gives State recognition; it gives a corporate existance. For this purpose it invokes the Interpretation Act; and the last clause gives this society power to carry on its work."

—The world is gradually realizing what Christians have always known—that "godliness is profitable" even in a commercial sense, which is the lowest favorable view. The Rev. George Hood presents this truth by referring to the trade of the United States with the Micronesian and adjacent islands. It seems that the first missionaries went to these islands in 1852, and in 1879 business was carried on which has yielded profit amounting to nearly $700,000. The Board during that year appropriated for that mission $16,795. Or, in other words, missions paid out one dollar, and commerce in trade by the missions received back $40.75.—Ex.

—The Protestants of Great Britain last year gave $5,898,280 for foreign missions, of which sum the Church of England gave about one-half. The British Roman Catholics, same year, gave $57,595, not quite one-hundredth part as much.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

NOTICE.

There will be a meeting of the Wisconsin State Central Committee at Baraboo, on the 30th day of April, inst., to appoint delegates to the National Convention of the American party to be held in Chicago in June next.

By order of the Committee.

MASONRY, THE G. A. R. AND THE ANTI-MASONS.

BLACKMORE, Iowa.

Masonry is putting forth extraordinary efforts by organizing Grand Army posts, and they are getting in many that hate Masonry, and yet they are hood-winked, led into G. A. R. post to the tune of Masonry. This is undoubtedly an electioneering trick to cheat us out of all the Anti votes they can, which I fear will be a good many. When the weather gets settled I hope I will be well enough to scatter tracts, solicit subscribers, etc. I feel that we ought to be up and doing; '84 is here. W. H. LAYTON.

AMERICAN CLUBS will be the work of organization from now till fall. Blanks can be had of E. D. Bailey at the office of The American, Washington, D. C. Wherever there is an American voter let him gain the co-operation of another voter who may be now expecting to throw away his ballot on one of the old parties.

—Hon. S. C. Pomeroy was expected in Chicago last week on private business, and it was hoped that arrangements might be made for the National American Convention. He was for some reason delayed, but we hope to welcome him here soon.

—The American has had unexpected and provoking delays. Bro. Bailey writes that the first number will arise, like the welcome rays of a spring morning, on our political horizon this week. Thousands will be reading it with this number of the Cynosure, which hails the new morning star of a better day for American politics.

—The difficulty in issuing the new paper was with the printers. The first number would have been out on the first of the month had not this delay occurred. The additional annoyance that might have occurred had not the reform a good building in Washington may be imagined. The office of the American is in the N. C. A. building, No. 215 4½ St., N. W. Washington.

—The delegates elected at the political meeting in connection with the Battle Creek convention, to attend the National Convention in this city were: C. C. Foote, Detroit; E. Z. Derbyshire, Ypsilanti; H. A. Day, Parma; Timothy Hudson, Kalamazoo; Dr. M. Veenboor, Grand Rapids; W. H. Ross, Williamston; M. Wilcox, Corunna; W. M. Beeden, Hadley; E. Jarvis, Unionville; J. L. Bush, Whitehall; J. B. Crall, Berrien; S. P. Poole, Belle vue; Geo. Swanson, Bedford. The following State Central Committee was also elected: W. H. Ross, H. A. Day, O. H. Johnson, James Brandt, H. F. Buffham, J. L. Stratton, J. Walter.

CHRISTIANS IN POLITICS.

We hear the rumbling of the storm in the distance. Already the nominating conventions are called; already the great leaders are marshalling their forces for the coming conflict—the campaign of 1884. We remember standing on the heights opposite to Fredericksburg, and seeing three miles of a battle line, one hundred thousand men on each side engaged in deadly conflict. It was a thrilling sight. But it is only as a drop in the bucket to the conflict now in course of preparation. There were men and horses and swords and guns, physical forces, all. But now we see 50,000,000 people going into a conflict where every kind of force will be called into the lists, and all these forces exerted to their utmost power. It will not be a long time, but it will be a ubiquitous battle,—it will rage by the fireside, in the churchyards, in the streets, lanes of cities and villages and in every cornfield. It will not be a firing at long range, but a hand to hand fight where men lock and tussle,—not a wrestling of flesh and blood alone, but a conflict where the spirits of men mingle in dire confusion and wrestle with terrible energy.

There will be mind and money, principle and policy, conscience and corruption, patriotism and partyism on both sides in apparent confusion; and yet it will not be without meaning. In the midst of all this apparently meaningless madness there will be the march of progress. As you watch the waves of the sea in a gale dashing hither and yon, you would not suspect that there is an ocean current moving steadily forward while the waves keep the water from becoming stagnant. So although to an outsider there may not be much meaning in a party conflict, yet it is by the shaking up and sharp scrutinizing of men and parties that we are guarded from corruption, while the deep currents of national sentiment are moving steadily on toward a pure and juster political life. Taxation without representation went down in the Revolution. The right of search on the high seas went down in 1812. Slavery and secession went down in 1865. And by the same march of progress schools, asylums, are being fostered, intemperance and polygamy are being doomed, the Indian is being civilized and there is a general upward tendency. The strange part of it all is, that in some mysterious way progress is developed out of these political conflicts.

What is the silent conservative influence that acts as the ballast to the ship of state in all these storms? No doubt it is Christianity. The nation has a conscience, and it obeys its conscience as the ship obeys its rudder. Beneath all this froth and foam of party prejudice there is in the heart of Christian America a love of right and justice to which politicians dare not do violence. The men who tampered with credit mobilier, with back-salary grab, went down with them. Demagogues may flourish for a time, but they are sure to go down when people get in earnest—for the love of right and justice is stronger than the love of men or parties.

If this view is correct the Christian citizen has a great responsibility. The partisan is the force that drives the machinery of politics, but the Christian voter is the hand that guides the helm. It is the duty of the Christian man to be watchful, to be faithful to discern the right and firmly to maintain it.

And he must not be too narrow in his view of politics. Within certain limits the issues of an election are confined to men, but when a national campaign begins, men are of but little importance. Candidates are only standard bearers, platforms are only battle cries. We must look at the issues at stake in their historical bearings. We must view parties in reference to their mass and make up. No man however good is able to turn the momentum of a bad party. No man is bad enough to resist the ocean current of progress that moves a party in favor of the right. The Christian man ought to associate with the men who by a record of years have shown the highest average of integrity and devotion to the right. If all the Christians of this country will act on this principle, they will naturally gravitate together. They will become the great conservative element in American politics. If they are narrow and local in their views, they will divide their energies and array themselves against each other. Let them look up to God and look away to the future and fix their eyes on the great issues that affect the well-being of the whole country, and then stand firmly by their honest convictions, until the country comes to them. A few such men are the salt of their country.—Midland.

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.—The Republican party of Kansas may as well make up its mind that it has got to fight whisky, and fight it to the end. Whisky has allied itself to the Democratic party. Whisky will not permit any Republican to entertain moderate ideas. It is going to fight Republicans because they are Republicans, just as it fought such well-known anti-prohibitionists as F. P. Martin, L. Rochat, Thomas L. McCormick, E. S. Willis, H. J. Chambers, B. F. Hudson, S. H. Scholes and others, yesterday. As the Times says, the saloon men themselves dragged this question into the election at Leavenworth as well as Atchison. Nobody else raised it. The liquor interest has, however, allied itself fully with the Democratic party, and whatever Republicans have thought, or howsoever they have acted heretofore, they have got to fight it. And the saloon-keepers will discover, when this line is drawn, as the Times says, that "water has the most friends."—Atchison Champion.

MINNESOTA.

Shall we have a lecturer in Minnesota for the year to come? The friends throughout the State will have an opportunity to answer this question in the next few days. We are sending subscription blanks to all the subscribers of the Cynosure and friends of the cause, so far as we know, in the State. Any seeing this notice and desiring to help, who do not receive one of these blanks, will receive one by sending their address upon postal card to the undersigned. A prompt and liberal response from all the friends will enable the officers of the State Association to put an able man in the lecture field right away. Friends, what say you? Shall we have a lecturer?

R. J. Williams, State Agent.

Winnebago City, Minn.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Battle Creek, Mich., April 11, 1884.

On Tuesday A. M. I left Chicago in company with Judge Farwell for Oregon, Illinois. Our object was to secure definite action of some kind in the matter of the J. R. Wright bequest. At Aurora we were joined by Mr. Fowler, attorney for Edward Wright, and reached Oregon about three o'clock P. M. Repairing to the office of Mr. Sears, the conference was opened and continued until 9 P. M., when it seemed probable that results satisfactory to all the parties could be reached. Parties whose presence was necessary to a final settlement were summoned by dispatch and the conference opened on the morning of the 9th. Every point was carefully gone over again and reduced to writing, and finally signed by all parties in interest or their legal representatives, and the agreement filed for record with the Clerk of the Court about 4 o'clock P. M. By this arrangement what promised at one time to be a long, unpleasant suit in law was avoided, and good feeling among neighbors maintained.

It was too late for me to reach my appointment here and so I was compelled to forego the pleasure of being at the opening meeting. Bro. Starry was present and the cause did not seriously suffer. The brethren from Jackson came in strong force and delegates from other neighborhoods swelled the number. When Bro. Blanchard and I reached here at 2:30 P. M., the brethren at the depot to meet us showed some feeling of anxiety, but no signs of backing down. The audience was small, but a judicious distribution of 1,500 bills brought out a fair audience to hear Pres. C. A. Blanchard in the evening, to whom he spoke with his wonted freedom and happy effect. He left on the midnight train bearing the benedictions of the faithful to whom he is greatly endeared.

Kalamazoo Depot, 11 P. M.—This morning's session was largely devoted to a discussion of the second plank in the platform of the American party and the general political outlook. Battle Creek is a rallying and radiating center of the Seventh-day Adventists. They had by some means received the impression that it was the purpose of the American party to secure power to enforce the observance of one day as Sabbath, and that as a majority were favorable to the first rather than the seventh day of the week, they would be ostracised and persecuted if they maintained a conscience void of offence toward God. They feared also a union of church and state. These features of our movement were freely discussed with the best of feeling on both sides, and a substantial agreement reached.

It occurred in this, as in many other instances, that when brethren supposing that they differed widely came to know each other's views, they found they were really very nearly of the same mind. The effect was very happy on subsequent meetings and will without doubt be very hopeful in future.

The brethren were kind enough to give me so much of the afternoon as could be spared from necessary business, and the attendance was fully as good as the speech. The evening was given up to work on the third degree of Masonry by Bro. S. E. Starry, with introductory remarks by Bro. Day. The introduction was a clear, concise showing of the connection between ancient and modern idolatry, with a stirring appeal and faithful warning. The hall was well filled, and when I left at 8:30, "Dr. Love" was receiving the third degree in Masonry in due and ancient form.

Very much effective work was done in an excellent spirit, which will be reported by the secretary in due time and form for publication. It was an excellent convention, with an increasing interest to and through the closing session. I left early in the hope of meeting Bro. T. Hudson here, in which I am disappointed by reason of his absence. I am to meet Bro. Starry on a train due here at 1 A. M. to-morrow, and with him to go to Chicago, hoping to do some work in Northern Illinois. Let any who want lectures or degree work write me at once at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

J. P. Stoddard.

—As the Cynosure forms go to press, Bro. Starry is preparing for degree work in Carpenter Hall. A good audience and a good time is expected, as plenty of local assistance is promised.

LODGES AND LODGES.

Menomonie, Wis.

Dear Cynosure:—We cannot think it strange if our Dunn county News should, Athenian like, "spend its time in nothing else but to tell or to hear some new thing;" so we need not be surprised that in its issue of February 23d it should give us the following, under the head of—

"A new society.

"Last Wednesday evening, Supreme Deputy ——, of this city, organized, at the United Workmen's Hall, a lodge of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, a society having for its object: first, the insurance of the lives of its members; and second, social good-fellowship. The following officers were elected and installed: Past Protector, Protector ——, Vice Protector (Mrs. ——), Chaplain (Mrs. ——), Secretary (Mrs. ——), Financial Secretary, Treasurer ——, Guide, Guardian (Mrs. ——), Sentinel. Twenty-four charter members were enrolled, and after transacting routine business, an adjournment was taken to Thursday evening, February 28th, when an opportunity will be afforded others to also join as charter members and get the benefit of the reduced membership fee of $3. The large representation of ladies present was taken as a significant and pleasing feature of the occasion, auguring well for the success of the society."

Now about this "Supreme Deputy." The question arises, Who deputized this important personage to organize and add another to the long list of secret societies already existing? Surely it must have been some higher secret society that desired, or was entirely willing to have this new society formed; or possibly some "Grand" Lodge, of which "old block" this is the "chip." From the fact that the new society was organized in the United Workmen's Hall, it might naturally be inferred that the new germ is an offshoot of the A. O. U. W. But we cannot say, as the "Supreme Deputy" passes for a Mason. However, "The old folks at home" are presumed to give a warm welcome to all the children and grand-children that spring up and settle around them, at the same time claiming and receiving due respect from the remotest members of the great household. Masonry makes no protest to this recent innovation.

But again, this "Supreme Deputy" stands (properly enough) at the head of the Official Board as Past Protector. As this is a new society, the query arises, Of what, or of whom, has he been the Protector in the past? We happen to know that for the last dozen or fifteen years at least, he has been the natural and legal protector of the "Lady of Honor" who now sits in the exalted position of "Vice Protector." The Knight with whom she is associated as Protector of this honorable body, is the natural and legal protector of her who is Chaplain of this "worshiping (?) assembly." The Guide being the liege lord of the Secretary, may see to it that her minutes are all correct. The Guardian, being the wife of the Financial Secretary, may take care not to mistake for him the young gentleman who is the Treasurer of this monied corporation, and both together can see that he does not defalcate, or misappropriate the funds. As for the Sentinel, the name of his better half does not appear, and whether she was present with the "large representation of ladies" does not transpire. Probably the offices were filled without her. But why in the world did not the inventive genius of the concern create one more place or two, so that nothing in this league for "social good-fellowship" should separate husband and wife? As for the lone Treasurer, we are not advised as to whether he is a married man; but it seems that he was put in charge of the snug little sum of $72.00 on the start, and if a dozen more of our citizens desiring to become "Knights and Ladies of Honor" were present at the next meeting, the sum was swollen to more than a round $100.00. A pretty good financial underpinning surely! But when it comes to the life insurance, then goes $20 or $30 annually, according to amounts carried, the dues and assessments from time to time; and then when a Knight or a Lady becomes poor, falls into decay and fails to pay up for a while, then it will be seen that they "have burnt a house to roast a pig," as the Chinaman says, and some one else, very likely, has got the pig.

Doubtless there will be "social good-fellowship," but does it require a secret society with Protectors and Guardians, Secretaries, Sentinel and Guide, to produce this article? Knights and Ladies of Honor! "With malice toward none, and charity for all," we would kindly ask, in the language of Him who in secret said nothing, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" Having drank the good "old wine" of Christian fellowship and "social good-fellowship" in the republican simplicity of fellow-citizens and kindred spirits, we have no desire for this "new" secret invention, for we say "the old is better."

Dear Cynosure, it may be that the above described society is not new to you. If not, may be you can instruct and entertain your readers with an expose of its imposing ritual.

Since commencing this article we learn that a Ladies' Society auxiliary to the G. A. R. has been organized. When the tree spreads out its branches far enough, and they get full and heavy enough with fruit, there will, we trust, be a general breakdown. In God's good time it shall be "rooted up." Labor in this direction shall not be "in vain in the Lord."

A LAMENT FOR THE CHURCHES.

Sabetha, Kans.

Dear Bro.:—How often have I been led to exclaim with the old prophet, "O that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears," that I might weep day and night over the wickedness of the American people. When I look all over our situation and see the abominations practiced in these United States I tremble for the church and nation when I remember that God is just. Again I am led to exclaim, How long will it be to the end of these abominations!

In the first place the light of very many of our churches has and is becoming darkness, and it seems to be the blind leading the blind, and we as a people are surely nearing the ditch. Our prophets are prophesying falsely, our priests (that is, a great many of them), are divining for money and the people love to have it so, but what will we do in the end thereof? This will come to an end, for Christ says that every plant that my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up; and I ask, is God the planter of all these secret orders? No enlightened mind dare say he is. Then it follows they must all be rooted up. Here commences the tug of war between the true worshipers of Christ and the worshipers of Baal at its secret altars. Can we or shall we doubt which will come off victorious? Although the way may look dark to poor finite beings, "God is his own interpreter, and he will make it plain." Although the pulpit and the press of this country seem to be almost entirely closed against the promulgators of God's truth on the subject of this soul-destroying Baal worship, let God's children take courage. The Lord reigneth; let the earth be glad: he can and will bring order out of all this confusion. Just think, that in all this boasted land of liberty and Christianity, over one half of the churches are closed against the ministers of Christ who preach the Gospel of Christ against Baal worship, and nine-tenths of the professed ministers of Christ dare not open their mouths against Baal worship and heathen burials in this Christian country; their mouths padlocked in favor of Baal; dumb dogs that dare not bark at these heathen altars that are being set up all over. If they cannot see the sword coming they must be blind. Our courts have in a great measure become a farce. The religious organizations and the kingdom of Satan have joined hand in hand against the Lord and his Christ, yet they shall not go unpunished, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

John Thompson.

BOGUS MINISTERS AND DOCTORS.

Every one who believes the Gospel has a right from the great King and Head of the church to preach it. "Let him that heareth say, Come." Who, then, will dare to forbid anyone to preach that Gospel who has been called to do so by the Spirit of God?

But there is an orderly way. The Spirit is not the author of confusion. Many men who have learned to serve the devil and worship his Satanic agents, the demons in secret lodge, come into Christian churches and "preach Christ and him crucified" as the only Saviour. But "until the unclean spirit is cast out of them," Christ's Spirit forbids their preaching. But let a minister preach as Paul did at Athens, against demon worship, and he will be speedily silenced, as the writer has been, in all churches, and be left to perish in his old age. Why preach Christ, yet not follow him?

We are glad to see from the Midland, St. Louis, Mo., and from the Christian Cynosure, that there are between three and four thousand Highlanders who are contemplating building a church in Chicago.

About ten years ago a common school teacher in London, Ontario, from the highlands of Scotland, fell out with his church, the Baptist. He was never a student at any college or university; had never studied theology or medicine as a regular student, nor ever was licensed as a preacher or medical practitioner by any board capable of conferring such right in any orderly way. Strange to say, however, that Baptist who had fallen out of membership with his church and with all others, began to preach the Gospel in Gaelic and in English in the Presbyterian churches. He became very popular. He also practiced medicine as he went preaching. He donned the titles of Rev. and Dr., and so went on prospering and to prosper, in his self-constituted assumption.

If the clergy winked at the irregularity, the medicals would not stand it. A visit from Dr. Moore one day to see the quacks diploma dispelled the bubble. The huge marble slab bearing the name and title had to be removed from his door else he must stand a prosecution for practicing without a license.

Death kindly put an end to the trials of an amiable wife, whom all who knew her respected, loved and admired. The quack doctor and vender of other's sermons and popular lectures left London to parts unknown. The Dr. (?) is himself again and ready for employment wherever he may be called. These are often the men who, as Byron says of dead "carcasses, swim by their own rottenness." If this is the Lord's will, "So mote it be." "Amen." Their end shall come quickly. When a church boasts of such a man as its moderator, it looks like the beginning of the end for that church.

Observer.

PITH AND POINT.

WELCOME, THRICE WELCOME, TO A NEW-FOUND FRIEND.

I want the Cynosure to welcome into the ranks of anti-secretists Rev. F. H. Gates, pastor of the Baptist church at Smethport, Pa. In the Baptist Visitor, edited and owned by him (April No.), he says: "We wish to place ourselves on record as opposed to everything that exalteth itself above Jesus Christ, and distinctly avow our intention to fight against every principle and every measure that is inconsistent with the Gospel, out of harmony with the Bible, and contrary to the will of God. "If they speak not according to these, it is because there is no light in them." We shall not fight men, but things, and the weapon with which we fight will be the sword of God's mouth. And the spirit in which we do it will be the Spirit that inspired Martin Luther to say when he stood before the Diet of Worms, "Here I stand. I can do no otherwise. God help me. Amen." I would to God all ministers in the U. B. church did likewise. May God help the dear brother to be "instant in season."—J. C. Young, Custer City.

A LEFT-HANDED COMPLIMENT.

While our town has many strong adherents to Masonry, it has a number of staunch opposers, who have labored valiantly in the good cause, sparing neither time nor money. During March there was a revival in progress, conducted by Rev. Woods, a Baptist minister, and Geo. Whitman, the M. E. supply. On Saturday night the 8th of March Rev. Whitman preached, and the service was attended by a number of Masons, who are not in the habit of going to church and who pronounced it a fine sermon. At the close of the meeting the Masons, accompanied by the preacher, went to the lodge room where he was duly initiated into the mysteries of Masonry. Although the State Convention met at this place October last and much good was accomplished, still there are some dark corners of ignorance unreached. Wishing you much success with your paper, I remain,—B. A. R., Oakland City, Ind.

WOULD SELL HIMSELF CHEAP.

At the close of a meeting at Sister Kelly's in this county, held by Rev. J. S. Trask, by request of Bro. G. W. Whitlock, a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and Bro. John Julian a Methodist minister, another meeting was appointed for Tuesday night about three miles distant, said brethren to make all necessary arrangements. But afterward, Bro. J. Julian being informed by J. M. Anthony that Rev. J. S. Trask was an Anti mason, refused to assist in the preparation for said meeting, and said he would not hear him preach; and upon being asked if he was a Mason he answered that he was. He was then told by J. M. Anthony that Masonry was no longer a secret, that it was published and that J. S. Trask could give the signs and grips. This he (Julian) denied, and said were he burning at the stake that he would tell anything rather than the truth, and after being told that that would disqualify him for any position, either in the civil or religious government, he remarked that he would be burnt at the stake rather than divulge the secrets of Masonry. —J.M. Anthony, Brushy Creek, Cross Co., Ark.

A WORD TO THE LEVER.

The growing dissensions in the Prohibition Home Protection party, arising out of the time and place of holding the National Convention, will still be evidenced by your persistent ignoring of the American Convention held in Washington City, Feb. 20th to 22d, made up of Christian men and women as strongly pledged to prohibition as any men and women in this country. I have carefully looked over the Lever for the numbers Feb. 27th, March 6th and 13th, and I cannot find a single paragraph referring to the action of this honorable and consistent body of men. Now, why is this? It is true that they advocate other measures that are for the time being unpopular, but will in the near future press themselves upon the attention of the American people, and may be of importance in the settlement of this question of prohibition; for secretism, although allied to the cause of temperance, is really, so far as my observation goes, the relentless foe of prohibition.—D. W. Gilfillan, Trempeleau, Wis.

OUT OF THE LODGE AND READY FOR CHRIST'S COMING.

I have noticed recently much said on the second coming of Christ, and I believe also in it. We read in Rev. 7: 1–3: "And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the winds should not blow on the earth nor on the sea nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east having the seal of the living God; and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads." To me the seal in the forehead is as plain as the witness of the Spirit of God. I realize this blessing sometimes in my meditations, and sometimes while at family worship, and sometimes at secret prayer. After the Lord converted my soul God showed me the sin of Masonry and my duty to expose the secrets of the same, which duty I complied with. I thank God since that time I remember of few days when I have not at some time realized the Spirit of God with me. Ihave lived in this vicinity for about twenty-five years. I do not remember of ever being called a liar or called dishonest until I helped Edmond Ronayne expose Masonry here at this place. Since then I have been compared to things that it would be unfit for Christians to talk about, and these insults all came from the professed followers of Christ, some of them Masons and others friendly to their cause. I thank God for what I enjoy. I feel thankfu. he has ever kept me through the trials of this life.—F. M Wilson, Zanesville, Ind.

THE SERGEANT MASON CASE.

J. W. Phelps, in his answer to Mr. Moffatt, concerning Sergeant Mason; concerning his insolence, his presumption to appear before the American people as a worthy "curiosity;" concerning the insult of the act to the government, to law and order; this was timely and well directed. But, to get a strike at prohibition, it seems to us he went a great deal—yes, far out of his way. Bro. Phelps says: "Nor have I any faith in the efficacy of a reform movement that turns away from the frowning battlements of the lodge, a great public evil, and directs its force against personal bad habits." Also in closing his letter: "Nor will they be spending their time over personal vices while the life of the Republic stands in imminent peril." These statements certainly need qualifying. 1. Does any one expect public virtue without, first, having personal virtue? 1. Does any one expect the morals of rulers to be better, if as good, as they were when at home? 3. Is not the moral and religious standard of all rulers and governments, exactly in proportion to that of the current atmosphere among the subjects? 4. Does any one look on a government as other than a home on a large scale?—J. C. Schoenberger, Chicago.

Bible Lessons.

LESSON IV.—April 27, 1884.—Abstinence for the Sake of Others. 1 Cor. 8: 1-13.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth. 1 Cor. 8: 13.

Self-Denial for the Sake of Others. Vs. 7, 9–13. The Apostle comes now to apply the principle laid down in the first part of our lesson. He admits that the strong brethren at Corinth might safely eat those meats if they had to consider only themselves. But here are other facts which claim their attention.

1. We live in a world of darkness and danger. "There is not in every man that knowledge." V. 7. There were some who were not yet able to cast wholly aside the cords of superstition by which they had been bound. In the minds of some believers perhaps, in the mind of the great mass of heathens certainly, there was the belief in the existence of the powers worshiped in the idolatrous rites, and when they partook of these meats they could not, or would not, cast aside their old superstitions. For such to eat of them was therefore sinful, because they did it as an act of worship. And so we are reminded that we are always surrounded by those whose knowledge is very imperfect and who may be easily led astray, and that we must consider them as well as ourselves when we are weighing questions of our liberty in the gospel.

2. We all influence others by our example. V. 9. Paul grants to the stronger brethren their personal liberty to gratify these lawful desires, but he reminds them that this may not be expedient for others. "Take heed lest.... this liberty....become a stumbling-block to them that are weak." Remember that you are surrounded by those who are ignorant and easily led into evil, and you must weigh well the results of your example upon them. "If any man see thee, whom he recognizes as having an enlightened conscience, and to whom he looks as a safe pattern, sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not his conscience be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols, and that, too, as an act of worship to the idol?" Thus by your example a brother or a neighbor is led into a sin which will work death if grace prevent not.

3. The spirit of Christianity demands self-denial for others. V. 12. Some might be ready to reply: "Must I therefore forego my own pleasure simply because another is so weak and ignorant that my example may lead him into sin and danger? I am not to blame for his weakness or ignorance; let him bear his own responsibility!" Paul's answer is, "If you will not have respect to the welfare of others, if you are not willing to deny yourself some pleasure to save a brother's soul, then you are no Christian. To be a Christian is to be like Christ. And Christ, 'though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, that you, through his poverty, might become rich.' If you have none of the spirit of self-denial you are none of his. More than this, if by your indulgence you lead a soul to death you sin against Christ. For he regards an injury done to the least member of his body as done to himself." Matt. 25: 45; Acts 9: 5.

"Yes, but I have a right to eat this meat if I want to, and no one shall rob me of my rights."

"Yes, and so did our Lord Jesus Christ possess many rights in heaven. Indeed, from him all our rights are derived. He had a right to the unbroken enjoyment of the rest and peace and glory of his eternal throne. Yet, for your sake and mine, he denied himself these rights; he took upon himself the form of a servant, was made in the likeness of man, obeyed, suffered, and died, that we might live. Can we, therefore, contend for such rights as may be either enjoyed or not when their indulgence would ruin a soul for which Christ paid an infinite price? We cannot if we have the same mind in us which was in Christ Jesus."

It may not be according to the promptings of our selfish hearts, it certainly is not according to the ways of the proud world, it may not accord with the teachings of secular philosophies, but it certainly is according to the fundamental, the distinctive principle of our holy religion to say with Paul, "Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." This is Christ-likc. This is God-like.—The U. P. Bible Teacher.

"If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth." "Meat" was the flesh of beasts slain by the heathen priests and sacrificed to their gods in a vile service. What had not been required for the religious rites, was given to the priests or sold in the public markets. Entertainments were sometimes given more or less associated with idol worship, where this meat was offered to the guests. Was it right to eat of it? "This question was," says Stanley, "the greatest practical difficulty in the apostolic age. It was to the heathen converts nearly what the observance of circumcision was to the Jewish converts, or what in later times the maintenance of caste has been to the converts of India." There were reasons why they might partake of this food. It was not essentially sinful; there would arise a difficulty in procuring meats; the prohibition would interfere with Christian liberty. But there were stronger reasons why they should not partake of it.

It had been prohibited by the council at Jerusalem; it was particularly offensive to the Jews, and there was danger that the disciples themselves might be led not only into ceremonial but moral pollutions connected with idolatry. So there are different ways to-day of disposing of those things which are "lawful, but not expedient." The Rev. Dr. Edson says: "They are determined upon considerations of personal inclination and enjoyment. 'If the thing is good, and I want it, why refuse it?' Or the case is submitted to the judgment of society: 'What is the custom? How do my associates dispose of the problem?' A third and higher method asks, 'What is right? What does an enlightened conscience approve?' Conduct which is indecent, dishonorable, hurtful to ourselves, must be condemned. But that which in itself is innocent we may allow. We may stand upon our individual liberties, and if we seek to avoid all that is absolutely wrong we owe to mankind no further debt. But neither of these three distinct methods of dealing with a question of practical morality suits Paul. That which is agreeable, customary, and abstractly right, his conscience might, notwithstanding, thoroughly disapprove. There is a larger question of charity: "How might my habit affect others, and especially my religious associates? Is there any danger of any one stumbling because of my innocently partaking of this meat?" Then, "if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no more meat while the world standeth."—The Illustrator.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

WE MUST ABSTAIN FROM ALL THAT CAN OFFEND OR HURT ANOTHER.

1. The superiority of love to knowledge. Vs. 1–3. Mere knowledge, whether of duty or theological doctrines, can never bring us near to God unless love and humility go before. It may even do harm by leading us to despise others and think too much of ourselves. Love carries with it no such temptations, but brings us at once into the closest relationship with the Source of all true knowledge.

2. Things that are not sinful in themselves may become so through sinful associations. Vs. 4–7. Meat offered to idols was a snare to weak Christians because connected in their minds with the vile, superstitious and debasing rites of the heathenism they had just renounced. We do not associate a glass of water or milk with drunkenness and revelry, but we do a glass of wine. It is the associations which we connect with certain things that gives them in a great measure their power to do good or harm. Many people cannot see the hurt in a quiet game of cards at home or going to the theatre to see a moral play like Shakespeare's Hamlet; but from time immemorial only evil associations have clustered around the playhouse and the card-table, and a Christian should shun even the appearance of pollution.

3. It may be possible for one Christian to do without injury to himself what would work great harm to the soul of another. Vs. 7–11. It has been said that Christians are the only Bible some people read. Instead of guiding their conduct by God's Word they take pattern by others. Such persons are always weak; i. e., they lack strength of Christian principle. The one they imitate may be strong and wise enough to stop short at the danger point while they are drawn further and further into positive sin, and finally utter ruin. This has been oftenest and most sadly illustrated by the use of the wine-cup among ministers and professing Christians. Such persons might take but very little, and feel certain that it did them no harm, but many a young man encouraged by their example would take a little himself, then a little more and a little more till he became a confirmed drunkard. This is one great reason why Christians at the present day generally practice total abstinence.

4. Love to others is the highest plane of Christian obedience. Vs. 12, 13. We will suppose that in a family of children the youngest is forbidden to eat a certain dainty for fear it will make him sick, while no such restriction is laid upon the others. Now if the rest who have liberty to eat it should refuse to use this liberty for fear of putting a temptation in their little brother's way, it would be a good illustration of Paul's meaning. If we are true Christians we shall deny ourselves even innocent indulgences rather than hurt a soul for whom Christ died.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What is said of one wise in his own conceit? Prov. 26: 12. From whom does true wisdom come? Job. 28: 12, 23. What is the harm of corrupt associations? 1 Cor. 15: 33. What is said of those who offend the weak? Matt. 18:6. What is the duty of the strong? Rom. 15:1.

THE FATAL BOLT.

Would you make the fatal shot,
Would you cut the mystic knot,
Would you conquer in the fight,
Load your piece with sacred light,
With naked limbs--O what a plight!
Behold your preacher seeking light!
On naked knees with hoodwinked eyes
He points his hoodwink toward the skies;
In curtained cells in deepest night,
Behold he pleadeth for the light.
While sun is marching to the West,
He turns his back like all the rest,
Thus looking East with back to sun
He prays for light! Is he in fun?
O give him light, the light he shuns,
The thing he fights, from which he runs,
Destruction to the "holy" (craft),
To all the "Orders" Death's keen shaft,
Of sacred light one heavenly ray,
Bright herald of the coming day?
Those sons of light (?) O see them drive
Into the dusky midnight hive!
Come floods of light from N. C. A.,
Bright herald of the dawning day,
In hand the Christian Cynosure
With real light from Heaven pure,
O guide the sons of sacred day
Full in the upward shining way;
Let her messages of light
Become triumphant in the fight,
Break asunder cable-tow,
Inward cause pure light to flow,
Multiply the sons of light,
Men of valor, sons of might,
Victors in the cause of right.

OBITUARY.

Died—At Brandon, Vt., March 15th, 1884, Mr. I. N. Wetmore.

This dear brother had greatly befriended our cause during life and in his death we lose a beloved friend and co-laborer. His wife, who survives him, is a warm friend of reform and has, in her bereavement, the sympathy of many friends.

B.

The Congregationalist quotes Joseph Cook as saying that "out of every 10,000 deaths in England seven are murders, Out of every 10,000 in the United States. twenty-one are murders. The proportion of murders to deaths in the United States is not exceeded anywhere on earth except in Italy and Spain," and Mr. Cook asks significantly: "Is it not high time that the young idea east, west, north and especially south, should be taught not to shoot?" Mr. Cook ought to have added that about sixteen of these twenty-one murders are committed by others than those of American blood.

DELINQUENT SUBSCRIBERS.

Are you in arrears on your subscription to the Christian Cynosure? Did you receive notice with a request to renew? We have endeavored to give each delinquent a fair warning, and then wait patiently for returns. In some instances we have been disappointed, even after a second trial, but we are not discouraged. We intend to exercise the largest forbearance consistent with the financial safety of your paper, and where you show sufficient interest to write and state your case we will consider it with the largest practicable liberality. In cases where we receive no reply, there is nothing left for us to do but to remove the name from the list and charge up the amount.

Buds and Blossoms is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Associated Churches of Christ.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.
Congregational, College Springs, Iowa.

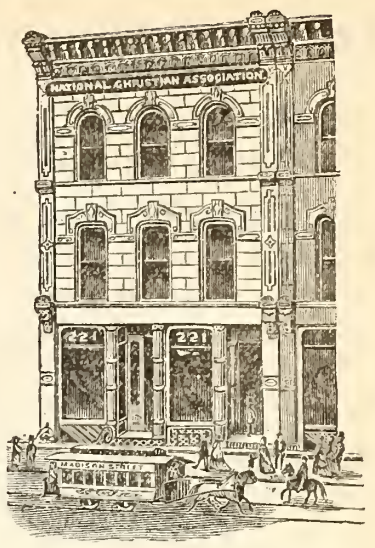
CHRISTIAN WORKERS

Who depend on voluntary contributions of Christian people in whole or in part for their support:

J. F. Browne, Berea, Ky.

Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss.

J. F. Galloway, Okahumka, Florida.



Wm. Hazenburg, Cape Town, S. Africa.

A. D. Zaraphonithes, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1884.

POLITICAL RIGHTS OF WOMEN.

We have received under the frank of Representative John D. White of Kentucky, his speech citing extensive statements on the case of which, unless we misjudge, is yet widely to attract the attention of the American people. Her case is succinctly this:

The country under Halleck and McClellan was at the last gasp. The great artery of the nation, the Mississippi, was closed, and the rebels, knowing its importance, had made its banks frown with ramparts and batteries. Lincoln had resolved on attempting to open a pass to New Orleans by a fleet of gun-boats; to push his little extemporized fleet in the very teeth of the rebel power where the odds against them was like that odds against the British at Bunker Hill,—and worse; for the British attacked earthworks thrown up in a night, while the rebel fortifications along the river were constructed with the utmost deliberation, with plenty of time and money and men to plan and execute. Appalled at the certainty of failure, Lincoln was giving up the plan of his River Campaign. England was threatening to acknowledge the Confederacy and join her armies to those of the South.

At that critical moment Anna Ella Carroll planned and presented to the government the Campaign of Tennessee; which let our armies march by the Forts Henry and Donelson into the heart of the rebellion, and brought Grant and his armies to Vicksburg.

Ben Wade was chairman of the committee on the Conduct of the War. He took Miss Carroll's plan to Lincoln whose strong, good sense saw, at once, its inestimable merits. Wade also procured the appointment of Stanton Secretary of War, who in 1862 came into power, pledged to execute that Tennessee campaign, planned, and laid before the government by a woman. The result is known. The roar of the gun-boats which Lincoln turned from the Mississippi up the Tennessee, silenced the clamor of rebel sympathizers in London, who were demonstrating the utter impossibility that the Union could ever be restored, and one flag now floats over the reunited States.

Representative White, a Kentuckian, establishes these thrilling facts by a host of witnesses, such as Lincoln, Thad. Stevens, Henry Wilson, Roscoe Conkling, John Sherman, and from fifty to one hundred others. He gives Ben Wade's letter to Miss Carroll in full, giving in detail the struggle it cost him to carry her plan into effect, against the jealousy of military weaklings like McClellan and others, whose exploits ended in "all quiet on the Potomac," and the air heavy with the effluvium of dead horses and men. Indeed, the name of Miss Carroll had to be kept a profound secret till her Tennessee campaign had been executed. And yet, although these facts and the perfect overwhelming proofs of them, which indeed were never disputed or even questioned, were spread before the House by the committee on Military Affairs, March 3d, 1881, that House, which has given weeks to the traitor General Fitz John Porter, has never voted a penny to pay Miss Carroll, even for the printing and other expenses, which she paid, to get the Tennessee campaign adopted by the government!

Mr. White's speech was in support of his motion for a permanent committee on the Political Rights of Women, and he argues that, if Miss Carroll and her sisters had the ballot, her claims on the country, supported by testimony and authority so overwhelming, would not be neglected or set aside as they have been, while the claims, real or invented, of thousands of the late rebels who now have votes, are respectfully considered. And Mr. White recounts, from a report already before the House, the grounds on which he asks a permanent committee to consider the political rights of women; as:

1. Their property taxed without the owner's voice or representation.
2. Suffrage would prevent unjust discriminations against them in industry and education.
3. Suffrage would give them a voice in laws of divorce, custody of children, and just division of property.
4. Woman suffrage would bear against the modern abominations, liquor traffic, houses of prostitution, gambling, etc., etc.
5. Woman suffrage would bear against war and bloodshed.
6. In short, there is nothing local or national, foreign or domestic, moral or political, present or future, n which the mother, daughter or sister is not equally interested with the father, son or brother; and it is unjust to stifle the voice of that interest.

Suppose woman is man's inferior; does that justify depriving her of her rights? If John Smith never can be Webster, shall he be forbidden to vote? Or suppose woman equal but essentially different from man. The general differs from the poet. Shall one vote and the other not?

Such are some of the arguments of this able speech. The committee called for was ordered, but Carlisle, the Speaker, contrary to custom, rule or reason, put the control of the committee in the hands of those who were opposed to its object.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

The American party is behind the other parties whereas it ought to have been before them in preparing for our National nominating convention. But no one is to blame for it.

Last winter leading Prohibitionists wrote us at Washington inviting us to join in their convention, May 21st, at Pittsburg, "With the understanding that the nominees of that convention be not members of secret orders; or, if members, that they withdraw, and confine their prohibition labors to open work." Eight or ten men of us, with Mr. Pomeroy at our head, voted to join the Pittsburg Convention on those terms.

Presto! Opposition arose to the Pittsburg convention by secretists, and their abettors, on the ground that the time was premature. Seeing that the Pittsburg convention would be a strong one, and in the city where our National Association opposed to secret societies started, they froze over the breach by a compromise, giving Pittsburg the convention, but postponing it to the 23d of July.

But one time has been named for the convention of the American party, which is June 20th, or perhaps the evening before.

The rational and just hope of union with the open wing of the Prohibitionists, has caused the delay. But Mr. Capwell, who is chairman of the Central National Committee of the American party, is now making all sail for port; and will issue the call for our National Conveniton as soon as possible.

Meantime the Lever, which is the political organ of the Prohibitionists, is naturally so fearful that the open Christian Prohibitionists will come where they belong, i. e., to the American party, that it does not dare put the name "American party" into its columns, lest the Prohibitionists should find out that they are working over a volcano of hidden lodge-fires, liable, any moment, to break out! How can it be otherwise, when every Mason-Prohibitionist is a secret sworn brother to every Mason-distiller, brewer and saloonist?

The thing, and the only thing for Americans to do, is to "Watch and pray lest they enter into temptation "just this once;" and to hew to the line, and "vote as they pray."

We shall now soon hear from chairman Capwell, and we cannot hear too soon.

The Michigan Americans have appointed a strong delegation who will be on hand at Chicago, Wisconsin will follow suit, Needles and Butler will be heard from, and the Washington paper will be out now very soon; and the sooner the better.

"AMERICAN PROHIBITION."

At the late meeting at Battle Creek, Mich., anxiety was felt and expressed lest the American platform would be traded for a fusion with the Prohibitionists. Every such utterance gladdens the heart of the Cynosure, whose editor, a full quarter of a century, has stood square on the American platform, for God and a pure worship against the self-projected worships of men.

The Prohibition-Home-Protection party would be one with us to-day, but for the secret temperance lodges which are the cats-paws of Masons, to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. In Iowa, when the secret grange was at its best, every prominent granger in the whole State was a Freemason. It is substantially so now with the temperance "order."

These "orders" dislike Gideon T. Stewart and the W. C. T. U., but they mean to control them so as to keep them walking with Freemasons who will betray everything that has Christ in it, as their lodge has not. The W. C. T. U. are with us in heart to-day, but their husbands are many of them Masons.

Now it is our wisdom and duty to unite with the open Christian Prohibitionists, for they are just like ourselves; and to keep the American party barred with triple steel against Masons and jack-Masons who are meaner and more wicked than their masters. Hence we joy in the utterance of the Battle Creek meeting. Christ said: "What I say unto you I say unto all, WATCH."

HON. EDWARD BLAKE UPON THE SECRET LODGE.

The great speech in the Canadian Parliament by Hon. Edward Blake, upon the demand of the Orange lodge for state recognition and incorporation, well deserves the copious extract given on another page. It was delivered on the 17th of March and was soon followed by the final vote which stood 68 for to 105 against the bill. The speech is printed in full in thirteen solid columns of the Toronto Daily Globe of the 29th ult., and is justly praised by that able journal, whose leading editorial of the same date says:

"Mr. Blake's speech on the Orange Incorporation bill is said by men of all parties to have been the most eloquent, powerful and convincing ever delivered in the Parliament of Canada. It is as remarkable for its frankness and fearlessness as for its eloquence. Speaking only for himself he resolved that, while avoiding everything that could give offence, he would leave no room for doubt as to his views, or as to the grounds on which they rest. . . . He objected to incorporating a secret society, and so giving it a state recognition. . . . There is no room for misunderstanding what he said, and there is not one word in it at which any reasonable man can take offence. . . . He did not object to the existence of any party political organization—far from it—but he did object to incorporating a society called benevolent and religious which is a secret society and used for party purposes. . . . One of the finest passages in this magnificent speech is that in which Mr. Blake, declaring his devotion to Protestantism and his belief that many Catholic dogmas are erroneous, declares also that he cannot mark as murderous, as treacherous, or as disloyal, nearly one-half of the people of Canada; and that he does not believe that the cause of Protestantism, the advancement of the Gospel, or the peace, prosperity, welfare, and government of the Dominion, can be promoted by the Federal recognition of this secret society, organized and led as it is in Ontario, and devoted to the propagation of views such as he had exposed."

The editorial of the Hamilton Evening Times of March 31st contains also a marked commendation of both Mr. Blake's speech and his position against secret societies, which deserves notice:

"Mr. Blake objected to state recognition of secret societies. He said the state might adopt any one of three attitudes towards secret societies—suppression, recognition or neutrality, and he favored the last. Grant that some secret societies are religious or benevolent. They can change their constitution. They can leave their constitution unaltered, but change their action and objects. Thus the Orange Association, professedly benevolent and ultra-Protestant, is really political. On the testimony of Mr. John White and other leading Orangemen, nine-tenths of the Orangemen vote with the Conservative party, and in England the societies have gone the length of expelling members who voted against Tory candidates. A secret political society is not a good thing for the country. The public interest is served by publicity. Let all charges be made and answered openly, and the truth will be arrived at. The evidence produced by Mr. Blake proves conclusively that the Orange organization has been used to serve political ends, and as a wing of the Conservative party the Orange organization should not look to Reformers for legislative action of a strengthening character."

The Toronto Globe of the 4th inst. prints the correspondence of Mr. Blake and the "Grand Secretary" of the Odd-fellow Grand Lodge of Ontario, who asked the intrepid statesman to explain that in his attack on the secret orders he did not mean Odd-fellowship. Mr. Blake nobly replies by sending him a copy of the speech and re-affirming the views therein maintained.

The significance of this episode in the Canadian Parliament, and the cordiality with which the leading papers of the Dominion endorse the radical and statesmanlike position of Mr. Blake, shows that the lodges do not yet wholly control public sentiment: and we are far from despairing that our own Congress shall ere long hear and applaud sentiments as true and as noble, and that the press of the country will sustain them.

HON. H. H. HITCHCOCK, for twenty-six years superintendent of the Galesburg Division of the C. B. & Q. Railroad, died at his home in Galesburg, April 24th, aged 66 years.

Mr. Hitchcock, besides being a capable, influential and popular man, was a humble and sincere Christian. He was a trustee of Knox College; and when the present Masonic incumbent was elected to the presidency, a trustee who was a doctor of divinity chuckled, as they returned to his house, and said, "Well, Bro. Hitchcock, did you know we had elected a Mason for president?" "No!" said Mr. Hitchcock, "I did not." "Nor did I suppose you clergymen who pretend to be Anti-masons, would allow such a candidate to be palmed upon us." The next day Mr. H. said to a prominent Anti-masonic citizen of Galesburg: "We have been betrayed, Mr. C.! I did not dream that those ministers were putting a Freemason on to us."

Mr. Hitchcock was terribly afflicted by sickness and death in his family. One time, while he lay sick, I called on him, and he gave a donation in money to Wheaton College. Said he, "I am interested in your work up there, not only for education, but your opposition to the lodge." "I have met it in my business as a railroad man; and it — is — the — wickedest thing!"—and then stopped, and said no more. This was uttered slowly, and with intervals between his words. He evidently regarded the lodge, not only with loathing, but as a thing of terror. O, the fearful responsibility of a minister of Christ whom such men as Mr. Hitchcock trusts! Knox College thenceforth became a headquarters from which missionaries were sent out to seduce students in Monmouth and other colleges into the worship of anti-Christ. J. B.

—The argument of Dr. Wishart in this number of the Cynosure we are not ashamed to commend to the most intelligent readers, who may yet judge with disprejudice of earnest and profound reasoning.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, editor of the Free Methodist, gave the third address in the course projected by the Chicago Christian Association on Tuesday evening of last week in Carpenter Hall. The audience was not large but the address was one of the ablest. Bro. Travis has promised a copy for the Cynosure as soon as the pressure of his work will allow.

—The latest report from Dr. Milligan of Pittsburgh is quite discouraging to all hope of his recovery, yet if it be the will of the Lord we pray that he may yet remain to plead for Christ and his kingdom among men. A few years ago, when almost given up by the physicians he was wonderfully healed in answer to the importunate prayer of his Pittsburgh congregation.

—Bro. Starry returned from the Michigan State Convention at Battle Creek on Saturday and spent the Sabbath at Wheaton, where he expects to speak during the week. He is also engaged for an evening or two for Morrison, Ill., and is making arrangements for several meetings in Rockford and vicinity.

—Bro. E. Mathews of Michigan, does not lay off the armor of a reformer. He speaks against lodgery on the 15th and 16th of April in the Free Methodist church at Bedford, Michigan.

—The Cynosure has welcomed during the past week among its visitors Bro. S. E. Starry of Iowa and Rev. A. T. McDill of the Christian Instructor, Philadelphia, who is again on his way to Colorado, expecting to return in time for the United Presbyterian General Assembly at St. Louis. Associated with Rev. D. W. Collins, brother of the president of the N. C. A. National Convention, Bro. McDill is accomplishing a good work against the secret lodge. The Instructor is, if possible, the most outspoken of the U. P. journals. From its office also comes that grand and useful book, "In the Coils."

—Dr. S. L. Cook, Indiana lecturer, has lately closed a series of successful meetings in La Grange county. We wish the Dr. had thought enough of what was accomplished for reform to have written more than a postal card.

—The Minnesota friends are moving for more thorough work in their State. Bro. Williams, the State agent, is persuaded that more can be done and the appeal of the State officers should not be unheeded.

—It proves much for the strength and goodness of our cause that men are often moved to publish their testimony against the lodge in tracts or pamphlets for distribution among their neighbors. Such a good work has been done in a neat four-page tract, "God's Word vs. Secretism," by W. H. Clay, of Frontier, Mich., who will send to any one for 10 cents per dozen or 60 cents per hundred.

—The American Freeman has transferred its list to the Washington American, having accomplished a grand work for northwestern Missouri. We are glad to note that the local interests of Christian reform in that section will not lack an organ. At Blanchard in southwestern Iowa, Rev. Rufus Johnson, who was early engaged in reform publishing in Ohio, has been several years issuing a local paper, the Record. He has now associated with himself Revs. R. M. Sherrard of the United Presbyterian church, M. A. Gault, agent and lecturer of the National Reform Association, James Bullock and James R. Sharp, who form a company to engage in the general printing business, the publication of a paper in the interests of national, anti-secret and temperance reform and the printing and circulation of books and tracts on the same subjects. God speed this good work!

CATHOLICISM AND MASONRY.

—A circular was read from Archbishop Lynch in all Catholic churches of Canada during January, stating he had received a letter from Rome asking if it was true the Freemason society was recruiting large numbers of Catholics in this province, as reported in the Freemasons' Journal, and had answered very few had joined, and those only who had neglected pascal communion and were otherwise irreligious, who looked only to worldly gain, and not to the eternal salvation of their souls.

—It is stated that the Roman Catholic church, which has always opposed secret societies, and refused absolution to any of its members who joined them, is about to make an exception in favor of Freemasonry in the United States. We are told that, in the United States, Freemasonry is much more Christian than on the Continent. It would be a singular thing, after the bitter opposition of centuries, if the powers at Rome should finally consent that the members of that communion might belong to another and a secret organization.—Advance.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

District Investigations thwarted—An Anti-Prohibition kite with great names on its tail.

Dear Cynosure:—There are three matters of paramount interest that at present absorb public attention. The first is the Congressional investigation of the financial affairs of the District. It is abundantly evident that the accounts have been most loosely kept, and there is great reason to think that there has been much official corruption. The special effort seems to be to see "how not to do it." The following from the National Republican of this morning shows what is the general impression:

It is understood that a powerful pressure is being brought to bear upon members of the House District committee to stifle the projected investigation into District affairs. Whence comes this pressure and what does it mean? The people will conclude that there must be rottenness and corruption somewhere, or there would not be such a tremendous influence at work to prevent an investigation. By all means let us get at the truth. If the records are clear the District officials should be only too glad to have a Congressional certificate to that effect. If the records are not straight the tax-payers should know it.

What is the source of that pressure is a question easily answered by those who know the prevalence and power of the secret organizations this District.

The next to this is the trial of the ex-detectives, McDevett and Flinder. It appears in evidence that on July 2d, 1880, a package of bonds was stolen from the Metropolitan Bank of this city, that they were hidden for a time in this District; were taken to New York, and finally returned. The two detectives were the agents in the return of the bonds. It appears that they gave the robbers $5,000 to return the rest. It is now believed and sought to be proved that they, the detectives, planned and invited the robbery with a distinct understanding that they were to share in the spoils. It is earnestly hoped that this trial may not be the mere travesty of justice, as similar preceding trials have been.

The third and most momentous matter of interest is the meeting last night in Lincoln Hall of the Citizens National Protective Association, organized some weeks since in this city. In spite of bad weather, there was a large attendance, and a long list of vice presidents. In this list is the name of Hon. Fred. P. Staunton of Virginia and other prominent men. This is an honor (?) which I trust they will make haste to disclaim. The following platform of this Protective league was read by the secretary:

We hold that the Constitution of the United States, based on the Declaration of Independence, guarantees the enjoyment of personal, civil, and religious liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and warrants the enactment of no laws which seek to abridge or restrict the same; that all existing prohibitory laws or contemplated legislation, which tend to abridge personal rights, are tyrannical infringements on Constitutional guarantees, and should be respectively repealed and opposed; that all Sunday laws which abridge religious liberty and prevent the working classes from enjoying the public libraries, museums, art galleries, and public parks, are tyrannical and unjust, and should be repealed, for Sunday was made for man, and not man for Sunday; that the "public school system" is the bulwark of our institutions, and must be kept clear of and free from all sectarian influence and interference; that all organized ecclesiastical interference in civil affairs is in violation of the spirit and letter of the Constitution, the genius of American institutions, and is demoralizing and pernicious, and must be restrained; that all private and corporate property, whether real or personal, should bear the burdens of taxation equally.

The speeches were in entire harmony with the foregoing principles. Mr. Murphy who (mis) represented Iowa, "The Egypt of temperance fanaticism," was "ashamed of the legislation of his State which deprived men of their natural rights. We are entitled not only to full freedom of our consciences but also of our stomachs," etc.

Hon. Mr. Miller of Iowa said, "These fanatics protect distilleries and confiscate all breweries. They even trespass on the Sabbath day to make a market for corn. They are trying under the laws of the State to protect the morality of the young men of Iowa. Under the same law, they are shipping thousands of barrels of whisky into other States to make armies of drunkards of them. The time has come when we must not resort to words."

Hon .Mr. Fielder of New Jersey said that "the inactivity of the people alone enabled the temperance fanatics to go as far as they have. The proper way to check their growth is at the ballot-box." "Do not rest until you have planted similar organizations in every Congressional District in the United States."

Letters were read from Hon. Carl Shurz, Richard Duncan, Hon. Ben. Butterworth, Senator Morgan, Senator Edmunds, and Hon. Mr. Deuster.

I am profoundly impressed with the reverence these men have for personal rights, the honor of religion, the sacredness of the Sabbath, and the preservation of public morals. Especially I am impressed with their profound interest in the cause of temperance; I heartily agree with them, that this is not the time for words only, but for deeds. In all seriousness, we rejoice that the issue is fairly made up and that they, as well as we, are to appeal to the ballot. And may God defend the right. H. H. Hinman.

LITERATURE.

The Dore Gallery of Bible Stories. Large quarto. Price $2.00. John B. Alden, New York.

Paul Gustave Dore, the late gifted and popular French artist, though his paintings in oil would have made him famous, is far better known for his prolific genius in the illustrations of great books. It is said that he executed over 45,000 designs. To be classed among his best works are his illustrations of the Holy Bible, fifty-two of which are reproduced in this sumptuous volume with great skill of the engraver and printer, and each accompanied by a descriptive page by Josephine Pollard. The father and mother who are at a loss how to profitably care for their children on the Sabbath day will find the difficulty solved by opening this Bible Gallery. The illustrations suggest the Bible history from the Creation to the Ascension, and in familiar talks and questions the Scriptures will soon become one of the most entertaining of books. The investment of a dollar or two in such books as this will be found one of the most profitable.

Health by Exercise. By George H. Taylor, M. D. pp. 462. Price 50c. John B. Alden, New York.

Thirty-three years ago Mr. Taylor was an enterprising farmer in Henry county, Illinois, having broken the virgin prairie two or three miles from Wethersfield. He introduced the merino sheep into that neighborhood at that early day. Selling his farm he began the study of what is known as the "Swedish Movement Cure," and introduced the practice so celebrated among Swedish physicians in this country. General Grant, after his late severe fall and subsequent long and painful convalescence, was very much benefitted by a Swedish physician in Washington to whom he was introduced by the Swedish minister. This is a new and enlarged edition of a work originally written some years ago. It teaches the character of the proper exercise to be taken for the removal of any specified physical weakness. The author says his desire is to neither make doctors out of his readers or to shake their confidence in good doctors, but to enable them to have such health that they can do without them. The book is divided into four parts. Part first gives the principles of the movement cure; part second gives examples and applies the principles to practice; part third briefly discusses the pathology of common chronic affections, and how health can be restored; part fourth and last treats of the importance to health of air, food, light, heat, etc., and the benefit of using these rather than drugs for the restoration of health. The reader will find abundant good in the book whether he takes it as the cure of all the ills of life or not. It is far better to keep in health, and a wise knowledge of the efficacy of little things for this end is the most valuable knowledge to be obtained.

—The American Journalist of St. Louis began in its March number a series of articles on "Women Journalists," an entertaining sketch of a score or more of American women who have been prominent in public life during the past decade. We are surprised that such a paper should not place among the first in its list the names of Frances E. Willard and her gifted sister-in-law, Mary B. Willard, editor of the Union-Signal. Some years ago, before organizing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, these noble women edited and published a daily paper in this city which was among the best of the time. The Journalist has a valuable National Editorial Directory containing the names of the staffs of the leading dailies of the country.

The "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" is the name of a new degree put down as Masonic by the papers, but evidently distinct from either the American or Scotch Rite degrees. A great meeting of this order is to be held Friday of this week in this city, of which the daily press says:

"Quite an event in the social life of the uppertendom of the secret societies of New York and Chicago is on the tapis, to come off April 18 and 19, in the way of a visit for inspection and exemplification of the ritualistic work of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. The Imperial Council, located at New York will visit Chicago, being the guests during their stay of Medinah Temple of the ancient order of this city. The Imperial Council is composed of some of the prominent men of the professional, social and business circles of New York, who will be escorted to this city by many nobles of their own city, together with a number from Lulu Temple, Philadelphia, and Aleppo Temple of Boston."

"The Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, from New York, together with an escort of nobles from Mecca Temple of New York, Aleppo of Boston, Lulu of Philadelphia, Syrian of Cincinnati, Pyramid of Bridgeport, Conn., Syria of Pittsburg, and Al Koran of Cleveland will arrive here on the morning of April 18, as the guests of Medinah Temple of the Ancient Order of this city."

A meeting of the order held in Cincinnati about the time of the flood issued the following singular notice, which may give the discerning reader some idea of this outlandish society:

Syrian Temple, Cincinnati, Ohio.—Scherif al Ascharaf: Be thou ready on Nahar-es Sabt, the ninth day of the fifth month of Hejra, 1301, Jamaz ul Awwal, answering to Friday, March 7, 1884, E. ·. SPRING.

A little month ago, the sky was gray;
Snow tents were pitched along the mountain's side,
Where March encamped his stormy legions wide,
And shook his standard o'er the fields of day!
But now the sky is blue, the snow is flown,
And every mountain is an emerald throne,
And every cloud a dais fringed with light,
And all below is beautiful and bright!
The forest waves its plume—the hedges blow
The South wind scuds along the meadowy sea,
Thick-flecked with daisied foam—and violets grow
Blue-eyed, and the cowslips star the bloomy lea;
The sky-lark floods the scene with pleasant rhyme;
The ousel twitters in the swaying pine;
And wild bees hum about the beds of thyme,
And bend the clover bells and eglantine;
The snake casts off his skin in mossy nooks;
The long-eared rabbits near their burrows play;
The dormouse wakes; and, see! the noisy rooks
Fly, foraging, about the stacks of hay!

What sights! what sounds! what rustic life and mirth!
Housed the long Winter from the bitter cold,
Huddling the chimney-corners, young and old
Come forth and share the gladness of the Earth.
The ploughmen whistle as the furrows trail
Behind their glittering shares a billowy row;
The milkmaid sings a ditty, while her pail
Grows full and frothy; and the cattle low;
The hounds are yelping in the misty wood,
Starting the fox; the jolly huntsmen cheer,
And horns and guns disturb the listening ear,
And startle Echo in her solitude;
The teamster drives his wagon down the lane,
Flattening a broader rut in weeds and sand;
The angler fishes in the shady pool;
And, loitering down the road, with cap in hand,
The truant chases butterflies—in vain,
Heedless of bell that calls the village lads to school!

Methinks the world is sweeter than of yore;
More fresh and fine, and more exceeding fair;
There is a presence never felt before—
The soul of inspiration everywhere;
Incarnate Youth in every idle limb,
My vernal days, my prime, return anew;
My tranced spirit breathes a silent hymn,
My heart is full of dew.

IMMORAL LITERATURE AND ART.

Another cause supposed was the prevalence of an immoral literature. The question what to do with such a literature is not free from difficulty, save, perhaps, as to its grosser forms. These, with their pictorial aggravations, should be relentlessly ferreted out and destroyed. It is amazing that a civilized community should permit in the mails, on the book-stalls, in the hands of its youth, openly, the shameless profanations of the printer's art which are so common amongst us. This is a new danger, which the abundance of money, the cheapness of printed books and papers, and the universality of the reading habit have brought upon us, and which has become extremely pressing while our law-makers have been asleep. Such literature should be dealt with after a new method; it should be treated as we treat venomous serpents; every man's hand should be against it for its extripation, and its authors and venders should be punished. As for the more subtle, but seemingly less harmful forms, while something might be done by forbidding their importation, by declaring them not the subject of legal contract, and by prohibiting their sale to minors of either sex, still more could be effected by a judicious censorship which should forbid the publication of matter not fit to be printed because of its immorality,—a prudential measure, the employment of which the frenzy for freedom to do whatever one pleases has too long, perhaps, discouraged amongst us.

The evil could be cured, however, only by cultivating a taste for better literature, through the multiplication of library facilities, and by a more pointed religious instruction. accompanied by a vigorous campaign against the production and the sale of the noxious matter, like that which is suppressing the sale of intoxicating liquors. And here, also, a change of attitude is much needed. Hitherto, given a work of artistic genius, no matter how filthy its subject or its treatment, the blind devotees of culture have made haste to stamp it as sacred, and have refused to let it die. Words are weak to express the absurdity of such a worship of impurity under the guise of art. No expense or effort is too great on the part of governments to prevent the approach of a plague which which kills its thousands, while they permit the ravages of a moral pestilence which is certain to corrupt the spiritual natures of the millions, old and young, who come under its influence.

Let a true word be spoken of much of the nude art that fills our galleries. It is of two grades. The first is that of which the nudity is the most conspicuous feature,—naked figures, very clearly female and of the human species, but without a touch of imaginative beauty or of spiritual elevation. The second consists of really artistic presentations of that which, uninfluenced by a vicious custom, modesty could never consent to reveal, of which the effect, nevertheless, as of all true art, is elevating and inspiring. But as the higher forms of art are conditioned by the lower, from which they gradually emerge, is it probable that the total effect of nude art production is so far good that it ought to be encouraged, unless a careful discrimination be made of the higher from the lower, and only the former are exhibited?—*North Am. GOOD LANGUAGE.

As soon as a child begins to lisp its first broken sentence its education should begin. Habits are formed which will exist to a greater or less degree throughout life. Such being the case, the conversation of the older members of the family should be carefully guarded, lest the little ones hear and learn ungrammatical expressions and slang, which, sad to say, is so rife among our young people of the present day. The servants, with whom children spend much of their time, should be chosen with reference to this matter. A mother should feel it her duty to point out any grammatical mistakes made by them, and insist on their language being correct, respectful and devoid of slang at all times. It is exceedingly difficult to break children of habits once formed, and care in this direction will save much trouble and annoyance. One way to cultivate the use of language, and at the same time learn of the occupations and companions of her children, is for the mother to encourage the daily narration of what they have seen, heard and enjoyed, and the telling of their little experiences. The study of pictures, moreover, in which every child delights, may be used as a great provocation of language. Children always love to look at pictures, and can almost always be induced to talk about them. This study teaches them observation, and how to accurately describe whatever they see. When stories are read to children they should be obliged to reproduce them, using as far as possible the language of the book. The memory is strengthened in this way, a habit of attention formed, and the power of expression increased. If such plans as these are systematically carried out, they will prove a wonderful help in the thorough education of a child. The constant, careful teaching and kind suggestions of parents will accomplish a work which can never be performed by study.—Selected.

CHURCH BUILDINGS.

It is a significant fact that the early Christians built no houses especially designed for worship, only as every house in which they dwelt was a house of praise. Their business was character-building, not temple-construction. They invested in the souls of men, not in the wood and brick and "hammered stone." They proclaimed and lived the truth; consequently their success in any locality did not depend on their assembling in a fine chapel, with good music and a gifted preacher. They left such things to others, and for themselves preferred an outward poverty and simplicity, being fully satisfied to rejoice in spiritual riches.

We do not object to suitable houses for worship, nor to religious instruction for the churches; but let the former be plain, and the latter Scriptural. Let the Apostacy have pagan architecture and pagan doctrines, and let Christians be done with all imitations of such ways. The admonition of Peter to Christian wives is equally applicable to the churches: "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—Baptist Weekly.

Archbishop Secker, in his Wedding Ring, has the following, which is worth reading twice: "Hast thou a soft heart?—it is of God's breaking. Hast thou a sweet wife?—she is of God's making. How happy are those marriages where Christ is at the wedding! Let none but those who nave found favor in God's eyes find favor in yours. Husbands' should spread a mantle of charity over their wives' infirmities. Do not put out the candle because of the snuff. Husbands and wives should provoke one another to love; and they should love one another, notwithstanding provocations. The tree of love should grow up in the midst of the family, as the tree of life grew in the garden of Eden. Good servants are a great blessing; good children a greater blessing; but a good wife is the greatest blessing; and such a help—let him seek for her that lacks one; let him sigh for her that hath lost one; let him delight in her that enjoys one."

MAXIMS OF SPURGEON.

Judge a daughter by her mother. Do not throw the handle after the hatchet. Hear both sides or none. As is God's majesty, such is his mercy. Too much sail suits not a small boat. Call a fig a fig. Dependence on others is a bad breakfast and a worse supper. Leave it alone, if you cannot improve it. Those who are in the same boat should row together. Learn to hear, and hear to learn. Mind your courting does not end in court. He who is full of care lives a hare. Time enough is little enough. No bees, no honey. He that has no wife is poor. Never meet trouble half way. Before you get a bird, provide a cage.

The seed must die before the corn appears
Out of the ground, in blade and fruitful ears.
Low have the ears before the sickle lain,
Ere thou canst treasure up the golden grain.
The grain is crushed before the bread is made,
And the bread broke ere life to man conveyed.
Oh, be content to die, to be laid low,
And to be crushed and to be broken so,
If thou upon God's table may'st be bread,
Life-giving food for souls an hungered.

—R. C. Trench.

Happy the man who is poor through life and dies poor. He escapes innumerable annoyances and dangers. No fall in stocks or bonds, or failure of banks, troubles him. His house is sacred from the inroads of burglars; he is not tracked and murdered by highwaymen, or hustled by pickpockets. Those gentry are not such fools as to risk their necks or the penitentiary for nothing. Best of all, there are no long wrangles about his will after his death, including a ripping up and exposure to the public of all his private life. Many estates left for relations or good purposes are wasted among lawyers, and many are appropriated to their own use by agents, administrators, receivers, or executors. If he has only enough to maintain a family frugally and educate his children, he will escape more than half of the vexations which attend speculators and persons of wealth. And it will be far easier for him to be a consistent Christian than if he were wealthy. His children are also likely to prove good members of society than are the children of wealthy men. These thoughts are excited by the numerous and very expensive cases of disputed wills, and the more numerous defalcations of trustees, agents, and managers of great estates.

THE FIRST COPPER CENTS.

The earliest American copper coins made by any State were made at Rupert in Vermont, and before Vermont had been admitted into the Union. A mint was there established for eight or ten years, having a capacity to stamp sixty coppers, upon which the so-called "baby-head" goddess of liberty appeared; but truth compels me to say that this goddess was no more comely than that on the coins of the present day, although she was one hundred years younger. The owner of the mint, Reuben Harmon, was bound to pay the State two and one-half per cent for his privilege. At first these coins passed two for a penny, then four and then eight, when they no longer paid for the cost, mainly on account of the sudden competition of other States, and of the large importations of Birmingham hardware, commonly called "Bungtown coppers." We had no protective tariff then, and we have none now against "Bungtowns," whether of copper or silver.

In 1787, by authority of Congress, a contract was made with James Jarvis for three hundred tons of copper coin, of the Federal standard, and cents were coined at the New Haven mint of the following description: On one side thirteen circles linked together, a small circle in the middle with the words, "We are one;" on the other side a sundial and below the dial the words, "Mind your business."

In 1792 Congress authorized the coinage of a copper cent weighing 264 grains, which was reduced in 1793 to 208 grains, again reduced in 1796 to 168 grains, later to 140 grains, on which the so-called "booby-head" appears, and in 1857 to 72 grains, of which 88 per cent was to be copper and 12 per cent nickel. In 1864 it was once more reduced to 48 grains—95 per cent of copper and five per cent of tin or zinc. Finally in 1882 the last change was made, to three-fourths of copper and one-fourth of nickel, but the weight remains at 48 grains.

The frequent and wide alterations which have been made in our copper coins show that intrinsic value has almost vanished, and they bear no proportional value to other coins: but at the start, when copper bore a much higher price, the weight of the cent was fixed at five and a half times what it is now! In the southern portion of our country and especially on the Pacific coast, copper coins have been as uncurrent as the yellow-colored Chinaman, or for a long time they were practically tabooed, and even now they are unwelcome travelers much in need of a passport. Wherever not altogether snubbed the copper cent must pass, as Wood's notable copper coins must have passed in America or Ireland, far above any real value, and with little other merit beyond that of the dusky color now supplied on its face to our recent Indian image "Liberty." After common use these coins assume a deeper Ethiopic complexion and become petty nuisances, scents as well as cents, redolent of many coppery smells which are easily translated to other coins or to any thing with which they hold pocket intercourse. Copper as a metal is wondrously useful, daily becoming more so, but neither Lycurgus nor Hamilton would at this day think of stamping it as money. Certainly we can do better. If the cent and two-cent coins were now made wholly of nickel the government would obtain an ample seigniorage; and the nickel when compared with swarthy copper, is immaculate, or clean and bright. The importance of the cent coinage will be realized when we find that over 40,000,000 pieces were coined the past year.—The Interior.

A SAILOR'S STORY.

It was an unbroken waste of waters; the steamer had been at sea for four days. Rose was going to America to meet her brother who had sent for her. Knowing no one on board she was lonely. Having risen early one morning she stood by the ship's rail watching the sweep of the majestic ocean, and thinking of him who "holdeth the waters in the hollow of his hand." She found herself near an old sailor who was sitting on a coil of ropes mending a sail, and whose pleasant face invited conversation.

"Good morning," she said. "Have you been long on this vessel?"

"Yes, Miss; nigh onto ten years."

"Do you like the sea?"

"Well, Miss, I ain't good for much else than reefin' a tops'l or haulin' a bowlin', and it seems second nature for me to be on shipboard, and when I've been on shore for a month or two I always long to be off again, so I guess I may say I love the sea."

"Do you ever feel afraid when you are in an angry storm?"

"Never nowadays, Miss."

"Why do you say 'nowadays'? "

"Well Miss, if I gave you the reason I would have to spin you a long yarn."

"Can't you let me hear it?"

"Well, if it will please you to listen to an old tar's story, I have no objection, particularly if it will do you any good. First place, Miss, may I be so bold as to ask you if you are a Christian?"

"Yes; I love God and trust in my Saviour."

"Thank the good Lord for that! And now I can spin my yarn freer-like. Twenty-five years ago I was a wild lad, fond of my toddy and not good for much. My dear old mother prayed for me constantly, but I used to come home drunk and abuse her. God forgive me! Well, she couldn't stand it, poor body, and she took to her bed and died. Before she breathed her last she beckoned me to her bedside and said:

" 'James, I won't ask you to make me a promise; you have broken them too often, but I have put you into God's hands, and I know you will be saved. I die in hope. Good bye.' "

"Well, we buried her, and somehow or other I couldn't get her words out of my mind. I was dreadfully unhappy. I couldn't stand it and so took to drinkin' hard. We lived in a seaport town, and many of our lads were sailors. In one of my drunken sprees I shipped on a clipper ship running between New York and Liverpool.

"When I came to myself I would gladly have backed out, but I couldn't. I was a good common sailor, and concluded to make the best of it—for one trip, anyhow. We had one of the roughest passages the ship was ever known to make. You asked me if I ever feel afraid. I did then. I had to go aloft to take in sail when the wind was blowin' almost a hurricane. My conscience had troubled me ever since my poor mother's death. I felt I had brought her 'gray hairs in sorrow to the grave,' and I was afraid of God and the hereafter. I couldn't help feeling too that I might be a Jonah. Every time I went aloft I was in mortal fear of fallin' off the yards into the boilin' sea.

"There was a passenger on the ship who bunked in one of the stern state rooms; he used to go to the fo'cas'l on Sabbath and read to the watch below out of the Bible, and sing hymns to us about Christ. This used to trouble me; somehow it made me more afraid.

"One night, while 'way out on the main yard takin' up the end of the sail, the ship gave a sudden lurch. I lost my hold and fell into the sea. Miss, I can't begin to tell you the thoughts that went through my mind even before I reached the waves. I struck the water feet foremost and soon rose to the surface. I was a good swimmer and kept afloat with a faint hope that a boat might be lowered for me; but I knew the reputation for cruelty these clipper ships had, and how long it would take to bring the ship into the wind so as to lower a boat, and gave myself up for lost. What was my joy when I saw the vessel luff round and a boat leave her side! But it was difficult for the boat's crew to find me. At that moment a bright light gleamed out of the stern port of the clipper. It fell upon me as I rose on the top of a wave. It seems that the boat's crew at that moment caught a glimpse of my head and upraised arm. I was picked up and dragged on board so exhausted that I fainted.

"The next day was Sabbath. All night I lay wondering why God had so wonderfully saved me, for I was sure it was the flash of that light that rescued me. I began to thank God and then, somehow, I thought he must have some interest in me to do all this; and this broke me down and I prayed to him to keep hold of me and pardon my sins.

"Next day the man who used to read to us on Sabbath obtained permission of the captain for me to go into his state room for a while. I went in gladly, for I wanted to talk to him alone. I told him some of my bad life and how I felt the last night. He said:

" 'James, I was praying that this wonderful rescue might be blessed to you. Do you know where that light came from that flashed on you? It was from that reflector there in the state room. I took it down, opened my port and held the strong light before it. I swept the waves with it right and left until I found you, and then held the focus on you as steadily as I could until you were discovered and rescued.'

"I sobbed aloud. 'You saved me! You saved me!' was all I could say.

" 'But, James,' continued the good man, 'I asked for you not merely to tell you how my little light helped you, but to say that Jesus is throwing the full light of his tender love upon you. Your mother's prayers and hopes may be fulfilled to-night, if you will believe in his merciful love and give your life to him in gratitude.'

"More and more, Miss, did I believe that he did care for and love me. I said:

" 'Yes, yes, dear sir, I will believe and trust him!'

"He knelt down and prayed with me, and then and there I gave myself to Jesus.

"I haven't been afraid of the sea since, Miss; and if you are a Christian you know the reason. It is his beautiful ocean and he made it. I am his child and he loves me. He it is who holdeth 'the winds in his fists' and the 'waters in the hollow of his hand.' My Friend it was who walked once upon its waves and said, 'Peace, be still!' I may yet be wrecked and cast away in the angry waters, if he wills, but I have no fear, for I will be forever with him.

"I have followed the sea ever since, and by holding out to him the true light, my Saviour has permitted me to help and save many a poor fellow cast away on life's sea."

The old man's face glowed, and Rose as she gazed with tearful eyes, now knew the secret of the sweet serenity that beautified the weather-beaten visage of that Christian sailor. She held out her hand, and as he took it, she said with emotion:

"God bless you dear brother! You have preached to me a better sermon this morning on the broad sea than ever I heard on land, and it has done me a world of good."—Christian Observer.

TEMPERANCE.

THE OPIUM DENS OF LONDON.

The lazzaroni of Naples, the denizens of Seven Dials, and the poorer classes of Scandinavia and Russia have been to me an interesting study, but the experiences had among the opium dens of London are peculiarly unique. About thirty years ago a city missionary introduced me to the misery of Well Close Square, as revealed in a meeting of thieves and prostitutes whom he gathered once a week. There I saw unrest, dissatisfaction, a desire for a better life. Genuine emotion amounting to agony showed how sick of sin they were. Transitory perhaps, but sincere. Not so the appearances of the devotees of opium. One is reminded of Homer's story of Circe and her infernal wiles, by which her victims "drunk oblivion of their native coast," and lay like the lotus-eaters, content in sensual stupefaction.

My time allows me to record but a few ungarnished facts. Names and localities must be suppressed. My guide is kindly received where it would be difficult for the police to enter, and where it would be unsafe for a stranger. He has refused to act as an agent for the detection of crime for his work of Christian benevolence among the Asiatics would cease the moment he betrays their confidence and acts the part of a spy. Twenty languages have opened to him their lore. In one den he spoke in Arabic, and in another in Malay and in a third Spanish. Along the street we met Moslems and other Orientals, with a strange garb and a stranger speech. He talked with them as with townsmen. Though born in London, he has for thirty years labored among sailors and others of Eastern birth, studying meanwhile their various tongues.

It was early in the evening when we started. The sodden sky soon darkened into night. The street lights looked weird and dim as we turned out of the broader avenues into the narrower, gloomier streets of London, where sin and death find many victims. The first haunt was a gambling, as well as an opium, resort. It was kept by a Chinaman. Seven of his countrymen we found huddled together in a small, dark office room on the first floor, smoking tobacco. The opium bunks were not as yet filled, so we passed to the gambling den. This was in the third story of the old rookery. A small and crooked staircase led to it. A plain wooden table, four feet wide and five feet long, stood in the center of the chamber. A pile of Chinese coin lay at one end of the table, which was covered with coarse matting and bordered with a raised moulding, smooth, grimy and greasy. The keeper saw my interest in the fixtures and handed me two of the coin as mementoes, also a half-dozen chord sticks, which he sold to players at about a dime a hundred, to be burned before Quang Kong the idol, to insure success in the game. This god was placed at the side of the room and sticks were burning continually before it. These were also used, as wax candles before Romish idols, to secure peace to the souls of the dead. Sailors thus remember lost companions. This grim keeper is a desperate fellow. He has been in prison for a "knock-down and drag-out" affair. Knowing well my escort and his business, he relaxed his vigilant and cautious style and talked freely with his friends.

In the second den, a few blocks away, an attendant pushed aside a rolling section of the partition and we found ourselves in a sort of close dungeon, with but one occupant. He was reclining on a dirty, stenchful couch, but languidly sat up as he was approached and addressed. He took a bit of the drug that looked like tar and held it by a wire or bodkin over a small enclosed oil lamp. After repeated turnings, he thrust the drug into the earthen bowl of his long bamboo pipe and began to puff as he pressed the bowl against the dim flame. The bluish cloud that enveloped him was anything but agreeable to us. We remonstrated with him for his self-abuse, and in broken English he admitted that it was "no good." He was, however, joined to his idols, and so we let him alone.

The scenes of that Saturday night will never cease to haunt me. Space forbids minute embellishing details. I was glad to get a breath of outside air, foul as that was and was ill all night following. The fumes produced incipient vertigo, like certain anesthetics. A dozen pipes will produce intoxication and a score will induce torpor, dreamful or dreadful, according to circumstances.

We are to encounter in America, as here, an enemy in comparison with which, as a recent writer observes, alcoholic intemperance is almost harmless. New York has her opium dens as well as London. Their blear-eyed patrons are Americans. Both sexes and all ages are represented. What is to be done about it?—Prof. E. P. Thwing, in Congregationalist.

AN AID TO CURING ALCOHOLISM.

We believe the best authorities are generally skeptical as to there being any sure cure for confirmed habits of inebriety unless the effort in that direction be aided by a strong exercise of the will of the unfortunate subject of the bad habit. There are, however, many remedies recommended as aids in diverting or in a minor degree satisfying the appetite for strong liquors, which are undoubtedly of great advantage in some cases, and one of these is thus recommended by a self-styled "rescued man": "I was one of those unfortunates given to strong drink. When I left it off I felt a horrid want of something I must have or go distracted. I could neither eat, work nor sleep. Explaining my affliction to a man of much education and experience, he advised me to make a decoction of ground quassia, a half ounce steeped in a pint of vinegar, and to put about a small teaspoonful of it in a little water, and to drink it down every time the liquor thirst came on me violent. I found it satisfied the cravings, and it suffused a feeling of stimulus and strength. I continued this cure and persevered till the thirst was conquered. For two years I have not tasted liquor, and I have no desire for it. Lately, to try my strength, I have handled and smelt whisky, but I have no temptation to take it. I give this for the consideration of the unfortunate, several of whom I know have recovered by means which I no longer require."—Scientific American.

Joseph Cook recently answered the following questions in the course of his morning lecture service: "Is unfermented wine a fact in modern times?" There are in New York and Brooklyn, in London and Edinburg, many establishments which claim to sell unfermented juice of the grape. I am now entering upon the question as to the unfermented wine in Biblical times; for the inquiry does not bring up this vexed point. A distinguished chemist, whom I know very well, made a careful examination of all the processes of an establishment in London that claims to sell unfermented wine. He gave me authority to say that he was fully convinced that unfermented wine, or unfermented juice of the grape, is now sold in London and in many places in the British Islands. Thousands of English and Scottish churches use only what is called unfermented wine at their communion service. In the United States great numbers of the churches use only the unfermented juice of the grape at the Lord's table.

"Ought the use of such unfermented juice of the grape to be required in the communion service?" The question is one that should not be allowed to divide the churches and produce bitterness of feeling; nevertheless I believe that, in a quiet way, we ought to promote the use of the unfermented juice of the grape at the holy service of the Eucharist. There is not the least doubt that a reformed inebriate is justified in abstaining from the use of alcoholic wine at the communion service, lest it should awaken a thirst which he is unable to control. Offered wine by his pastor, a reformed drunkard may stumble over his spiritual misleader into temporal and eternal ruin.

—About fifty persons have turned to the Lord as a result of meetings held in Farmington, N. H., by Elder Mark Stevens.

The Churches.

—A revival begun among the Free Methodist brethren at Beaver City, Nebraska, has continued several weeks, and resulted in the conversion of some thirty persons.

—Prof. W. G. Moorehead, of Xenia, Ohio, has been chosen to deliver the annual address before the students of Union Biblical Seminary during the week of the approaching commencement.

—Rev. A. W. Geeslin, editor of the exposition of the grange sold at the N. C. A. office, is now employed as a soliciting agent for Avalon College.

—Rev. Halleck Floyd of Indiana, has been working in the interests of Union Biblical Seminary of Dayton, during the past two months, meeting with encouraging success.

—Bro. C. W. Hiatt, who has been recuperating at his father's home in Wheaton for several weeks, returned to Oberlin Seminary on Monday. On the evening before he preached to a large audience at the regular Sabbath evening service in Farwell Hall.

—At the Wednesday evening meeting of the Union Park Congregational church the new creed was read, and after considerable discussion there was a unanimous vote in favor of adopting it, thus being the first church to accept the work of the creed committee. Dr. Noble has been an able advocate of it, but at the meeting left the members to exercise the utmost freedom, and all passed off very pleasantly. Thus there is already a difference established between Congregational churches in this city, for we understand that Dr. Goodwin of the First Congregational church is opposed to the new creed, and doubtless will carry his congregation with him.

—Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D. D., of Xenia Theological Seminary, Ohio, preached Sabbath evening for Dr. Meloy in the United Presbyterian church. Prof. Moorehead is in Chicago to assist in the Training School for Christian workers suggested and urged by Mr. Moody when he last visited the city, and for which arrangements have been made by the church of which he is an officer.

—S. Y. Harmer, a retired Methodist Episcopal minister, author of the familiar hymn, "In the Christian's Home in Glory," and other religious poems, died lately at Clarence, Iowa.

—Miss Eunice Knapp who is associated with Mrs. Mumford in the Faith mission in Philippopolis, Bulgaria, relates in a letter to the Free Methodist how prayer was answered when the funds of the mission household were exhausted and help was asked for. She says:

"I hadn't the most remote idea how it was coming, but you know the Lord can do all things. Then I resumed my writing, finished my letter and sealed it up. The dinner bell rang and I went down. Mrs. M. proposed that we repeat a verse before eating. She repeated, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, and it shall return to thee after many days.' I wondered to myself what bread had been coming back to her, but said nothing. As Mrs. W. unrolled her napkin, out came seven gold pieces. Well, we were surprised enough. I concluded Mrs. M. had been out borrowing money somewhere, but she had not. About eight years ago she loaned a young man (a Bulgarian), some money to go to America with. He went, studied theology and medicine, and has now returned, and is preaching and practicing medicine in Sofia, Bulgaria. He had now returned part of the money, and this it was which came while the mails were stopped on account of the heavy snows, and just when we needed it so much."

—The rule of the Society of Friends, under the head of "Secret Societies" in the Discipline, reads thus: "We would affectionately and earnestly advise all our members against connecting themselves with any secret societies, although they may appear to be for the promotion of good objects, believing that their tendency is evil, and that they are calculated to lead from a dependence upon Christ and the Christian religion, and frequently into practical infidelity. If any of our members should so far depart from our Christian views and principles as to take a secret oath or participate in the vain and ostentatious shows and public processions, accompanied with music, badges, and other insignia of such societies, which we believe to be unbecoming a Christian, they are to be treated with, and if not brought to a sense of their error, to be disowned."

—A missionary writing of the recent meeting of Presbytery in Saltillo, says: "It was pleasant to see our only ordained native pastor in the moderator's chair, and his dignified manner, his deep, rich voice, and his simple earnestness proved more plainly than a multitude of words that the religion of Jesus Christ raises men to their true position. Five of the native evangelists were ordained pastors."

—The Rev. James Sadler gives a sickening account of how the Chinese of Amoy destroy their infant daughters. It is not regarded as a crime except among the native Christians, who labor to put their heathen neighbors in possession of a conscience on this subject. The Amoy Congregational Union has decided to raise money to receive and support infants abandoned to die or given over to destruction, and many have already been saved and baptized.—Presbyterian.

—The American Psychological Journal denies that religion tends to insanity, but affirms the reverse, that faith in God is a powerful preventive of that disease.

—A genuine case of leprosy, with all its attendant horrors, has been reported from Lincoln, Cal. The victim is a boy twelve years old. Cause, cigarette smoking.

—The Missionary Herald reports a legacy received from the estate of the late Geo. H. Williams of Putnam, Ct., amounting to $1,759.08. His "works do follow."

—A son of the commander-in-chief of the Japanese army was lately received into the Methodist church of Wilbraham, Mass., where he is attending school.

—A nephew of the King of Corea, a son of its prime minister, and the son of a military mandarin, have entered the Southern Methodist College at Shanghai, China.

—In a church erected at Komatsu, Japan, are two hundred stones that had been maliciously hurled at the Christian missionaries when they began their labors there.—Christian Weekly.

—Nine new converts among the Omaha Indians have been added to the church, and thirteen children baptized. Twenty-two conversions are reported among the Dacotas and seven among the Nez Perces. Fifteen new converts baptized at two inland cities in Japan. Seven new members admitted to the Second Church of Canton, China, and a church of twenty-three members organized at Lin Po, of whom nineteen were received by letter and four on confession of their faith. The church at Kolapore, India, reports four additions. One hundred and twenty have been received into the Syrian churches the past year. Eight members were received by two interior churches in Liberia. Two added to the church at Bahia, Brazil. One to the church of Bogota, U. S. Columbia. Rev. Henry Shaw reports ten new members baptized on a missionary tour from Monterey, Mexico.—Interior.

FRENCH CATHOLIC EVANGELIZATION.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Please allow me a small space in the columns of your fearless review to sound an alarm and make an appeal to those who profess to be and are in reality genuine Protestants and Christians. It is high time to awake out of sleep. Four years ago it was my glorious privilege to give up the Pope for Christ, to exchange the lying traditions of Rome for the simple and pure Gospel of Christ. When saved by the grace of God which came to me by the faith in Christ whom I accepted as my personal Saviour, I told him, "Thou hast saved me, save also my countrymen." Although a vile instrument, God has chosen me to bring to naught things that are; God often chooses the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, says Paul. Since my conversion many a mighty Roman Catholic has become a child of God. Missions have been established in New York and New Jersey where the God of the Gospel is worshiped in spirit and truth.

I have come in the West to continue my evangelistic work; already two missions are opened. Our French are certainly listening to the Gospel truth. God is moving among and around them. They have come to understand that Protestantism is the friend of order, peace and morality. In France the Word of God has free course and is glorified, no man forbidding and not a few rejoicing. In August, 1871, the Rev. Mr. McAll visited Paris, in January, 1872; he commenced his first meeting in Belleville; in 1879 he had twenty-three missions in Paris and four in Lyons, the stronghold of Romanism; and since the work has trebled and prospered beyond all thought, and the sphere has been widening year after year.

What is done there can be done in this Christian Republic of America among our various nationalities. There is power to lay hold upon great enterprises for God's glory and say, "They shall be done." Before the eyes of him who has this power enormous difficulties are only incentives to holy doing. Of all the grand things Paul ever uttered this stands as the grandest: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." To his help he does not summon the armies of heaven and earth, but God himself, and holds him in the grip of an all-prevailing faith. He seems to have prayed, "Give me the Roman Empire for Christ," and in the confidence that his prayer was heard he went to work to take possession of it. Not quite as ambitious as Paul, I would only say to God, "Give me the few thousands of French unconverted of Chicago." This can be done if only those who profess to be Christians were awaking out of their sleep.

In our days there is too much talking about the power and intelligence of the Protestants as a security against the general apostacy, of which we see so many signs in the horizon. No human power, no human intelligence will stand when God, in order to chastise his own children, will take away their lamps to deliver them into the hand of the merciless instrument of his vengeance, the Pope. Although the Pope who ordered the slaughter of the 75,000 French Protestants in France and tens of thousands of Protestants thrown down from the top of the high mountains of Piedmont on the naked stones, although that Pope is dead, the spirit of his church still lives, and we see it every day.

Last summer I visited France, Ireland, Scotland, and especially England. Previous to my visit in Europe I had heard many a time about the intelligence and the power of the English people being a bulwark against Popery. During my stay there I was quite astonished to see that God is extinguishing the lights in the midst of those "so wise Protestants of England." I saw that the reverse of my previous conceptions was true. I observed that England is a ripe fruit for the Romish church. There are thousands of Protestant ministers who do more than all the Jesuits of the world to prepare the English people to submit themselves to the "man of sin," to the Pope. Even the sturdy Presbyterian Scotland is now forgetting that they owe their glorious privileges, their liberties, their religious freedom, to a reformed priest, John Knox. The Jesuits are swarming there, and most especially in England. The whole of Lancashire is their stronghold.

Now, if we come back here in this land of America, look at New York for instance, the progress of the Jesuits is without parallel in history. Listen to their utterances. Hecker, a Paulist of New York, tells us in few words what this country will be in a near future if Protestants continue to slumber: "We will take this country and build our institutions over the grave of Protestantism." "There is ere long," says he, "to be a state religion in this country, and that state religion is to be Roman Catholic." "I would as soon administer the sacraments to a dog as to Catholics who send their children to the public schools," says Walker, another Romish priest. "Let the public school system go where it came from—the devil," says the Freeman's Journal of New York. All the bishops, priests, nuns, friars, monks, who enjoy the freedom of this country, all their journals are unanimous to curse Protestantism, the Bible. "We hate Protestantism," says the Catholic Visitor; "we detest it with our whole heart and soul."

If there ever was a solemn hour in which all the children of God ought to rally around the banners of Truth and Light, as found in the Bible, the great bulwark of this free American nation, and in Jesus and him alone, the great Captain of our salvation from sin, hell and Romanists, that hour has now come. Let the Protestants close their ranks and present a united front to the enemy by praying the Almighty God to send his precious gift to these benighted brethren, and this will be done by spreading the Gospel of Christ among these deluded people of every nationality. Among these various nationalities which form this vast empire there is one to whom Americans are indebted most especially, and it is the French nation, who, one hundred years ago, fought a good battle by the side of Washington to secure civil freedom and liberty to this country. Why now shouldn't they pay them by giving them religious freedom in exchange. In their name and for the sake of these French souls, I to-day come to your American Protestants to ask you to help me in this arduous but glorious and valuable work of love of rescuing the perishing souls. We want a more heroic faith to-day. We want men and women who, like Dr. Reynolds, the temperance reformer, can say, "I believe everything between the two lids of the Bible, whether I understand it or not."

It is high time to awake out of sleep. Let a true Christian spirit of Protestantism be revived. Let the children of the French martyrs be told when, where and why the blood of their fathers was shed. Let the origin, the tendencies, the errors, the crimes, the idolatrous worship of Rome be brought under the eyes of the people in their true colors. Let the Protestants be told what will become of their Bible if the church of Rome prevails. Let the citizens of this young country be warned of what will become of their liberties if the Pope succeeds in conquering this continent of America. Let us form altogether a strong Gospel current in order to resist the Papal aggressive tide with which we have to do in this country.

P. A. Seguin.

HUMAN CREEDS, DOUBTS AND DENIALS.

The new Congregational creed is a topic of great interest, and has ventilated the minds of many who reposed quietly in old forms. Hitherto Congregationalists have virtually been adherents of the Presbyterian Westminster Confession, but we find now that modern thought has outgrown that old standard, and church members of unquestioned character and intelligence plainly avow their unbelief and their desire for a change of their old creed language whilst they continue in these churches.

It was my fortune to attend a meeting on the creed in the large Union Park Congregational church in Chicago, where I heard language which not only fully justifies the above remarks but much more, and I charge creeds with the following evils:

They foster hypocrisy, by limiting to some special man-made form of words the doctrines of Christianity and by encouraging a professed conformity where it does not in heart exist. One most intelligent and respected gentleman being called on, said he was for years a Presbyterian, but did not accept all the creed, nor did he know any one who did! Yet he continued a member in silent conformity! Is not such conduct a stumbling block to young men and other enquirers of conscientious convictions?

But there was no enthusiasm for the new creed, and the belief was freely expressed that it would need to be modified within a few years. Allusions were made to some doctrines which seemed to be left open, such as future probation, but the majority agreed that for the sake of unity it was best to leave the words as they were. A college professor said he would personally have preferred that the day of judgment should be expressed as for "deeds done in the body," so as to shut off the possibility of regarding the judgment as being for deeds done in a state of future probation. But he would coincide with the prefereuces of his brethren.

Creeds cause divisions. Instead of members being agreed on the language of Scripture, yet having the right of personal interpretation, they force expressions on their members which often wound the tender conscience and check freedom of the mind and will, and cause such persons to leave the church altogether. Few men, indeed, can go through life with a stereotyped faith in everything. There will be modificatious and changes of opinion, even while admitting the correctness of the Scripture record. But this cannot be allowed towards merely humau forms of words. Hence divisions or hypocrisy.

Creeds are popish in character and adverse to the spirit of Protestantism. The creed, like the pope, becomes the authority for faith, and the criterion for religious education of the young—thereby weakening the supreme authority of the Scriptures over the mind and heart.

Creeds encourage skepticism. Skeptics point to the numerous creeds and scornfully treat the Scriptures as if they too, were man-made. As in the State there are differing political parties who do not question the Constitution, but are equally ready to maintain it, so there may be among believers iu Christ some differences which should uot cause "divisions;" for all should be one in him.

Creeds pro tem are to sects what the landmarks are to Freemasonry. They demand a nominal conformity to them even whilst members may not believe them. There are no doubt many Freemasons who, having entered into the lodge by misapprehension, find out their deception, but remain under, as it were, a moral protest, whilst outwardly true. Thus the lodge trains men to the practice of a like inconsistency as church members. How lamentable that the sophistries of lodgery and creedism should be so prevalent, and so enchain the noblest powers of man as spiders do flies, in the merest cobwebs, which fetter their heavenward wings and too often, alas! bind their souls to delusion and death! JOSEPH COOK ON THE NEW CREED.

Mr. Joseph Cook a week or two ago, at his Monday lecture, criticised the new Congregational creed with some severity. He was in turn pretty sharply scored by the Congregational journals and some of the professedly independent religious weeklies. Among the points made against him was one declaring that he had made assertions in regard to members of the Committee and other men that were not supported by facts. In the "postlude" to his lecture of Monday, March 24th, Mr. Cook vindicated himself thoroughly by reading letters he had received from Rev. Drs. E. K. Alden, A. C. Thompson, A. H. Plumb, and E. B. Webb, of Boston; Rev. Dr. W. S. Karr, Professor in Hartford Theological Seminary; Rev. Profs. Edward A. Park, D. D., and Austin Phelps, D. D. of Andover. These letters give ample support to the statements of Mr. Cook.

A vigorous attempt has also been made by some of the daily newspapers in various cities to induce their readers to believe that Mr. Cook has seriously injured his reputation, has shown himself to be ignorant, rash in utterance, and an untrustworthy instructor. The letters overthrow all such accusations. It is not a correct representation of the case to announce that Mr. Cook has lost standing by his treatment of the new creed; on the contrary, his courageous animadversions upon that document have strengthened the regard for him felt by those who believe the Bible and who have no sympathy with a retreat or anything that looks like a retreat before the attacks of unbelief or partial belief.—Christian Intelligencer.

Upon the same persons and topics the United Presbyterian makes some pertinent remarks:

"Several of the papers speak almost fiercely of Mr. Joseph Cook's discussion of the new Congregational creed, which, they allege, was unfair in both its spirit and analysis. Perhaps it was, but the disgust at it is itself unfair. Mr. Cook has been attacking something in nearly all his lectures and these papers have been delighted with it; now when his hammer falls on them they should bear it in a Christian spirit. They have no right to claim more mercy for themselves than they show to others."

"When Joseph Cook was paying his respects to the new creed, he said: 'The Solemn League and Covenant published in this volume which I happened to buy in Edinburgh, I read not far from John Knox's grave, at the midnight service in St. Giles's Cathedral, on the last day of the year 1880. The very touch of that book is electric. That scene, when three kingdoms adopted the League and Covenant for the guidance of their affairs; when Cromwell and Milton, and the great Presbyters of Scotland locked hands in the reformation of the foremost country at the present time, then just rising to its greatness, appears to me to be altogether too dignified and glorious an historic picture to be sneered at by any shrivelled successors of the Puritans and Pilgrims.' It is this refereuce to 'shrivelled successors of the Puritans and Pilgrims' that stirs up so much indignation."

—As a result of the revival at the Lake Avenue Baptist church, Rochester, N. Y., abont 120 persons have been baptized on profession of their faith in Christ, the one hundredth person baptized being a woman eighty-four years of age.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The House on Friday began the consideration of the pension appropriation bill, which reappropriates $66,000,000, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made last year, and appropriates besides $20,000,000. This is $20,000,000 less than the estimates.

—The Senate Monday last passed the educational bill. The measure as passed appropriates $77,000,000 to distribute among the States in proportion to illiteracy on the basis of the census of 1880, a payment of the money to be extended over a series of eight years.

—In the House of Representatives the proposition of Mr. Converse, of Ohio, to restore the duty on wool was defeated by a vote of 126 to 118.

—Mr. Blaine finished the last chapter of the first volume of his book on March 17. The first volume will be ready for delivery to subscribers somewhere near the first of May, so as to give them time to read it before the Chicago conveution. The secoud volume has been begun, and the manuscript is being furnished to the publishers by chapters.

—The Senate in executive session passed a resolution authorizing the President to recognize the African International Association as the ruling power in the Congo region; and the resolution will be certified to the President. The injunction of secrecy was not removed.

—A petition signed by about 12,000 of the Andersonville Survivors' Association, asking that the soldiers confined in rebel prisons during the late war be pensioned, has been received by the House.

—The friends of Fitz John Porter having become convinced that the President will veto the bill for his relief, have decided to lay it on the Speaker's table until after the Chicago convention, so that the President may not be able to make any politcal capital ont of the act.

COUNTRY.

—A Fourth avenue, Chicago, saloon-keeper, named Nutt, took out a $150 license to sell beer. He was detected selling whisky, and, with two of his assistants, was arrested. His case, the first under the Harper law, will be closely watched.

—A convention of twenty men, calling themselves the White Man Republican party, assembled Tuesday at Atlanta, Ga. A motion to call the new organization the Whig party was tabled. Arthur's administration was indorsed, and the Federal officials in the State were censured.

—The heaviest snowstorm of the winter prevailed Wednesday in the Pennsylvania coal region. Railroad travel is retarded and some collieries suspended. Heavy snow also fell in Maryland.

—Judge Jackson in the United States Court at Parkersburg last week Monday sentenced David C. Keller, pilot of the steamer Scioto when the collision between her and the John Lomas took place, at Miugo, Ohio, July 4, 1882, to pay a fine of $500 and serve two years in the penitentiary for manslaughter, of which he was convicted a few weeks ago.

—The Versailles (Ohio) Exchange Bank closed its doors Tuesday morning. The losses, about $60,000, fall upon the stockholders.

—The First National Bank of St. Albans, Vt., has been closed by the bank examiner. Speculation in stocks caused the trouble.

—The National Bank at Monmouth, Ill., snspended Tuesday, owing to a shortage in the accounts of Cashier B. T. O. Hubbard of $114,000, which he lost in speculation. Hubbard has turned over to the directors property worth 75,000. The deposits will reach $217,000, and public feeling is that the depositors will lose nothing.

—Heavy rains continue throughout California. The Southern Pacific Railway is damaged by washouts in different places, and persons that left for the East by that route Tuesday and Wednesday last were obliged to return to San Francisco.

—The Pocahontas (Va.) mine was entered Friday, and the remains of sixteen victims of the explosion were removed. Some were headless trunks, others had the arms and legs torn away, and all were unrecognizable, save by their wearing apparel or other special marks. Death was believed to be instantaneous in all cases.

—A few nights ago tweuty sheep in Poland Township, Ohio, were killed by being hurled by wind over the ground with frightful velocity.

—Immigration to the Northwest has set in for the season, and it is eveu larger than last year. It is probable that more people will go into Dakota and Montana than have gone any year yet, and the railways of this part of the country will be favored with an unusual degree of prosperity.

—In a collision on the Lehigh Valley Road, near Allentown, Pa., Friday, the fireman was thrown into the firebox and burned alive. Thirty cars were demolished.

—Freight trains were in collison at Steubenville and Scott Haven, Ohio, Saturday. At the former place both engines and a great number of cars were wrecked, and at the latter point the wreck blockaded the tracks for a quarter of a mile.

—The Cincinnati mob is having some effect npon the country. Michael Mooney, the Joliet convict-murderer, was sentenced by Judge Upton at Waukegan, Ill., Saturday, to be hanged May 23. Chist Rubling, for killing Albert Lucia, was sentenced at Sterling, Ill., to be executed May 16.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulatiou of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containiug all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excelleut history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5. Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HEALTHY VS. INJURIOUS BRAIN WORK.

There is such a thing as mind strengthening work. In truth, it is, as every physiologist knows, only by work minds, or more strictly speaking, brains, can be strengthened in their growth and naturally developed. The exercise of those centers of the nervous system with whose function what we call consciousness and intellect are associated, is as essential to their nutrition as activity is to the healthy growth of any other part of the organism, whether nervous or muscular. Every part of the living body is developed, and enjoys vitality, by the law which makes the appropriation of food dependent upon, and commensurate with, the amount of work it does. It feeds in proportion as it works, as truly as it works in proportion as it feeds. This canon of organic life is the foundation of those estimates which physiologists form when they compute the value of food in measures of weight lifting power. It is, however, necessary to recognize that, although these propositions are true in the abstract, they need the introduction of a new integer or combining power before any sum of results can be worked out.

We know that food is practically just as truly outside the body after it has been eaten, digested, and even taken into the blood current, as it is when it lies on the table. Nutrition is a tissue function, and its performance depends on the appetite and feeding power—which is something different from the organic need—of the tissue with which the nutrient fluid is brought into contact. Again, any particular part of the organism may be so exhausted by work that it has not power enough left to feed. It is a matter of the highest practical moment that this fact should be recognized. There is undoubtedly a point at which work ceases to be strengthening and becomes exhausting—self-exhausting and self-destructing so far as the particular tissue in activity is concerned.

Work may be carried too far, in fact to such a point that not only the last reserve of power for action, but the ultimate unit, so to say, of the force of nutrition, which is, as we now believe, identical with the force of general activity, may be expended in work and the organism left so utterly powerless that its exhausted tissues can no longer appropriate the food supplied or placed within their normal reach. We have said that it is necessary this should be understood. It has a special bearing on the question of brain work in childhood and adolescence.

Just as extreme weakness and faintness of the body as a whole produce restlessness and loss of control, so extreme exhaustion of the brain produces mental agitation and loss of healthy self-consciousness. This is how and why the "overworked" become deranged. One of the earliest indications, or symptoms, of brain exhaustion is commonly irritability; then comes sleeplessness of the sort which seems to consist in inability to stop thinking either of a particular subject or things in general; next, the mental unrestful or uncontrollable thought gets the better of the will, even during the ordinary hours of wakefulness and activity, which is a step further toward the verge of sanity than the mere persistence of thought at the hour of sleep—this way lies madness; and, finally, the thinking faculty, or, as we say, the imagination, gets the better of the will, and asserts supremacy for its phantoms, those of sight or of hearing being the most turbulent and dominant which happen to be most commonly used in intellectual work, and therefore must be developed by the individual cerebrum—this is madness. Such is the story of overwork of the brain or mind; and it is easy to see that at any stage of the progress from bad to worse the will may be overpowered, and the judgment perverted in such a manner as to impel the victim of this mind trouble to seek refuge in death, or to so disorder his consciousness that he supposes himself to be acting in obedience to some just and worthy behest when he commits an act of self-destruction or does something in the doing of which he accidentally dies. Such, in the main, is the story of suicide from overwork.

What, then, can be the excuse pleadable by those who heap on the brains of the young or adolescent such burdens of mind labor and worry as exhaust their very faculties of self-help and leave them a prey to the vagaries of a starved brain? We pity the suffering of those shipwrecked sailors who after exposure in an open boat, perhaps without food, for hours or days "go mad" and, raving of feasts and pleasures the antitheses of their actual experience, fall on each other or throw themselves overboard. Have we no pity for brains dying of lack of food because we have compelled them to expend their very last unit of force in work, and now they are distraught in the act of dying?

It may be a sublime ideal, that of a highly educated people; but if it should happen that the realization of this beautiful dream of our philosophic reformers can only be achieved by the slaughter of the weak, it will scarcely console the rational conscience to reflect that, after all, "the survival of the fittest" is the law of Nature.—Lancet.

RUNNING FOR TRAINS.

The Medical and Surgical Reporter cautions those persons who are in the habit of "running for trains" against the practice.

Even to one whose heart is sound, running, when not accustomed to such hurried movement, is certainly not beneficial to the delicate cords and valves of the heart; and should this organ be diseased, it must prove very injurious.

We all know that violent and tumultuous action is to be avoided when the heart is weak, and we also know that running is not the way to avoid it.

In our own experience, says the writer, we know several instances where men who had previously supposed themselves to be sound have run for trains, and getting aboard have fallen exhausted into seats from which they never arose.

Better miss a train than run the risk of running into the jaws of death; for this strain on the heart cannot prove beneficial to one that is sound, while it is likely to prove disastrous to one that is weak.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

IN BRIEF.

The Chicago Tribune publishes a list of dead co-operative insurance companies. In the New England States thirty one have gone "where the woodbine twineth." New York State adds thirty-nine to the list; Pennsylvania one hundred and ninety-four; Ohio eighty-four; Illinois and Kansas forty-one; and the South twenty. Total, four hundred and nine.

Many people are speculating as to the cause of the depression in the general business of the country. The fact that about $250,000,000 were expended last year in the construction of railroads, and that within the period included in 1879–'83, about $1,250,000,000 went in the same direction, would indicate at least one cause of our business difficulties. Many of these roads were not needed and will have to wait for profitable business until the country grows up to them. Others are competitive lines, and simply take away the profits of the older lines. The tendency has been to over-production, and there must be a stop, as the investment of unproductive capital cannot go on, and construction must gradually decrease until it has reached a sound business basis.

In a hut on a narrow street in the French village of Auberine-en-Royans, lives a woman whose age is declared, on evidence which the London Lancet accepts as authentic, to be 123 years. Her marriage certificate shows that she was married one hundred years ago last January. She has no infirmities except slight deafness, and she is comparatively erect. She is supported entirely on the alms of visitors, who come from great distances to see her; and in her household work she is assisted by her neighbors. She lives almost exclusively on soup made with bread. The neighborhood physician says she is never ill. Moreover, she is not one of the prodigies who thrive in spite of dirt aud neglect, but is of scrupulously clean habits.

"THE THIRD HOUSE."

ITS GOOD AND BAD MEMBERS—THE REMARKABLE EXPERIENCES OF A CLOSE OBSERVER OF ITS WORKINGS DURING A LONG RESIDENCE AT WASHINGTON.

(Correspondence Rochester Democrat.)

No city upon the American continent has a larger floating population than Washington. It is estimated that during the sessions of Congress twenty-five thousand people, whose homes are in various parts of this and other countries, make this city their place of residence. Some come here attracted by the advantages the city offers for making the acquaintance of public men; others have various claims which they wish to present, while the great majority gather here, as the crows flock to the carrion, for the sole purpose of getting a morsel at the public crib. The latter class as a general thing, originate the many schemes which terminate in vicious bills, all of which are neither directed at the public treasury, or toward that revenue which the blackmailing of corporations or private enterprises may bring.

While walking down Pennsylvania avenue the other day I met Mr. William M. Ashley, formerly of your city, whose long residence here has made him unusually well acquainted with the operations of the lobby.

Having made my wants in this particular direction known, in answer to an interrogative, Mr. Ashley said:

"Yes, during my residence here I have become well acquainted with the workings of the 'Third House,' as it is termed, and could tell you of numerous jobs, which, like the 'Heathen Chinee,' are peculiar."

"You do not regard the lobby as a body vicious, do you?"

"Not necessarily so; there are good and bad men comprising that body; yet there have been times when it must be admitted that the combined power of the 'Third House' has overridden the will of the people. The bad influence of the lobby can be seen in the numerous blood-bills that are introduced at every session."

"But how can these be discovered?"

"Easily enough to the person who has made the thing a study. I can detect them at a glance."

"Tell me, to what bills do you refer?"

"Well, take the annual gas bills, for instance. They are introduced for the purpose of bleeding the Washington Gas Light company. They usually result in an investigating committee which never amounts to anything more than a draft upon the public treasury for the expense of the investigation Another squeeze is the abattoir bills, as they are called. These of course are fought by the butchers and market men. The first attempt to force a bill of this description was in 1877, when a prominent Washington politician offered a fabulous sum for the franchise."

"Anything else in this line that you think of, Mr. Ashley?"

"Yes, there's the job to reclaim the Potomac flats, which, had it become a law, would have resulted in an enormous steal. The work is now being done by the government itself, and will rid the place of that malarial atmosphere of which we hear so much outside the city."

"During your residence here have you experienced the bad results of living in this climate?"

"Well, while I have not at all times enjoyed good health, I am certain that the difficulty which laid me up so long was not malarial. It was something that had troubled me for years. A shooting, stinging pain that at times attaeked different parts of my body. One day my right arm and leg would torture me with pain, there would be great redness, heat and swelling of the parts, and perhaps the next day the left arm and leg would be similarly affected. Then again it would locate in some particlar part of my body, and produce a tenderness which would well nigh drive me frantic. There would be weeks at a time that I would be afflicted with an intermitting kind of pain that would come on every afternoon and leave me comparatively free from suffering during the balance of the twenty-four hours. Then I would have terrible paroxysms of pain coming on at any time during the day or night when I would be obliged to lie upon my back for hours and keep as motionless as possible. Every time I attempted to move a chilly sensation would pass over my body, or I would faint from hot flashes. I suffered from a spasmodic contraction of the muscles and a soreness of the back and bowels, and even my eyeballs became sore and distressed me greatly whenever I wiped my face. I became ill-tempered, peevish, fretful, irritable and desperately despondent."

"Of course you consulted the doctors regarding your difficulty?"

"Consulted them? well I should say I did. Some told me I had neuralgia; others that I had inflammatory rheumatism, for which there was no cure; that I would be afflicted all my life, and that time alone would mitigate my sufferings."

"But didn't they try to relieve your miseries?"

"Yes, they vomited aud physicked me, blistered and bled me, plastered and oiled me, sweat, steamed and everything but froze me, but without avail."

"But how did you finally recover?"

"I had a friend living in Michigan who had been afflicted in a similar way and had been cured. He wrote me regarding his recovery and advised me to try the remedy which cured him. I procured a bottle and commenced its use, taking a tablespoonful after each meal and at bedtime. I had used it about a week when I noticed a decrease of the soreness of the joints and a general feeling of relief. I persevered in its use and finally got so I could move around without limping, when I told my friends that it was Warner's Safe Rheumatic Cure that had put me on my feet."

"And do you regard your cure as permanent?"

"Certainly; I haven't been so well in years as I am now, and although I have been subjected to frequent and severe changes of weather this winter, I have not felt the first intimation of the return of my rheumatic trouble."

"Do you object to the publication of this interview, Mr. Ashley?"

"Not at all, sir. I look upon it as a duty I owe my fellow creatures to alleviate their sufferings so far as I am able, and any communication regarding my symptoms and cure that may be sent to me at 506 Maine avenue will receive prompt and careful attention."

"Judging from your recital, Mr. Ashley, there must be wonderful curative properties about this medicine."

"Indeed, there is sir, for no man suffered more nor longer than did I before this remedy gave me relief."

"To go back to the original subject, Mr. Ashley, I suppose you see the same familiar faces about the lobby session after session?"

"No, not so much so as you might think. New faces are constantly seen, and old ones disappear. The strain upon lobbyists is necessarily very great, and when you add to this the demoralizing effect of late hours and intemperate habits and the fact that they are after found out in their steals, their disappearance can easily be accounted for."

"What proportion of these blood-bills are successful?"

"A very small percentage, sir. Notwithstanding the power and influence of the lobby, but few of these vicious measures pass. Were they successful it would be a sad commentary upon our system of government, and would virtually annihilate one branch of it. The great majority of them are either reported adversely or smothered in committee by the watchfulness and loyalty of our Congressmen."

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequeut conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to It.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

A POLE STAR

In the heavens of civil and religious liberty

—THE—

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies....and other anti-Christian Movements."
Able writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands, and from the different denominations contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath Observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, pointing out both the evils and the remedy. In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.
In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.
TERMS: $2.00 per year; special terms to clubs. Send for sample copies.

BUSINESS.

NOTES.

We again wish to call the attention of canvassers for the Cynosure to the necessity of their stating in their letters that there is an extra copy due them, when such is the fact.

1ST. Unless you do state it, the subscription clerk may not think of it.

2D. When you send in a few names at a time, it is impossible for us to keep the account so as to know when each has his quota of subscribers, for we have not the time.

3D. Some have preferred not to take any commission though sending in full clubs. But we wish it clearly understood that if anyone who wishes it has failed to receive his extra number of the Cynosure or any commission due, we hope that they will write us at once that we may correct the error.

4TH. We are doing the business for you, friends and if it is not done satisfactorily we hope you will write us a personal letter.

☞Readers ordering goods, or making inquiries concerning articles advertised in this paper, will confer a favor by stating that they saw the advertisement in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

LUCILE VERNON.

cloth.....75 cents.

THIS is a pleasant surprise in many ways. The author is Rev. W. T. Meloy, of the United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and the book is published by the Board of Publication of his denomination. It is a love story, not "fascinating," but with so much of genial interest that the reader is in no danger of laying it down unfinished. * * * The moral purpose of the book is to describe and vindicate Christian character, in its more heroic aspects, and it is a success. We congratulate the author and the United Presbyterian Board of Publication on this literary lily of the valley.—The Interior.

"LUCILLE VERNON" is evidently not an ideal sketch, but the fictitious names used represent to a great extent real men and women of flesh and blood. The characters of many of them are by no means attractive, but are perfect counterparts of querulous, obstinate and parsimonious professors who are thorns in the flesh of many a pastor in all the churches. But as in all the churches, there were also good and true men and women at Lansington, who upheld and encouraged the pastor. * * * In its author will be recognized the worthy pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and a welcome contributor to these columns.—United Presbyterian.

IT belongs to the class known as the religious novel. It is a love story written in the Pansy style, and so constructed as to teach sound moral and religious principles, in connection with quite an interesting narrative. Indeed, when the writer sat down to examine it, he commenced as a critic on the sharp lookout for blunders, but soon he became absorbed in the story, and forgot altogether his critical dutics. He also noticed that when the members of his family commenced to read it, they had but little time for anything else until it was completed. Tried as a work of art by the practical test, it must be regarded as a success. Its influence will doubtless be good in correcting false views, and in helping the reader to sounder principles and to a better spirit. * * * Some may think some of the scenes depicted are not true to nature, but the critic would be likely to find, on inquiry, that the very incidents which he would select as unnatural are actual facts. "We often find that truth is stranger than fiction."—D. A. W. in the Christian Instructor.

The heroine, who becomes the bride of the pastor of the church at Lansington, is a wonderful exemplification of how a woman who is a true wife and help-meet may throw her life and energies into the great work of saving souls; aiding, by gentle words and sympathy, wise counsel and brave endurance, the husband having charge of a congregation where the Demon of Misrule held full sway. We follow with interest the history of the wife and husband through their hours of despondency and discouragement to the happy ending, where religion, harmony and peace have gained the ascendency and the good man and wife find their reward.—Pittsburgh Daily Telegraph.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS,

OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, accurately true to life because mainly a narration of historical facts. 384 pages. In cloth, $1; per doz., $9. Paper. 50c; per doz., $4.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which it was the initial point, or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion, as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. This story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest."—Free Methodist, Chicago.

"The republication of the Reform Story which run through the columns of the Cynosure for nearly a year is at last completed, and the book so anxiously expected by thousands of our readers has come from the press of Ezra A. Cook. The book is finely bound and fairly introduces the reader to the treasures within. The publisher has made occasional seleetions from Masonic works to verify the statements of the text; these make a helpful addition for some who can afford no more complete an armory of this kind."—Christian Cynosure.

"In an incidental way the story tells much about the manner of conducting lodges and much about the spirit and methods of Masonry. The story covers the period of the abduction and murdering of William Morgan. The strategic position from which the author writes put a charm in the book, while it gives a good opportunity to show the workings of the order. We wish all the people would read it."—Telescope.

"It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."—Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O.

"The exciting scenes of the fall of 1826, at Batavia, N. Y., when Wm. Morgan was murdered by Masonry, are woven into the story so as to give the truth of History a setting of attractiveness. The forty chapters of the volume are soon compassed by the eager reader who begins the volume. This volume ought to be read and will be sought as its merits become known."—United Brethren in Christ.

"The story is intensely interesting and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order, which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Antimasons."—Wayne Co. Herald.

"Our Anti-secret society friends are certainly entitled to great credit for their persistence in their efforts to expose and root out secretism. The object of the writer of this story is to present in its true light the crafty, unscrupulous and exceedingly hurtful influence of Masonry, the parent of all the orders."—Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter.

Since the Chicago saloon-keepers have been obliged to comply to the Harper high license law, 2,131 five hundred dollar licenses have been issued and 382 for the sale of beer alone which figures at $150. To meet this license expense one association of saloonists asks for a lower rate on beer from the breweries and another decides to abolish free lunches. Already convictions have begun of saloons with a beer license for selling wine, and the authorities are taking no pains to prevent a continual violation of law in this way. This is one of the universal accomplishments of license, high or low.

The happiness and thrift of Switzerland, with her abundance of light wines, has been a glowing picture exhibited for years in this country by the patrons of the private wine cellars and of the expensive drinking places. The doggery they scouted and would join the prohibition fanatics in driving from the land; but the malt drinks and wines were the true temperance beverages. But their picture has faded, their ideal of a happy and prosperous country has vanished, for the Federal Council of Switzerland is now taking measures to save that country from utter destruction by drunkenness. Improvidence and poverty is increasing in proportion to the increase in the drinking habit. Much of the trouble is due to the imported French liquors, but the love of drink was co-existent with the wine-drinking habits of the people. A national commission, such as our Congress has long been importuned to appoint, was chosen to investigate the cause and result of the Swiss drinking habits. Their report last fall was a fearful array of the evils of drink, and the agitation that has followed will result in severe measures by the state, and no cold-blooded plea about sumptuary laws is likely to stop the prohibition movement.

President Taylor of the Mormon church declares there are no waifs and strays in Salt Lake City. But Kate Field, the well known correspondent and lecturer, confirms the estimate of Governor Murray that there are more of that unfortunate and vagabond class there than in any other town of equal population. And the Mormon authorities are relaxing no effort for the increase of the number. The other day three hundred Mormon emigrants from central Europe landed in New York, most of them young women for sacrifice to the Mormon demon of lust. The Chicago papers of Saturday announced the arrival of two carloads of Mormon missionaries, on their was to Europe for more women. Shall not this business end until we have a Cincinnati mob about it?

The Pope has issued a new encyclical letter against Freemasonry and other secret societies which will be printed in this country this week. The Paris Defense says that the argument of the letter is based on the theory that the Masonic system leads to a denial of Christ. The theory is good for facts prove it: and we shall not object to a good article on this topic, though it may come from the Vatican.

A summary of this letter has already been telegraphed from Rome. This abstract says that the Pope believes the press, marriage, education, the sovereignty of the people, the atheism of the state, are all drifting toward a return of paganism, and for this secret societies generally and Freemasonry in particular are responsible. He holds that the plan of the secret societies is no longer a mystery, that it is a struggle against the church, that Masonry deceives the innocent by a varnish of toleration, but is in fact the source and strength of socialism and has placed the papacy in an intolerable situation. The Pope holds that governments should choose between Masonry and the church, "which sustains authority and inculcates obedience," and he directs bishops to "unmask secret societies and make people abhor them," to extend Christian education, to urge the people to form Catholic associations, and to train the children never to join any society without consulting their priests.

Dr. Gatling, the inventor of the piece of ordnance which bears his name, says he was led to invention from the emotion aroused on seeing the bodies of dead soldiers brought home during the first year of the rebellion. He was then living in Indianapolis. One day he say nineteen coffins at the depot, all but three of the bodies within having perished from disease. He was led to consider that a gun might be invented which by the rapidity of its firing should do the work of a hundred men, so that but few need be exposed to the dangers of the camp and more remain at home. The result was the Gatling gun which will shoot two miles or more at the rate of 1,200 a minute. If the new air-gun for the discharge of dynamite is perfected, we shall have another formidable weapon, far more terrible than ordinary cannon and easily managed by two or three men. But if war is reduced to a battle with machinery what shall be done for victims? Dr. Gatling's humanitarian invention has not yet given us much hope that it will help to a disbandment of armies or the settlement of difficulties without war. It has been in constant use for twenty years, but few armies have been thereby reduced or wars cut short. The age of peace which only Christ can usher in is heralded by other tokens than machines for killing men.

When Freemasons, Odd-fellows and the "Grand Army" select candidates for quiet, unambitious citizens who prefer not to take their rights of suffrage through the medium of a secret lodge we shall more and more often be astonished at sudden reports of wide-spread organizations for political purposes. Such is the news of the "New Era," a secret Ben Butler society—why should not Butler have his society as well as Logan his Grand Army? The existence of the New Era, say the telegrams from Washington, "has been kept as secret as possible, but it has made startling progress. Its members have been recruited from greenback and anti-monopoly clubs, trades unions, Knights of Labor assemblies, and from malcontents in both the old parties. They are all oath-bound, under the best of discipline, and are now beginning their public work for the first time in creating a strong sentiment for Butler's nomination for the Presidency. The wonderful growth of this secret political organization can best be explained by stating that in less than a year it has secured a membership of 40,000 in Michigan, 100,000 in Illinois, 30,000 in Wisconsin, 35,000 in Iowa, and even greater numbers in New York and Pennsylvania, while it has a vigorous organization all through the West, and even among the laborers and greenbackers of New England. The farmers' alliances have also increased in the West under some secret stimulus, and even the old grange association finds itself unconsciously raising its head again and drifting toward a Butler movement."

Richard Oglesby joined the Grand Army of the Republic in January just before the State "Grand Encampment" at Decatur, Illinois. Everybody knew his object—he wanted the nomination for governor, and he has it. The 17,000 members of that secret order have decided for the rest of the voters of Illinois. Another man wanted to be lieutenant governor. He was a Freemason of thirty-three degrees; at the time of the Chicago Knight Templar conclave he was the "Grand Commander" of that order in the State; has also been one of the highest officials among Illinois Odd-fellows. He got what he wanted, although it would be hard to say what are his qualifications for the office. He has been State Treasurer and $15,000 was reported stolen from his office; but the vague report of the robbery and equally vague and improbable report that he had made good the loss was all the voters ever heard of the matter. In placing Oglesby and Smith at the head of their ticket the Illinois Republicans have acknowledged their subserviency to the lodge, and every true and patriotic American citizen should separate himself from such a party.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

BY REV. B. F. WORRALL.

I do not remember of being told what star ruled the hour when I was born; or, if I had been so informed I have entirely forgotten which of the planets set its seal to my destiny, so that I could not avoid taking my stand on the unpopular side of reformatory and other questions. Consequently I was an Abolitionist in the ante-bellum times—am now a Prohibitionist, an Anti-secretist and a Second Adventist so far as the coming of the Lord is concerned, "nor doth it yet appear what I shall be."

It is possible that as a Premillenarian, I may attach an undue importance to the signs of the times, and may fail to see in the riot of Cincinnati the unmistakably indication that the angels will have but few, if any tares to remove from the field when the reaping time has come. Be that as it may, my faith in the declaration that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," was not shaken by that outbreak of the pent up passions which are only awaiting their time when the leash shall be slipped, and the yelping of the hell-hounds will be heard in the land in their hot pursuit after blood.

Nor were my pessimistic notions greatly modified on reading in the Congregationalist of the 3d inst., an editorial headed, "Moral Reform in Cities." For the benefit of those who are entertaining the notion that when the Son of Man comes he will find but little faith on the earth instead of universal piety, we will quote the first paragraph, which contains the key-note of the article. The writer says:

"During tbe last two or three years tbe moral condition of Boston has degenerated rapidly. Gambling hells, liquor saloons and brotbels have multiplied swiftly, and have carried on their work of corruption and ruin with sbameless and increasing boldness. As tbe population of any large city grows, the proportion of its vicious people to tbe respectable is apt to increase. At any rate the actual number of the immoral of all sorts enlarges rapidly, and the problem bow to deal witb this element sooner or later becomes solemn, not to say appalling. We are facing that problem just at present in tbis city. One of its worst features is tbe fact tbat it looks as if some of the police force bave been in league with offenders of tbe worst sorts, to such a degree that it bas become almost impossible to make a successful raid upon any den of iniquity, because its keepers were sure to be warned in ample season to prepare for it. Wc bave no doubt tbat tbe same corrupt partnersbip of criminals witb tbe supposed enforcers of the law exists elsewbere also."

And can it be that the Bostonians are growing no better fast. Had such a statement as the above been made of Chicago, or of some other city in the West, we might still hope that the world was pressing on with rapid strides toward the millennial glory which some fancy will precede the coming of the Lord, notwithstanding the falling away in that quarter. But when the shadow is going backward on the dial in the East whither shall hoodwinked humanity go in search of light? We are glad that the good people at the "Hub" are facing the problem, and we hope they will be led to a wise solution of the same, and that when they have learned the true source of the danger now threatening them, they will promptly remove it, no matter what the cost may be. Had they faced the music a few years ago, and quit themselves like men, Charles A. Blanchard and others of his way of thinking, would have told them how it was that wrong-doers of every name "were sure to be warned in ample season," to make good their escape from the police force which was, and still is, "in league with offenders of the worst sorts." Why should any one be surprised at such a deplorable state of things, when he remembers that in Boston and elsewhere, there are a host of secret societies which oblige their members to assist each other, "right or wrong," and to give the brotherhood timely warning of the approach of danger, "murder and treason," in some cases excepted.

And now that the mayor and the good people of Boston are waking up to the importance of law and order, and are recognizing the necessity of having a police force which is not in sympathy with the disturbers of the peace, it might be well for the venerable ex-President of Wheaton College to call on them in the hour of their affliction and show them the way out of their difficulties by reading to them the sworn obligations of Royal Arch and other Masons, and commenting thereon undisturbed by mob violence, in sharp contrast to other days not soon to be forgotten.

Olathe, Kans., April, 1884.

INVESTIGATIONS.

BY GEN'L J. W. PHELPS.

Since the days of Lincoln's lax administration, the false glory of which is kept alive for political not for any useful purposes, there have been a great many investigations. These have all resulted in nothing, save and excepting only this, viz.: they all prove that President Lincoln's administration was very lax; one in which every vice could easily take root and grow.

But when the country is in the line of investigation, why not be thorough and go to the bottom of matters? For instance,—has it ever been proved that the crew on board the City of Columbus were not working the lodge instead of working the ship? Has it ever been properly shown that the lodge does not lie at the bottom of every one of the enormous frauds that have been committed in and around Congress during the last twenty years? Is the American people fully aware that Congress, by chartering the Masonic lodge in the District of Columbia just twenty years ago, transferred a very large part of the power of the people's representatives to the leaders of the lodge such as Andrew Johnson, Mr. Hayes, Gen. Garfield, Gen. Butler, Gen. Logan, Ben Perley Poore, Albert Pike, Robert Morris, etc? These politicians and numerous others have had the threads of political action placed in their hands by the lodge, so that they could easily tell through a Brady or a Dorsey, or other willing agent, where a few "promises to pay" would "do the most good." They can control not only political affairs but also Congressional legislation and the interests of the country.

In investigating the Star-route frauds what power is there at work to prevent the discovery of the truth which everybody knows? Is not that power one and the same with that which is subverting all our courts of justice, viz.: the Masonic lodge? Is it not absurd for Congress to part with its power to the Masonic lodge of the District of Columbia, and then think to be able to expose and punish crime? When the lodge is thoroughly at work in all the departments of government, what chance is there left for the wholesome operation of the Constitutional powers of Congress?

Who were the men in power, or were supposed to be in power, at the time of the commission of the Star-route frauds? (for those frauds are a good example of what the lodge can do). They were Mr. Hayes, Mr. Evarts and some other great lawyers. Why were they so silent while that fraud was incubating? Why are they not held accountable for it? Why are they not appointed to investigate it?—for certainly they ought to know more about it than anybody else excepting the parties concerned, or the leaders of the lodge.

Mr. Lincoln's administration is extolled for abolishing slavery, which had been a foregone conclusion in the popular mind for at least thirty years; but in lieu of slavery which the lodge shielded and fostered, Mr. Lincoln's administration has given us the lodge itself as a legally recognized power, which is far more hostile to our liberties than slavery itself. If Mr. Lincoln had called in the aid of French or English troops, which probably might have been had, so ready was all Christendom to fight for our cause, and those troops should have remained, on their own account, as garrisons of all our chief cities, they could not be so formidable a foe to our institutions as is this Masonic lodge which President Lincoln's administration invested with charter powers. Never before in the history of the Republic had Congress ever ventured on a step so mean, so unworthy, and so dangerous to the noble character of our American institutions. The lodge is a wooden horse which Lincoln's administration received from the slave-power, and dragged into the citadel by tearing down the safeguards of the Constitution to give it admission.

No one will admit that President Lincoln's administration was intentionally bad. No one will accuse him "of paving hell with bad intentions;" but neither can any man of just sentiment deny but that his administration has supplied ready and abundant material for that purpose. The old Whig and Anti-masonic sentiment which gave character to his election became utterly forgotten under his administration; and he himself, a pattern of personal kindness and generosity, lost his life by a member of that same band of assassins which his administration had chartered. The Anti-masonic element that entered Mr. Lincoln's election to the Presidency, was utterly betrayed by the act chartering "Masonic Hall Association;" and a member of the lodge in return betrayed him, taking his life.

Among the numerous crimes and vices that present themselves for investigation of late years, it would be well to present Lincoln's administration for that purpose, for its short-comings are likely to prove the source of many errors, which, if their cause is seen, may possibly be prevented. Whatever persons may think due to Mr. Lincoln's character as a man, it is time that the old Whig and Anti-masonic sentiment should also receive its due; for while that sentiment was the moving power that gained everything that was gained to the cause of our Republican institutions during and since the war of the rebellion, the sentiment itself has become wholly lost light of in the adoration which has been paid to the Masonic lodge hidden under the blaze of Lincoln's glory. One of the first necessary steps towards the indication of that sentiment, and to render it once more an active factor in our civil and religious affairs, is to rally it to the work of sweeping out of existence that odious lodge-power which Congress chartered in April, 1864.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"Brother Peck used to relate a story," said Mrs. F., "that I think was never in print, and might make a good one to write out for publication: Father A. was an itinerant Methodist minister of the old times; a powerful preacher, but a very illiterate man, hardly able to sign his name. Bro. Peck heard him at a camp-meeting in Connecticut more than sixty years ago. He took his text from the chapter about the servant and his one talent: 'I knew that thou wast an austere man;' but as he was not a ready reader he made a mistake and called it oyster man. People smiled and wondered what he would make out of such a queer text. But it was enough for Father A. to believe that the text was in the Bible and that God told him to preach from it. He described the man going into the oyster beds, raking them over, separating the bad from the good; and as he went on the smiles faded out, sinners cried for mercy, scoffers trembled and saints rejoiced, for the Spirit attended his words with power. I believe, but I am not quite sure, it is so long ago, that brother Peck owed his conversion to Father A's. sermon about 'the oyster man.' Anyway he used to say it was the grandest sermon he ever heard preached. Hundreds were converted, and a great work of grace began which spread over all that part of the country."

The truth that God can work through the feeblest instruments has been so generally accepted as a theological doctrine that the tendency is to lose sight of it as a mighty and significant FACT; a fact so full of precious encouragement that every Christian worker ought to keep it constantly before him. We need all the help and stimulus we can get, and many of us get very little. Surely when God's Word is strewn with promises like the stars in the sky for multitude; when even its toughest, thorniest doctrine bears, like the cocoanut, milk for the weakest believer at its heart, why should we be discouraged as if anything could be lacking that we really needed to equip us for his service. "God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the things which are wise, and the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty." This is one side of that doctrine of election which has troubled so many souls, as if the omnipotence of the Divine will was a grim barrier across the path of salvation, instead of being like a great rock for strength and refuge, with its cool refreshing shadow in the hot weary noontide, its tiny wind-flowers waving in and out of every crevice. When we wonder if it is possible for our feeble selves to do any great thing for God, is it not a world of comfort to know that he can use our ignorance, our lack of talents, our stammering tongues; nay, that he deliberately makes choice of what the world despises? The laws of grace are all on the side of the feeble and ignorant. Dear Christian brother or sister, afraid to speak a word in season lest it should not prove the right one; afraid of lifting the voice in prayer or exhortation lest you should make some blunder that would cause thoughtless ones to smile; afraid to speak out when you hear Gospel truths assailed because you have never read Huxley, Darwin and other "advanced" thinkers; afraid to bear your testimony against some popular sin because those "who seem to be pillars" in the church and community are all silent; you may be as you say, unlearned, unlettered, slow of speech, but God does not need your wisdom, your strength, or your eloquence with which to defend his truth. He is greater than all your mistakes, and he can take every blunder which has an earnest loving purpose to serve him behind it, and work out with it the grandest results.

Mistakes are a part of our Christian training just as much as blots and crooked letters are a part of a child's copybook. The Bible from Genesis to Revelation has not a single promise for the strong or the wise; they are all for the weak and the ignorant. Then let us be willing to make blunders for God's glory which is truly as Faber sings:

* * * "A wonderous thing,
Most strange in all its ways;
And of all things on earth least like
What men agree to praise."

"O NIGHT WAS MADE FOR PRAYER!"

BY JAMES HOMER KENNEDY.

O night was made for prayer!
When the vain world is shut out from our view,
And God is everywhere!
While the stars hold their midnight watches true—
O night is made for prayer!

Lift up thine earnest voice,
O, child of poverty and dust, to Him
Who bids thy soul rejoice;
Though every star that lights thy life grow dim—
Lift up thine earnest voice!

God is the joy and light
Of Heaven and Earth!—though sinful dust may brood
Darkness, and death, and night,
Of thy heart's faith, and love, and gratitude,
God is the joy and light!

Lift up thy voice in prayer!
God is thy sun and shield,—the hours of shade
His awful glory wear!
For prayer and praise sublime, O night was made—
Lift up thy voice in prayer!

Celestial, Heaven-imbued,
Eternity lies open to thy gaze
With its infinitude
Of suns, beyond night's solitude, that blaze,
Celestial, Heaven-imbued.

Contemplate those bright stars
And constellations, that in grandeur shine;
Forget earth's petty jars:
Read on thy knees the Book of Truth Divine—
Contemplate those bright stars.

O Heaven, immortal Heaven,
Has many sweet attractions!—they are there
Who joyed in sins forgiven,
And used to join with us in solemn prayer—
O Heaven, immortal Heaven!

Thou art our ransomed home—
Thou hast our treasures, and our hearts,—from thee
Our spirit-raptures come;
Our friends again in glory we shall see—
Thou art our ransomed home.

Like the night-firmament,
Who many turn to righteousness divine,
As stars, the excellent—
They that be wise shall shine, forever shine—
Like the night-firmament.

O night was made for prayer!
Yes, light about us art thou raven night;
God's presence everywhere
Is felt—thy darkness veileth not His light;
O night was made for prayer!

Woodbine, Ill.

Whatever may be the minor differences in the various secret orders, which as unrepublican fungi infect the body politic, and the social fabric of the American Republic, the one instinct of a desire to be seen on parade, moves all of them. No opportunity is allowed to pass unimproved in the which they may thrust themselves before the public, and especially so when they can make it appear they are thereby playing the benefactor.

We remember some years ago on the prairies of western Iowa, there died a man who, for some fifteen years previous to his decease, had not attended lodge, and since leaving the East, had paid no dues, and considered himself outside. But the Masonic lodge in the village twelve miles away heard of his demise, and although the wife did not want them, and the children did not want them, nor did any of the neighbors want them, they came to bury him, and without any expressed wish on the part of the departed, they thrust themselves between the corpse and the relatives. This recollection has been revived in reading how the Knights of Pythias, in a certain Texas town, hurried up to get hold of the remains of a desperado, whom some one had shot, and who was being brought home for interment. These secretists must be seen in their regalia, and their mummeries must be heard, if they have to trample on the most sacred of family rights or make a demi-god of a desperado to get the chance.—Free Methodist.

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF.

That was an extraordinary spectacle which was lately exhibited in Washington by ambitious candidates for the Presidency. It was in Masonic Hall, and the audience consisted of fifteen hundred soldiers of the standing secret Grand Army of the Republic, an army which appoints its own officers; makes our Presidents, and owes no allegiance to anybody but itself or the lodge. There sat the Presidental candidates upon the stage—Grant, Arthur, Logan, Hawley, Lincoln—while to the bows that they made and the words which they uttered, the soldiers thundered back long and loud applause. Gen. Grant told how President Lincoln had made him a handsome apology, although President Lincoln had never apologized to the American people for failing to execute their Constitution in its provision against treason, nor had Grant enabled the law to punish treason.

Now, wherein are these appeals of Presidential candidates to Grand Army soldiers for political support any different in principle or in dangerous tendency from the appeals made by Roman generals to the pretorian soldiers for their support in grasping at the Empire?

Why does Gen. Grant aim at a third term? Did he not do his work thoroughly while commanding General and President that he should seek office now in order to complete what he failed to do then? Does he advance his own short-comings as a claim to additional distinction? The twenty-six hundred thousand men that were furnished to him by the Republic to secure the reign of peace and law are now appealed to in order to make himself—what but an Emperor? Never did a Roman general appeal to the foreign German or Gaelic soldiery for the support of his aspirations to the Empire with more illicit promise of return than Gen. Grant now appeals to rebel soldiers for their support in his aspirations to the Presidency. He appeals to rebel soldiers and to Democrats, not to American citizens, to make him President; and what does he offer in return but "pensions to all?" And wherein were the other Presidential aspirants on the stage any safer representatives of American interests than he? Has Gen. Grant done anything towards Americanizing the rebel soldiers? Does he intend to Americanize them except by buying them off with pensions? That is the way that foreign soldiers were Romanized. But it resulted in terrible chaos and confusion. Is not history repeating itself with us? KITCHEN GARDENER.

DANCING AT THE CAPITAL.

Dancing is the favorite amusement at the capital of our nation. Accompanying a President's induction into office occurs the "inaugural ball." The people even danced at a fair held for the purpose of raising money for a memorial hospital in honor of Mr. Garfield. One day in tears; the next reveling. He was hardly laid away before arrangements were being made for a series of balls.

During this gay season we had room and board in a temperance house, a few feet from Masonic Hall, the popular resort of all who like to "trip the light fantastic toe." Some of the churches and societies got up a series of fairs, ostensibly for charity, but more for balls, and for twenty-four nights music and dancing were heard, often until three in the morning, when the affairs appeared to break up in a row.

Once or twice we had the curiosity to look down into the hall below and see those in attendance. Though in mid-winter and very cold, the ladies were dressed in light, airy costumes, many having low necks and short sleeves, all in harmony with the place. First came enchanting music from a band; and as we listened to this night after night, we could not but think of the base use which is often made of music. Though innocent in itself, in the hands of wicked men it is made to appeal only to the passions. In the hands of those skillful performers, it became louder and quicker, until the eager, restless throng, impatient to begin, commenced swinging around, face to face, in lascivious embrace, in the so-called round dance. Never before were we so much impressed with the ensnaring nature of the dance. Could any be respectable who were thus engaged? Would a decent man ask a woman to go to such a place? As the evening advanced the rattle of glasses and the noise of falling bottles in the alley below told too plainly that the usual accompaniment of the ball-room was there. After this the crowd became more noisy and boisterous, the musicians partaking in the excitement, and making strange medleys in time and music, while the confusion which followed brought to mind the words of the old adage, "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad."

Just before Lent the annual ball for the benefit of the orphans came off. It was then, as always, the great social event of the season. This had more prestige than the others from the fact that the President and members of Congress, and their wives, were expected to attend. It gave those ladies (many of whom are light and gay) an opportunity of making a display of their charming toilets—a consideration of great importance, as would appear from the way in which such things are written up. If any had scruples about dancing, they were dismissed with the thought that it was helping the orphans. They reasoned, like many others do in regard to such matters, that the end sanctified the means. The ball-room that evening presented a scene of great brilliancy, with old and young together. Still the same objectionable features were there; only it was wickedness in a more refined and subtle garb. The elegant silks and velvets in the ladies' trains, dragging on the floor, cost more than all made that night for the orphans. It is needless to say that many were there who would not think of exposing themselves going to church or to hear a lecture on moral reform. The Cabinet officer, with his eight-thousand-dollar salary, was there; and the government clerk, whose salary is barely enough to pay his board and washing. The gambler and libertine were there. Masons and their wives were there. The young man and woman far from the hallowed influences of the home were there, listening to the voice of the tempter. No wonder there are sometimes sad wrecks among those who have left their homes to go to Washington for clerkships. The old officials set a bad example, and the young follow it. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Many a young man has learned to love the cup that inebriates, in the ball-room and dance-house. Worn and tired with their lawful work and late hours, they are ready to fall before temptation. Soon reputation is gone, and they are turned out of employment, friendless and penniless.

When the Lenten period set in all these gaieties ceased. With whom this conventional custom originated we do not know, unless with Episcopalians and Catholics, whose observance of Lent is as strictly kept as the Sabbath.

At the capital, as everywhere else, this love of pleasure and amusement is growing, and it is becoming more and more difficult to draw dividing lines. "How can I be most amused and find most pleasure?" is a question oftener asked than "What must I do to be saved?" The enemy of souls could not have invented a more insidious way of leading folks astray than by promiscuous balls. It appears as if Masons wanted to familiarize old and young with Masonry and the lodge. They build and rent halls, and the vilest are admitted provided they pay their fees at the door. All their boast about protecting wives and daughters is mere pretense. They not only permit liquors to be used on their premises, but they use them at their banquets, thus giving the lie to their boasted temperance principles.

We have given but a faint picture of the temptations of society life in Washington, as seen from our standpoint. Reader, would you like to have your wife, daughter or brother attend balls in such places? Then be careful not to begin to dance in the home. It is a growing passion, and one which needs curbing, or it will end, as we have been describing, in the public ball-room. Time spent in this way is not safe or profitable for this life; and what of the life to come? "As a man soweth, so shall he reap."—Mrs. S. J. Collins, in the United Presbyterian.

A correspondent says: "Your short article on the 'Religion of Masonry' in your last issue reminded me of an occurrence which took place in this town —— last week. I had it from the lips of one who was present and heard it. They were burying a Mason. The services took place in a Methodist Episcopal church. The pastor said among other things, in referring to the fact that the man was a Mason, Odd-fellow, etc.: 'The question once was whether a man could be a Christian and belong to these orders. The question now is whether a man can be a Christian and not belong to them.' This is further than I had ever known any man to go in advocacy of these orders. Is it not dreadful? And a minister of the Gospel too! I was told farther in regard to the death and funeral of this man, that the Odd-fellows had taken care of him—two of them being appointed to be with him in the day and two in the night. When he died one of the Odd-fellows went to a hall near by where he found three Masons playing cards. He told them that Mr. —— was dead. They looked up from their game and said, 'Is he?' and then went on with the game. The dead man had requested that he should be buried by the Odd-fellows and Masons jointly. But the Masons said nay, and they and the Odd-fellows almost came to blows over the dead man. Two or three Odd-fellows took part in the funeral services, but they were also Masons, and wore the Masonic regalia. Notwithstanding all this a minister of the Gospel could say that to put a man's religion beyond a doubt he must belong to one or other of these benevolent orders! Shame on such ministers."—Christian Instructor.

THE CENTURY ON SECTARIANISM.

The evils of sectarianism, foretold by the prophets of the New Testament, forewarned against by Christ himself, are so great and so apparent that the most enthusiastic sectary seldom ventures to deny or even to belittle them. The energies of the Church of Christ, which should be wholly devoted to battling against superstition, ignorance, intemperance, covetousness, lust, and all forms of selfishness and worldliness, are diverted into controversies about forms, symbols, rites, and formularies of doctrine. While Hereules' right hand is busy contending with his left, the serpents threaten to destroy him; to destroy them he needs all the strength of both his hands.

This spirit of sectarianism is, by the confession of all missionary workers, the greatest obstacle to successful Christian work in our own land, and to missionary work abroad. The rival sects compete for congregations in the new towns of the West, with a rivalry as intense and sometimes almost as unscrupulous as that of trade. In a single village in Kansas, numbering not over a thousand souls all told, there are, or were a few years ago, three Presbyterian churches—a Northern, a Southern, and a Cumberland Presbyterian. Of course, other denominations were represented in this very churchly but very unsanctified community. At the same time there are, or were, one hundred and fifty miles of railroad, with small villages scattered along its line, and not a single Protestant meeting-house of any description from one end to the other.

Mormondom is an army; Romanism is an army; the liquor traffic is an army; all three are well organized and officered. That Protestantism, broken up into independent companies of minute-men, produces any effect whatever in checking the advance of these three great armies, is due not to the miserable methods which it employs, but to the magnificent divine endowment of truth with which it has been entrusted, and which it can not utterly despoil of its power. Abroad the effect of sectarianism on Christian progress is less disastrous, because the foreign missionary is rarely, if ever, a sectary, and pays as little attention to sectarian distinction as he can do and avoid conflict with the churches from which he draws his support at home. But in spite of this fact, sectarianism is the chief obstacle to the progress of foreign missions. Mr. Mazoomdar, being told that he is only in the vestibule of Christianity, replies with a sarcasm, which, despite its exaggeration, has enough truth in it to be humiliating to the Christian, that when he looks within the open door and sees the gladiators fighting with one another in the arena, he is more inclined to flee from the vestibule than to pass within the amphitheater of the church itself.—Century for March.

The action of a prominent railroad in prohibiting card-playing on its trains deserves the commendation of all good citizens. Even though it is done for business reasons, it is still a public benefit. On some of the trains card parties are so many that a passenger, no matter how much he dislikes them, cannot get out of their way. If he be a Christian passenger he is likely to be offended by the practice of a vice in so open a way and in a place where he believes he should be proteeted from such insult. Whether Christians or not, the better class of travelers dislike to see their coaches turned into saloons of that character. They would not go to a saloon, nor would they do business at houses where gambling was thrust upon them, and they are properly disgusted when, on a car where they have bought certain rights supposed to belong to travellers, they must endure what is so disagreeable to them. The example set by this railroad should be followed by all others in the country.—United Presbyterian.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

"None calleth for justice nor any pleadeth for truth." The characteristic of the age that men have lost their abhorence of iniquity. Crime is deplored so far as it affects individual interests but criminals are regarded as unfortunate, and in very many instances escape all punishment. The recent Congressional investigation in the Star-route case shows that there was a mass of evidence that would have made the guilt of the accused most positive and unquestionable. The trial and conviction last Saturday in Alexandria of two persons for adultery, under circumstances of unusual aggravation, resulted in a fine of $20 each, a travesty on both law and justice.

The recent trial of the ex-detectives McDevett and Flinder resulted in an acquittal without the jury leaving their seats. The verdict could not be otherwise under the ruling of the court.

The following from the editorial of the National Republicvn of this morning shows in what light it is seen by the impartial:

Judge Wylie left very little for the jury to do in the detective cases Saturday. The judge's charge was, in fact, an acquittal. Of Judge Wylie's interpretation of the law it would perhaps be presumptuous for a simple layman to speak further than to say that, if it is correct, no detective in collusion with thieves could be convicted unless he actually made his arrangements with them in the presence of witnesses of good character. A layman might also be permitted to say that, if Judge Wylie's interpretation of the law is correct, the season for amending the law has arrived.

There is certainly nothing in the result of these trials to encourage good citizens to further attempts to detect crime and hring criminals to justice. The freedom of the city appears to have been extended to "crooks" and their associates. In these days of police inefficiency about the only thing left for a citizen to do is to convert his house into a castle and himself into a walking arsenal for protection of property and life.

It is time that conservative men—the people whose interests are constantly imperiled—should begin to enquire what it is that prevents the laws being enforced and why courts and juries are utterly unreliable—above all, there needs to be a revival of justice—a quickening of the public conscience; and especially a removal of all those secret combinations that pervert men's judgment and are practical conspiracies against society.

The "Window Glass Worker's Association" has sent a circular to manufacturers threatening to take matters into their own hands if the latter cut the rates agreed upon for glass, and take steps to maintain their wages.

I presume it will be difficult for the association to control the price of window glass or any other commodity in general use. The law of supply and demand is more powerful than the mandates of individual, societies, or of states. I remember when some grangers in Wisconsin resolved that a certain kind of oats should never be sold for less than ten dollars per bushel, but in a short time they were abundant in the market at their relative value, about thirty cents per bushel.

THE EDUCATIONAL BILL.

It seems probable that this important measure, the most important that has engaged the attention of Congress will be adopted, as it has already passed the Senate. I notice with great satisfaction that some Southern Democrats do not see in it any invasion of State rights; or, if it conflicts with former theories, they are willing to waive them in view of the imminent danger of popular ignorance. We regret that others, like Mr. Bayard, fear that local government will be overthrown if the nation should aid in making such government intelligent. Some, like Mr. Morgan, hold that it is an insult to aid in educating those who have the means to educate themselves. This is the old selfish and obsolete plea against any aid to popular education.

By the census of 1880 there were in the United States about five millions of persons over two years of age who could not read, and six millions who could not write. This mass of ignorance, mainly in the South, is a public danger, especially to the States where it exists.

No one doubts the right and duty of the National Government to defend South Carolina and Louisiana from foreign invasion, yet if we can believe the testimony of the Senators and Representatives of these States, the danger from the coming into power of the ignorant masses is far more imminent than would be a foreign invasion. It would be comparatively easy to repel the former, but impossible to control the latter.

Ignorance is the twin sister of crime, the greatest of dangers to a republic. We must provide against it if we would have national security. We owe it to the South that the sin of slavery, of which, with them, we were joint partakers, shall be, as far as possible, atoned for by mutual co-operation in the education of freedmen. We owe it to the negro that we shall teach him to use the ballot that we have thrust upon him. And we owe it to ourselves that we provide for our common defence against this terrible menace to good government. It is cheaper, easier and wiser to provide for general education than to suffer the consequence of popular ignorance and moral debasement.

Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts
Given to redeem the world from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.

The warrior's name would he a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the mark of Cain.

EMANCIPATION DAY.

The colored citizens of the District to-day celebrated the emancipation anniversary with a pageant and enthusiasm which equaled that of any celebration of the kind in past years.

Gaily-decorated wagons, loaded down to the hubs with colored families, anchored around the corners. Most aristocratic hacks and harouches paraded up and down the streets. Gorgeous regalia, gay uniforms and flying banners gave color to the scene, while the ear was greeted in all directions hy the piping of the fife and the beating of drums.

The chariots, on which were enthroned the queens representing different districts of the city, were noticeable features of the procession. These chariots or cars were made of large hox wagons, gaily decorated and canopied. The queens were surrounded by their maidens and hachelors of honor and gentlemen of the household. The South Washington chariot had a hevy of little girls in white sitting helow the dais on which thequeen was enthroned.

The above extracts from an elaborate report in the Evening Star of the 16th show how general and deep was the interest in the twenty-second anniversary of emancipation in this District. To those who remember the long, often seemingly hopeless conflict that preceded emancipation; the obloquy heaped on petitioners and petitions for this object; the haste and earnestness with which politicians and political parties disclaimed all sympathy with "abolition," and vied with each other in denouncing all discussions of the question "either in Congress or out of it," there can be no other than intense satisfaction at the great change. The great procession was conducted with perfect order and an excellent spirit. I noticed that several of the fine carriages loaded with richly dressed colored people were driven by white men, and many white citizens witnessed the exercises.

There were a few things that I saw with regret; their fondness for military display and their ostentatious parade of their secret orders. These were out in full force, and while not worse than among white people, they are an incubus harder to be borne by a people who have less surplus means to expend in follies. There was a grand procession not only of Masons and Odd-fellows, but of "Knights of Moses" and "Gallilean Fishermen." Among the ludicrous things was ah undertaker's wagon bearing aloft in grand display a lot of Masonic and Odd-fellows regalia. May it be speedily consigned to mother earth!

When all of our colored citizens shall have learned that true freedom consists not in glorying in these excrescences on the body politic but in independence, self-respect and Christian manliness, it will be a step forward of immense advantage.

I notice in this morning's National Republican a serious charge against that distinguished Freemason, Judge Advocate General Swaim. A leading banker affirms that he so far forgot to square his actions by the rule of virtue that he cheated the bank out of $5,000. For this alleged offence charges are formerly preferred, and a court-martial demanded. The charge is denied and re-affirmed, and it is to be feared that "the cement of brotherly love" between the brethren is in great danger of being broken.

There is a deep feeling as to the result of the trial of the ex-detectives. At a meeting last night of the citizens committee, the police system of the city was roundly criticized, and Judge Wylie came in for his share. It was determined to form a thorough and permanent organization. After reciting a large number of facts showing that there had been contradictory rulings and criminal neglect, if not positive collusion with crime, the report concludes by saying: "These facts appear to indicate that there exists great uncertainty in the administration of the criminal laws of this District, and made the inquiry a serious one as to what steps should be taken in bringing the criminals to justice." They also resolved:

"That in adopting the report just submitted, it is the sense of this committee that we should not relax our efforts for the protection of life and property in this District, and for the speedy trial of those indicted for crime, and their punishment when found guilty."

If this committee will commence their reform by chalenging "for cause," every person who is a member of a secret order, and by impeaching all judges who violate both law and equity by partial decisions, they will have taken the first step towards a much needed deliverance.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A.. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

NOTICE.

The National Convention of the American Party will meet in Chicago, June 20th, next, to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, or approve nominations already made. The official call will appear in next week's Cynosure.

J. P. Stoddard,
Western Sec'y of Central Committee.

PREPARE FOR THE NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The Central Committee of the American party appointed by the National Convention, Washington, D. C., Feb. 22d, 1884:

Franklin W. Capwell, Dale, Wyoming Co., N. Y.
Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, No. 1339 K St., N. W. Washington, D. C.
John A. Conant, Willimantic, Windham Co., Conn.
Edwin D. Bailey, 215, 4½ St., N.W., Washington. } Sec'ys.
J. P. Stoddard, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago. }

At a meeting of the National Committee in Washington the names of persons known to be interested in the work of the American party were suggested to constitute central committees for the several States. This was done not to embarrass or forestall the action of any State, holding a convention in which committees for States, and delegates to the National Convention might properly be chosen, but to secure a fair representation from those States or districts not organized. The work of organizing a political movement in the face of strong secret and open opposition is not easy, or one to be accomplished in a single year. It is unsafe to depend on a spontaneous uprising of public sentiment that will speedily crystallize into an organic body. The work must progress step by step, building up from the bottom, and taking shape as it advances. There are but few States now organized for political work, and the time intervening between this and the National Convention in June is too short to allow of very extensive or thorough work on this line. The chairman (named by the Central Committee) of each State committee has been notified of his appointment, and furnished with blanks for enrolling names and organizing "American party clubs." In those States where there has not been a convention held and delegates appointed to the June National Convention, the chairmen of the several State committees named by the National Committee, should call their respective committees together, and appoint a number of delegates equal to the number of Congressional districts in their respective States, adding two delegates at large and use all proper effort to secure their attendance at the June Convention. This is a matter of very great importance, and one not admitting delay. Will these several committees do the work assigned them and begin at once, or notify the Central Committee that they wish to be excused? I will give one State as an example, so that all who will act may understand how to procced.

The Illinois committee suggested by the National Committee consists of Lemuel N. Stratton, Wheaton, DuPage Co., Illinois, Chairman; A. G. Laird, Chicago, Secretary; Ezra A. Cook, William I. Phillips, Thomas B. Arnold, Chicago; J. S. Hickman, Goodwine, Iroquois Co.; and Jerome Howe, Wenona, Marshall Co.

The number of Congressional districts in Illinois is twenty. The chairman should secure a meeting of his committee at the earliest date practicable and they should select twenty-two known and true Americans, and appoint them delegates to the National Convention—twenty for the Congressional districts and two at large. These delegates should be notified at once of their appointment and their pledges to attend the National Convention obtained. When the committee is in session it should make provision to fill any vacancies that may occur, either by authorizing the chairman to appoint substitutes or in such way as they may deem best. This committee should also push the organization of American clubs and a liberal circulation of reform literature among the people. It is a well known fact that the American votes cast have been omitted in numerous election reports, and our real strength has never been shown. To obviate the recurrence of this, an American club should be organized in every voting precinct where there are three or more true American voters, to whom tickets may be furnished, and who will see that there is an honest count at the polls and a truthful report made of all ballots cast.

The chairmen of the several committees have been notificd of their appointment, but it will perhaps be well to insert them here as a reminder and an appeal to enter at once upon the work:

Jessie Ward, Partridge, Alabama; George Buck, Putnam, Conn.; John Dorcas, St. Louis, Dakota; Jonathan Winslow, Fairmount, Ind.; James M. Kent, Clarence, Iowa; H. Curtis, Olathe, Kansas; John G. Fee, Berea, Ky.; John Hamilton, Bayou, La.; J. S. Rice, N. Pownell, Me.; Samuel A. Pratt, Worcester, Mass.; William Morrell, St. Charles, Minn.; Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss.; Geo. W. Needles, Albany, Mo.; Simeon Austin, Fairmount, Neb.; Benjamin M. Mason, Moultonborough, N. H.; James Prouty, Vineland, N. J.; Franklin W. Capwell, Dale, N. Y.; Capt. J. M. Scott, Alexandria, Ohio; J. M. Bishop, Chambersburg, Pa.; M. S. McCord, Providence, R. I.; S. F. Thompson, Dixon, Tenn.; Samuel Strother, Paris, Texas; Moses Plummer, Groton, Vt.; M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis.

The time for pushing the work of organization and circulating our reform literature is very opportune. The brave and able advocacy of unpopular truths so long continued in the Christian Cynosure, is now emphasized by the American, issued from political head-quarters at Washington as the political organ of the American party. The appearance of another national organ not in any sense a rival of the "Old Standard Bearer" of Christian and political reforms, but having its special mission, should inspire new courage and lead to more persistent effort. There will be no toning down to catch the populace for political ends, but a straight-forward advocacy of each plank in the American party platform, and if our friends will rally to the standard and push on the work of organizing and appointing delegates you may be as much surprised by the results of the Chicago Convention as some were to learn that our Washington purchase was paid for almost two years before the note became due. Trusting in God, inspired by a consciousness of being right and encouraged by the successes of the past, let us renew our strength and redouble our energies, and at least make our power felt in the approaching Presidential election.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Dale, N. Y., April 19, 1884.

Editor Cynosure:—Since we last wrote we have been chiefly engaged in arranging for a series of conventions to be held in co-operation with the National Convention of June next.

We mean, by God's help, to make the Empire State tell for right in the coming election. We believe "that political ends are to be eradicated by concerted political action, and having no faith in the ability, desire or purpose of either prominent existing party to effect a radical change, we feel impelled by duty to God and love of country, to sever former party affiliations and unite our efforts with a party embracing in its platform reforms fundamental to the prosperity of our civil government." Bro. Bailey sends us several blanks with the above heading. We believe this is the right way to push the work, but they should have been sent out sooner.

In order to accomplish anything we must work; in order to work successfully we must be organized. Several friends are circulating pledges and are meeting with more success than they had anticipated. Town organizations are in this way being formed. If we ever strike a blow that will tell now is the time.

Already the two prominent parties are anticipating grave dissensions. The American Prohibition party is destined to draw largely from their ranks. Then there are divisions among themselves; some talk Conkling, others Arthur, and another class (mostly Catholics) Sherman. What the result will be time only will tell, but unless we miss our guess the next election will witness such a breaking up of old parties as has never been before on this continent. Shall the right take the lead?

What do you say, brethren? Are we willing each and every one of us to do our part? God says, "Choose this day"; and having chosen, the word comes, "Go work today."

As I have been engaged in this work but a short time, perhaps I am not a competent judge, but it seems to me that in my brief experience there has never been a time when the better portion of the people have been awake to evils that surrounded them as they are to-day. We have been often astonished in private conversation to see the number of voters that were opposed to secret societies. Thousands are reaping the vengeance of these secret clans and long to see the day when deliverance will come, but are silent because perchance they would lose custom at the store, practice at the bar, or be injured in some other way. Fire may smoulder for a time, but it will break out. Now what we want is to organize town clubs in accordance with Bro. Bailey's plan; these clubs to send delegates to such county meetings as may be held, have lectures and get others to join them, and in this way keep the ball rolling.

After consultation with our State president, F. W. Capwell, and others, we have arranged a series of county conventions without waiting to complete town clubs. Accordingly, after visiting the following towns and cities, we issue the following call:

The friends in Genesee county will meet at Batavia, April 28th and 29th.

In Orleans county, at Albion, April 30th and May 1st.

In Monroe county, at Rochester, May 5th and 6th.

In Onondaga county, at Syracuse, May 7th and 8th.

In Ontario county, at Canandaigua, May 9th and 10th.

In Livingstone county, at York, May 12th and 13th.

In Wyoming county, at Warsaw, May 15th and 16th.

Friends attending convention at Rochester should call at No. 47, St. Joseph street, for direction; at Syracuse, at the Wesleyan Methodist Publishing House. At other places they will find the meeting without difficulty. Let every church and community in sympathy send as many delegates as possible to the convention in your county.

Come, friends, praying that God will bless the efforts put forth to the honor of his name, and to the advancement of his kingdom in the earth. The exercises will be conducted by General Agent J. P. Stoddard, of Chicago; other able speakers are expected. Father Clark, reform singer, is expected to be with us part of the time. Each meeting will commence with a lecture on the evening of the first day mentioned; the following day will be occupied in organization, speaking, and such business as may come before the bodies assembled.

W. B. Stoddard, State Agent.

FALSE COINAGE.

Editor of the Cynosure:—In your issue of April 10th, on page 3, there is a misprint. In the last paragraph but one of the Short Sermon, "false courage" is printed, instead of false coinage.

You are aware that a Republican Congress has issued pieces of silver which are worth less than 90 cents, but which bear the impression of one dollar or one hundred cents. This false coinage also bears the imprint, we believe, of this pious motto, "In God We Trust."—the motto of the Pilgrims.

Now this is one of the numerous corrupt acts which we as Americans charge against the Republican party, and on account of which we claim that a new party is necessary. Where a government sets the example of falsifying its coin in the name of God, can it be wondered at if its subjects should become equally false in their business transactions? Ought we not to expect that money making "failures" in business might become the order of the day?

Who and what is this Republican party that presumes upon such despotic acts? We must remember that the political sentiment which gave to it its initial character and force, and which sustained Mr. Lincoln's election, was the old Whig Anti-masonic sentiment. This was the sentiment that gave Mr. Lincoln his power to face slavery. Mr. Lincoln's administration has been extolled because of its abolishment of slavery. But we must not forget that it was also his administration which ventured on a fatal step that no other administration had ever dared to do, viz.; to charter a Masonic Hall Association, thus giving a legal existence to an institution that is more dangerous to our liberties than slavery itself. So utterly was the old Whig Anti-masonic sentiment forgotten by Lincoln's administration that that administration invested the Masonic lodge with chartered powers! The Anti-masonic sentiment that went to swell the majority for his election to the Presidency was so far betrayed by his administration as to be almost quelched under the ascendency which that administration has given to the lodge!

And what was this old Anti-masonic sentiment that helped to elect Lincoln? Why, it was simply American sentiment, or the sentiment that now animates the American party. And that sentiment must be revived throughout the country—must be resurrected from oblivion, neglect and abandonment, and be brought into action as the reform power which is to redeem the Republic from the course of fraud and corruption into which the Masonized Republican party has led it.

Such is the actual historical position of our American party: it represents the old Anti-masonic party of former years. It aims at reviving American sentiment and American feeling and habit, as opposed to this odious foreign institution, the lodge, which a Republican Congress has invested with chartered power. It aims at purging the country from such a Masonic, hypocritical party as this Republican party, which while pretending to trust in God, falsifies our coin.

It is a monstrous crime, and one of infinite ramification and bad example for a government to falsify the coin of a country; and especially under pious pretences. This crime comes from Masonic teaching, not from liquor-drinking; from the lodge, not from the saloon. Nor is there any evidence that the Prohibition party would not sustain this crime; for a party that would extrude wine from the sacrament and make it a crime to manufacture wine, would hardly vindicate the old American idea of making nothing but a full amount of gold and silver a legal tender for debts.

We must have the true courage to stick to our American principles, in order to accomplish the reform which we have labored at through much ill report, for many long and weary years. So Mote it be.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GRAND ARMY DYNASTY.

We have now had five Presidents of the Grand Army Dynasty, viz., Gen. Andrew Johnson, Gen. Grant, Gen. Hayes, Gen. Garfield and Gen. Arthur. The whole dynasty, thus far, has been marked for fraud, corruption and assassination. Ought the American people to continue this dynasty any longer? We must not confound the Grand Army of the Republic with that patriotic band of men who turned out to save the country. The objective point of the two armies is altogether different. The objective point of the army of patriots was to save the Republic, while the objective point of the Grand Army of the Republic is the treasury, and for getting office and distinction for themselves, and their sons, and their sons' sons.

The debt of the country is never likely to be paid off so long as this Grand Army dynasty remains in power. It pays a great deal better to belong to the Grand Army than it does to do an honest day's work.

The army that saved the country was in reality the Army of the Republic; but this Grand Army, got up by Gens. Logan, Butler and Sickles, is in reality the Grand Army of the Secret Empire. It is the army of the Masonic lodge and not of the republic. Never vote for a Freemason.

WILL THE LODGE CAPTURE THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES?

Arlington Heights, Mass., April 9th, 1884.

Dear Cynosure:—Your brief article in the last Cynosure headed "The Congregational Creed," mentioning Tamerlane's three kinds of tactics, bribing, dividing and amusing, and telling of the open advice of Rob Morris to throw Masons enough into the churches to control them, was a kind of painful satisfaction.

I have been saying this thing from my own painful observation of the dreadful facts, and did not know any of the secret ring would take the responsibility of saying this in words. That it is so, when it is possible, I have no more doubt than that there is a God in heaven. My friends have been chiding me, though most assuredly I have never sought this thing, saying they were after larger game than to oppose secret societies, and would hardly allow the facts. Talking to a college president in Boston who said such things to me, I replied that of my certain knowledge a minister who was a smoker and advocate of drinking and a Freemason, was put into a large church, and other and better men put into poor ones or kept out and headed off from any. He said, "There may be something in that." I told Dr. Langwatty years ago, as I pointed out things that were transpiring, "You will all be bound hand and foot and unable to help yourselves." Here are two chronological sequences: I met Dr. Brem and said to him, the secret societies are controlling all things round here. He faithfully replied, "I am sorry that it is so." Only a little while after he is superseded, and the Chicago Advance asked who had retired him? But it was a faint voice and soon at rest after recommending his successor. Let the Advance be doubly wary now lest it be used by the lodge.

I am as sure as I live that the Masons and Odd-fellows are manning and unmanning the pulpits of the Congregational body, and if they cannot find the willing tools in the body—and thank God, they have found it difficult up till now—they call in from other bodies men for their purposes.

The Methodist body is well known to be well given over, by the fact of the initiation of the majority of its ministers to lodge rule. The Baptist and Presbyterian churches are by no means free from the taint of the lodge. But there have been and are deadly and persistent efforts to take and hold the Congregational body; and her proper guardians reply, as did Dr. C. (not of the body) when told "The lodges are destroying the churches and precious souls for whom Christ died," "Never mind that; you can't fight Masonry." Or, as another (Dr. B.), said, "I don't care about it one way or another."

But there is another aspect of this not so deeply tinged with the melancholy, and that is the hope that when the real doings are avowed it will open the eyes of the people, the members of our churches. The people will not believe they are being made merchandise of; and leaving out those who want to share in the spoils, to a limited degree they are to be commended because they will not. When they get some eye opener they will be the more ready to prove all things and hold fast only the good. Then there will be a place and call for that which I would have done, had I only had the means, in printing and circulating perhaps by the million simply the question: "Is your minister a Freemason?" your doctor? your lawyer? your judge?

It is good to find God answering prayer, and I cannot but think the real outcome of this avowal must be to bring the lodges into contempt. You need not tell me that the men and women of Massachusetts, New England and New York, the men of America, successors of the Pilgrims are going to submit to anti-Christ and oligarchy in the lodge rule and tyranny; that the men and sons of the men who resisted successfully the rampant slave-holders will tamely submit to the cunning, secret, sneaking, or arrogant rule of the lodgeites.

You need not think that he who loved the church and gave himself for it, that it might be purified unto himself and without spot or wrinkle, is going to see the fair garments of his bride trailed in the filth, selfishness, feasting, gluttony, gaud and show, immoral oaths, secret and open abominations of the lodge, without care or the lifting of his voice and arm of power. Christ is the light of the world, and if in answer to earnest and tearful, united prayer he pleases to expose this thing, it is only assurance that he means its destruction by the brightness of his coming, and the prevalence of equal love to all men and the fulfillment of the disciples' new commandment, that they as disciples should love one another as Christ loved them. But who can love with complacency, confidence and affection the man who calls himself a Christian yet has a sworn secret against you or without you? It takes other things than abominable oaths to make two persons love as Christians. I can give other facts if it is wise to publish them; and I wanted to say to say something of the tactics of the present endeavor to divert the Congregational body and bring down whatever is possible on faithful though not infallible Joseph Cook.

THE ORDER OF THE IRON HALL.

ANOTHER LODGE FRAUD.

Philadelphia, April, 1884.

Christian Cynosure:—As your mission is to expose fraud, I beg to call your attention to a "Wild Cat" organization, whose emblem of an iron safe is symbolical of the fact that those entrusting their money by becoming members will in most cases fail to find the key when their money is due.

By becoming a member of this strong (iron) organization, and paying $2.50 monthly assessments and $1 quarterly for local expenses, at the end of seven years the member is entitled to $1,000. In Philadelphia, parties are told directly that the $1,000 will be paid. But close examination of the laws show the founders to have been more discreet, and intelligent enough to know how to convey one idea while legally protecting themselves by saying something else. The idea conveyed is that $1,000 will be paid, but in the laws of the "supreme" body I read:

"When the amount received for one assessment, less the reserve fund (20 per cent.), shall equal an amount less than $1,000, the sum to be paid shall in no case exceed the amount of one assessment, less the reserve, and said amount shall be all that can be claimed by any one."

A further inducement to membership is weekly benefits, when sick, of $25 per week, to the amount of $500. The idea conveyed is, that payment is made on a sworn certificate from the attending physician, but by their rule of custom it all depends on the physician of the local branch. In case of appeal to law, the member is told that the attending physician has only the power to say what is the matter; the physican of the local branch who may not have seen the party while sick, has autocratic power to report the member not entitled; and that is according to the law the member has promised to subject himself to. Once in awhile a member may receive benefits, but it is mostly to use an innocent man as a decoy duck to induce his friends to join. If he is of no use he cannot get a second payment. As far as I know personally the attempt is principally with the German element. From limited knowledge of English and frugal habits they are duped, but many will be deceived by good talkers. Their forms I know nothing of. My desire is to make known the fraud, to protect the innocent and ignorant.

The organization is called, "Order of the Iron Hall." The members have joined themselves under an act of legislature of Indiana. The papers were filed for record in the recorder's office of Marion county, Indiana, Dec. 17, 1881, but the constitution and laws which mention the fact of their being filed does not say they are or were recorded. I became interested in the matter from attending a member, and thinking fraud should be exposed, I intend sending communications to Philadelphia papers, but whether they will publish or not is a question. AN UNHUNG VILLAIN BUT GOOD MASON.

Homerville, O., March, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—There is a young man, Mr. L., not far from Albion, Ohio, who less than a year ago married a respectable girl and moved on to a farm which he had previously bought, and there commenced keeping house with as fair prospects of happiness as the majority of young people. But as there was a serpent in the first Eden, so there is always one lurking around to creep into every happy home. There is a creature (I had almost written man) belonging to the Freemasons and the M. E. church, pretending to be a gentleman, but his past life clearly proves him a villain. He has destroyed the peace in families by destroying the confidence between man and wife, and caused happy homes to be the scene of discord and contention. But there has always been some way for him to escape punishment due him. So he grows bolder and more barefaced in his villainy. He has professed to be a great friend to this Mr. L. Not many weeks since he called at the latter's house and found his wife alone. He made some improper advances to her which she resented; when he found she did not intend to yield willingly he resorted to compulsion, but still failed in his hellish purpose. When her husband returned and learned the facts of the case he scarcely knew what to do, but finally decided to have the man punished as he deserved. He proceeded to have him arrested and brought before a justice, where he waived examination and was bound over to appear at court. Of course everybody is indignant, and only now and then a Mason will venture to uphold him in the least; and one less cautious than the majority said if they could get five Masons on the grand jury they could not find an indictment against him.

This case is causing a great deal of interest among Anti-masons, and it brings a few questions to the mind of every thinking person. If Masons can help a man through such crime as this, what is it they cannot do and where are the wives and daughters of Anti-masons to look for protection? Are there no sober-minded men among the Masons that would cry shame on such proceedings? Can a wretch like this one I have described come to the homes of Anti-masons and offer any insult their base natures may prompt, and the law offer no protection; or, if it does, find some secret power working to undermine it? This is the fifth or sixth time he has committed a similar offence. It is a well-known fact that his life has been threatened at different times. Only a few years since there was a reception prepared for him in the form of a new coat composed of tar and feathers, but some Masonic friend warned him of his danger and he escaped getting his just deserts. No one can account for his escaping from justice so often unless Masonry helps him. If Masonry acquits such villains and turns them loose to curse society with their pernicious influence, which can be compared to nothing but some deadly miasma, then is it indeed a curse to our fair land, for it urges men—I might say compels them—to take the law in their own hands and resort to lynching for redress for their wrongs. Who could blame this wronged husband (if this villain should be acquitted) if he should say he would have revenge, and make his words good! The name of this wretch is Oliver Lee. If you doubt a word I have written concerning this you can write to some of your subscribers for proof at Albion, Ashland county, Ohio. J. B.

PITH AND POINT.

A SECEDER'S TRIALS AND VICTORY.

I am the only seceded Mason in this place who has come out plainly on the subject. There are two more from the same lodge I belonged to who have left it or given it up for religious reasons, but they have not come out clearly, or have not confessed the secret works of the lodge. I find the road pretty rough to travel. I have lived in this vicinity for about twenty-five years. Never, that I remember, was I called a liar or dishonest or compared to anything low or mean till after the Lord converted my soul and I left the lodge. But I thank God for what I enjoy this evening. Christ tells us plainly, "In the world you shall have tribulations, but in me you have peace.—F. M. Wilson, Zanesville, Ind.

THE PRIMITIVE BAPTISTS IN ALABAMA.

I thank you for the few specimens of tracts treating upon the evils of Freemasonry you kindly sent me. If I was able I would purchase a thousand such sheets and distribute them among my people down here. I belong to a people that is called Primitive Baptist. We would no more fellowship a Mason among us than we would Satan himself. But we are a much persecuted people; and if it were not for the fear of public exposure of the craft, they would whip, crop and brand every one of us. All the judges, lawyers and officers of State and counties are leading men, and all would-be leading men are Masons or trying to be Masons. Our whole community is contaminated with this loathsome plague. Grand nor petit juries cannot be empanelled without an eye single to the advantages of Masons. I cannot begin to picture to you the evils some people have to undergo in consequence of this foul leprosy. I cry out against those things from the pulpit wherever I go, but it makes me very unpopular among the aristocrats of our State.—J. C. Shelton, Brooksville, Ala.

DIDN'T CURE.

We have noticed in your paper some miracles brought about by the use of Warner's Safe Remedies.

Now my wife has used twenty-four bottles of the stuff, without any great good or benefit that we could see. Neighbors have used two, five, ten bottles, and no resurrection yet. Now I have become disgusted at reading the trash. It is injuring your paper here; and, by the by, if I had not bought so much of it I could have paid my subscription. I don't know but they might pour a bottleful on a mummy and bring him to life! It is deceiving poor people to get money.—D. H. Newman, Spencer, New York.

Note.—As the Cynosure has before said of the advertisements, we cannot recommend articles advertised when we know nothing of them, nor is it expected that we are to test everything that is advertised. Special care will be taken to reject everything that is spurious and fraudulent. Warner's remedies we have heard highly commended by several worthy persons who have used them. They may be worthless in many cases also. It is a good rule to avoid patent medicines by a wholesome diet that will prevent the necessity of using them; and as for articles attractive only because they are cheap it is also a rule that they are worth not a cent more than they cost.

WHICH BROTHERHOOD?

At one time I attended a revival meeting with an honest Odd-fellow of the M. E. church. It is a mystery how the lodge deludes good and honest men; and this good brother was deluded, for he doubtless thought it no more harm to belong to the lodge, or that it was "conforming to this world," any more than it was to plow corn, though it is plain to be seen that we need corn, but not lodges. I tried to make him see that when a Christian belonged to any institution where a majority of its members are worldlings that such an one would be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." I told him that before I was converted I belonged to a Good Templar lodge: in that lodge were about one hundred members, only ten or twelve of whom were church members. We elected officers every quarter by ballot. Among the officers elected was a chaplain. The majority being of the world, they elected a chaplain of the world, and he prayed a printed prayer of the world; for it had not in it the name of Jesus Christ; and the church members were ruled by the worldly majority. In this case did not the Christians have the unequal or short end of the temperance yoke? They swore me on the Bible contrary to the Bible, all in the name of temperance.

My good M. E. brother tells me that the lodge will not save any one and that it will not do to cling to it for salvation; that it is an institution of man. We were coming home from meeting and on our way called on an Odd-fellow who is a very profane man. The two shook hands and called each other "brother," and we exhorted him to become a Christian. Our Odd-fellow brother replied to our exhortation that "Odd-fellowship was as good a religion as he wanted." I told my M. E. brother that if such worldly institutions did not exist it would be impossible for men to cling to them for salvation, and that the lodge had better be destroyed than for it to drag even one immortal soul down to hell.—Cyrus J. Smith, Clearfield Iowa.

ONE OF THEIR TRICKS.

A dozen men, more or less, would dress up towards the close of day, with finely brushed silk hats, etc.; drive up in a large wagon drawn by four horses to the door of the principal village hotel, and there appear to be waiting for somebody, or something, for a quarter of an hour or so, and then drive off with a great show of importance. This was done once or twice a year, and always with an air and bearing of great mystery, as if something of consequence was on hand. Strangers would naturally ask what it all meant; and they would be answered that the men were Masons; that they were going up to a neighboring town to hold some meeting, and that it was their regular custom, etc.

Now these important-looking men going on one of their sprees, would impress upon the minds of the villagers in this way a very great idea of themselves and of Freemasonry; whereas, neither the men themselves nor their Freemasonry could stand examination by a man of sense. The villagers allow themselves to be imposed on, and award the tricksters all the importance which their pompous demonstrations would seem to imply; vote for them, and favor them. Such tricksters will flourish so long as they can get men and women to look on, wonder and admire, and no longer. A Looker On.

OBITUARY.

Died, near Aroma, Indiana, on the 18th of March, Melinda Harvey, wife of John Harvey. Deceased was born in Wayne county, Indiana, on the 25th of May, 1817. In 1833 she married John Harvey. Two years after they moved to Hamilton county, built a small log cabin in the woods, and commenced contending faithfully with the forest for what is now a beautiful farm with good substantial building upon it.

Mrs. H. had a birth right in the Friends church, and she and her husband were faithful members of the same until the recent separation of Friends. Since that time, there being no other conservative friends at Sugar Ridge, they have held meeting alone in their own house twice a week. Whatever they thought was right for them to do they did. They often talked of death and the future to each other. She was fully prepared and is now no doubt at rest awaiting the coming of her dear companion with whom she lived so happily for over fifty years.

GOOD WORDS.

"I like the paper very much. It is the only religious paper I ever read that feared God rather than man.—H. Upton, Pierce, Neb.

The Cynosure increases in interest and improves in quality every day. It is eagerly looked for each week, and as eagerly perused. The cause it advocates is a mighty one—one capable of exercising the greatest talents. For originality, outspoken denunciation of wrong in every form, and the fearless advocacy of the right, there is no paper in America that excels the Cynosure.—C. M. Strickler, Clearport, O.

I am delighted with your paper. It is certainly valued amongst my best exchanges. It is good to sow good seed.—J. F. Avery, Editor Buds and Blossoms, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

ON THE EDITOR'S WASHINGTON ADDRESS—"FREEMASONRY AND FREE GOVERNMENT."

It seems to me the crowning effort (in the line of address) of your life was the address you delivered at Washington, and reported in the Cynosure, 20th March. As E. and I read it over and over it brings fresh to mind the exceedingly happy hours we have spent with you and Mrs. B. Often we talk of your Bible readings at Syracuse. O how precious! We are looking forward, God willing, to great enjoyment at Chicago at our gathering in June. My wife has never been to Chicago. I pray the good Lord to increase her strength, so that she may accompany me there. Bro. J. P. Stoddard has doubtless told you of the most excellent meeting at Lockport—small in number but great in interest. We are planning county meetings all over New York. We expect to have a host of delegates at the National Ratification meeting in Chicago, June 30. —F. W. Capwell, President of the N. C. A., and Chairman of the National Political Committee.

Permit an humble citizen to offer you his congratulations and to thank you for the brave and strong words for God and humanity uttered by you in the late Washington Convention. It is truly occasion for devout thankfulness and gratitude to the Great Disposer of events and a souree of gratification to you and to every friend of truth and righteousness, to every lover of civil and religious liberty, that now, after a long and eventful life in the service of God and humanity as a reformer, you have been permitted to stand in the capital of this great nation, and there arraign and condemn—and that, too, in the very presence of the White House—the dark empire of secretism, the monster evil, the giant curse of this and all lands.—Dr. J. N. Norris, Birmingham, Iowa.

One of the most singular features in the scenery of the Territory of Idaho, is the occurrence of dark, rocky chasms, into which large streams and creeks suddenly discharge themselves, disappear, and are never more seen. These fissures are old lava channels, produced by the outside of the molten mass cooling and forming a tube, which, on the fiery stream becoming exhausted, has been left empty, while the roof of the lava duct having at some point fallen in, presents there the opening into which the river plunges and is lost. At one place on the precipitous banks of the Snake, one of these under-ground rivers comes gushing into light from a cleft high up in the basaltic walls, where it leaps in the form of a cataract into the torrent below. Where this stream has its origin, or at what point it is swallowed up, is utterly unknown, though it is believed that its sources are a long way up in the north country. Besides becoming the channels of living streams, these lava conduits are frequently found impacted with ice masses, which never entirely melt.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship: .

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.

A. D. Zaraphonithes, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. Please designate to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1884.

"THE NEW CREED" divides leading Congregationalists about equally, and we shall not soon hear the last of it. As Taylorism and Tylerism engrossed the minds of Congregationalists; and Old and New School theology those of the Presbyterians, most dangerous to to the slave power, and so for years protected slavery from the praying, thinking and giving Christians in the United States; so this new creed discussion is protecting the secret false worships of this country from precisely those minds from which the lodge has most to fear. As those old theological controversies vanished into thin air when they ceased to shelter slavery, so this new controversy will disappear and leave no scars when its work is done.

THE WANT OF PRAYER, regular, constant prayer is the most discouraging feature of the present reforms. Germany was revolutionized by prayer. Luther's prayers were wonderful as his instructions. Scotland was redeemed from popery by prayer without shedding a drop of popish blood. But when the German Protestants took arms, the Reformation stopped, and has not advanced a step in Europe since. We need and must have a Pentecost, or the civil oath will soon be of no effect, mobs will burn down court houses, because the lodge, not the court, decides cases; and the Bible and the Sabbath gone, our history will be that of France and not of Scotland.

THE COMING CANVASS.

The Republicans of Illinois met last week by a large representation, in Peoria, and nominated Hon. Richard Oglesby, for Governor; with a complement of State officers. We waded through column after column of the convention proceedings, and if any one can discover in the whole mass of bustle and boast, any sound political principle ennunciated, or any object pursued, but securing personal nominations and the success of the party in November next, he is more fortunate than we. The whole convention scene reminded one of Bunyan's "Vanity Fair."

Peoria is the headquarters of whisky; manufacturing more of that article than any other single spot on the globe. Of course, the grand question of prohibition which is laying its hand on States and State constitutions, cut about such a figure in this boastful body as a deaf mute might in a militia training. Illinois Republicans depend, for holding the Prohibitionists in this State, on the record of the party in Iowa and Kansas; to which they point and say, "Can it be that we are a liquor party with such allies in other States?"

But the Chicago Daily News gives the key which uncovers the secret spring of this noisy Peoria convention. It tells us in plain round terms, that "The Grand Army of the Republic carried all before it" there. This we are fully prepared to believe. A year or so since, Gen. Sohn A Logan began to pay a profound court to this Grand Army, which was organized after the fighting was over. In Colorado, with the inflammability of mining communities, this army held monster meetings with Logan as their head, and central figure. And, from that hour, recruits have been pouring into its ranks without drum or fife, at a rapid rate. The additions to their secret ranks in Illinois (Logan's State), are stated variously at ten or more thousands. As the "veterans" of the real army, the chief stock in trade of this spurious "army," are rapidly diminishing, means are already found to enlist or "accept" as veterans, men who never shouldered a musket unless at a militia sham fight where cartridges are blank; and now lately it is proposed to perpetuate this secret "order" by forming little boys into a kind of Grand Army Bands of Hope.

"Uncle Dick" Oglesby lately joined this Grand Army, though some doubt whether he will be able to say its prayer after the chaplain without swearing. But he is nominated Governor by acclamation; and throughout the Peoria Republican convention, "Coming events cast their shadows before," if Oglesby's and Logan's elections are such "coming events;" of which, however, there are possible doubts.

In 1783, the year after peace, a society was formed with the name with precisely the same proposed objects in view with this modern one; viz.: "To perpetuate feelings of patriotism, friendship, and fraternity," and "to relieve the wants of the families of such as had fallen in the war." How many "wants" of families were relieved, does not appear. But though Washington was made its President the society became intensely unpopular.

Jefferson, in a letter to Washington, April 16, 1784, thus states the objections of the Democracy of that day to this secret "order." He says: "They urge that it is against the letter of some of our Constitutions, and against the spirit of all of them, viz., the natural equality of man, and the denial of every pre-eminence except that of legal office." And he urges "That it keeps up a distinction between the civil and the military, which it is for the happiness of both to obliterate; and that when the members assemble, they will be proposing to do something, and what that something may be, will depend on actual circumstances." It is stated that this Democratic opposition, and the force of Jefferson's reasons, led Washington to advise the disbandment of the secret military order of 1783.

Tempores mutant, et nos mutamur cum illis. Surely "we change with the times." Gen. John A. Logan, who, we have been told on excellent authority, moved and carried the infamous black code in our Legislature, which made Illinois virtually a slave State, is now the glory of those who boast the abolition of slavery as their grand achievement: and the author of the "demijohn education" proposition, to base popular education on taxes paid by licensed liquor, is to be, if Peoria whisky can bring it about, the candidate of "the True Temperance party." When this great event transpires in the Republican Chicago convention June 3d, next, may we be there to see. Mr. Logan's nomination, by that convention, will be a trinity of wonders:—Democratic Republicans, turned into tools of military shams, supporting the tricks and titles of ringcraft: Republican Prohibitionists shouting for the hero of liquor license, and the laurels of Abolition placed by Republicans on the head which invented and carried the black code of Illinois.

—A remarkable letter was received from India just as we were getting ready for press, which will appear next week. It is from a Methodist missionary, Rev. C. B. Ward, who offers to send tracts and other documents upon the lodge to every Gospel missionary in India, Burmah and Ccylon. Who will send the N. C. A. treasurer $25 to pay for sending the documents?

—The late Wheaton, Ill., borough election, April 7th, after a spirited struggle, resulted in ousting the license board chosen during the high license craze last year. The temperance majority was larger than ever before. The sheriff of the county, Capt. Jones, who has been also master of the small Masonic lodge in Wheaton, took a young man out of the jail, confined there for assaulting his mother while in drink, and led him up to the polls to vote for license to sell more liquor, and then led him back to board at the county's expense. This is the way the lodge and liquor save public expense by license revenue.

—It was in harmony with the general rule that at least three of the five members of the above board of last year were Freemasons, while the new prohibition board are all opposed to the lodge. The son of one of the saloon-keepers has draped his closed-up establishment in mourning and decorated the town pump with flags.

—The Lutheran Witness, Cleveland, Ohio, publishes a brief extract of the great speech in the Canadian Parliament against Orangism and secret lodgery, and says of the orator:

"The Hon. Edward Blake is the leader of the Reform party of Canada, being now in opposition. He is not only honest and sincere in his convictions, but also one of the ablest of public men Canada can boast of. It may be significant to state here that he is not a Roman Catholic, but that he is called by some the Protestant of Protestants, and that he himself declares in his very speech: 'I am a firm Protestant.' The Orange Incorporation Bill was rejected this session of Parliament, the same as last session."

—Joseph Catterlin, for many years residing at Kewanee, Ill., and now with a son-in-law, Bro. Thompson, on West Indiana street, Chicago, is perhaps the oldest Anti-mason. He has reached the extreme age of 95 years, and through the failing of his strength is confined to his bed, yet feels a warm interest in every movement for the exaltation of Christ against secretism.

—The Christian Commonwealth of London, England, says that among its American items that in a sermon on the "Modern Migrations of Nations," by the late Rev. C. T. Collins, attention is called to the fact of the great multiplication of secret organizations in our modern American society. In Cleveland, for example, it is stated that there are 159 churches, synagogues, chapels and inns, and 283 of what are practically secret societies of sufficient importance for the directory.

—The letters of inquiry about the Grand Army of the Republic ritual sold at this office, suggest that it would be useful if seceders from that order will send us a written statement respecting the correctness of that ritual, as a number have incidentally done in years past. The ritual, we know, has been somewhat changed since the exposition was published, but there has been plenty of evidence that when first published it was correct. This is the evidence we want. Will all readers of this note please assist in getting it?

The National Monitor, Brooklyn, N. Y., gives a hearty endorsement of the American platform which it prints thus:

"The principles enunciated in this platform are as sound as a silver dollar, and comprise the larger part of the moral being of the men whose names stand at the head of it as presidential candidates. Sooner or later right, as against wrong, virtue, as against vice, must triumph. God must be recognized by the nations of the earth, or the nations of the earth refusing this recognition must perish. God made this world, and God peopled it, and gave it an all-sufficient constitution that can neither be amended nor supplanted."

COL. C. G. HAMMOND.

This distinguished civilian died suddenly in Marshall Field's store in Chicago on Tuesday, April 15, 1884, nearly eighty years of age.

We reprint from the Cynosure of Dec. 14th 1882, Mr Hammond's corroboration of Thurlow Weed's letter concerning the murder of Morgan by Freemasons. When Mr. Hammond was depot master of the Michigan Central depot letters were written to the prominent officers and owners of the road at the East in behalf of the Sabbath, and against its violation by the road. Mr. Hammond replied, thanking earnestly those who had written him in behalf of the Sabbath. He said their action on the subject would be of vast benefit, as it would lead the company to avoid Sabbath breaking and depreciating the value of their stock by making friends of the Sabbath unwilling to become owners of it. He said:

"When Mr. Joy applied to me to take charge of this post the first question I asked was, 'Will there be any work for me to do on the Sabbath?' The answer was, 'No,' and no it has been so far as I am concerned: but others have had Sunday labor very much to their injury and my regret."

When, after some time, he became Superintendent of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, among his first official acts was a strong proclamation giving the road employes assurance that they would be permitted to rest on the Sabbath, and requiring any unnecessary work done on the road to be at once reported to him. Since that time greed and competition have been continually encroaching on the Sabbath by the management of railroads; though the carrying trade of the country could be done cheaper and safer by running their stock six days instead of seven. The encroachments have been caused most frequently by the clamors of speculators and weak and unscrupulous men, who wish to spend their Sabbaths or part of them in Chicago and to be present early on Monday morning. Thousands of bright young men are annually wrecked in their morals by railroad labor on the Sabbath. Yet if the churches are once roused to its rescue they will be astonished to find how easy it is to adjust railroading so as to give the Sabbath to God.

Col. Hammond, at the time of the Morgan abduction, was living at Canandaigua, N. Y., and was thoroughly conversant with all that occurred in that vicinity. He said to a newspaper reporter in December, 1882, soon after the death of Thurlow Weed and the publication of his Batavia letter, that he had read the statement of Mr. Weed, and knew it to be absolutely true. It agreed in almost every particular with the facts as he knew them, and in what he did not have positive personal knowledge, the death of Morgan, the statement agreed with what was generally believed, and actually known to be true in the neighborhood of Canandaigua. He was a young man at the time, and it was his first participation in politics to attend the Anti-masonic convention held at Rochester shortly after the occurrence. He cast his first vote for that ticket. His friends were nearly all Masons, and he had no prejudices against the order until that time. He thought that was going too far, and then gave his influence to the Anti-masonic party, following Seward and Weed. He related a number of incidents of the abduction, all of which corroborate the statement of Mr. Weed. He was personally acquainted with nearly all the men taking part in the affair, and was present at the time they were tried. He most sincerely believes that Morgan was drowned in the Niagara river, and that the body found months later was that of the traitor to Masonry. It was positively known that six men went out in the boat, and but five returned. Colonel Hammond said he believed the Anti-masonic movement brought out Seward and gave him the opportunity to develop into a great man. He jumped into the movement at the right time, and rode on the crest wave to greatness. Whether his connection with the movement had anything to do with the defeat of Mr. Seward's aspirations to the Presidency he did not know, but he never heard Masons bring up the charge against him. They were too willing to hush up the matter and not give any cause for a revival of the old story of the Morgan affair.

Colonel Hammond left Canandaigua in 1834, and came West, but while he still resided there he knew there were many Masons who believed as he did concerning the end of Morgan.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The lodges of Springfield, Ill., presume to be the chief mourners at the grave of Abraham Lincoln. On the nineteenth anniversary of his death, April 14th, the Grand Army of the Republic, the Knights of Pythias, and the Sons of Veterans were named, with the National Guard, as observing the anniversary.

—A New York dispatch mentions an episode in the life of a prominent member of a labor lodge: "Mr. Peter J. Meany, a well-known Brooklyn politician, has mysteriously disappeared, and it is said that he has skipped for Canada. He had a gambling-house at Coney Island, which was raided last winter, but it is thought that was not the reason of his leaving. A Democratic politician of Brooklyn and a friend of Meany's says in his opinion Meany left because he was short about $20,000 in his accounts as Treasurer of the Iron-Moulder's Union, a position which he he has held for a number of years."

—Every professional cheat knows the value of Masonry. The following shows that they sometimes put it to a legitimate use; for there is no greater fraud: "Seven railroads in this and other cities have of late been in receipt of letters from one 'Arthur H. Ainsworth, editor.' He writes on letter-heads bearing the following caption: "Office of the Masonic Times. Devoted to the interests of Freemasonry in the West. Published weekly at the office of publication. Subscription, $2.50 per year. Arthur H. Ainsworth, editor.' "

Phocion Howard, of Danville, Ill., who has been corresponding much of late on State politics for the Inter Ocean, is "Supreme Commander for the Society of the Areopagus of North America." The Inter Ocean of Monday reprints from the Alton Daily Telegraph the assertion that this same Howard "can crowd more ignorance into a paragraph than any other correspondent in the country.

ANTI-SLAVERY PAMPHLETS

Bearing date before 1850, especially annual reports of State and National Anti-slavery societies, wanted at fair prices, by WILLIAM BIRNEY, Washington, D. C.

COMMENT ON THE CINCINNATI RIOT.

Gen. Averill of Minnesota, a prominent officer during the war, retired list, is a gentleman who has made a very profound study of the social and political questions of this country. In talking recently of the outbreak in Cincinnati he said: "The most discouraging feature about this outbreak is not the loss of lives nor the destruction of property. The unfortunate feature is the disclosure of the fact of the breaking down of our judicial and jury system in the confidence of the public. There is never any such great outbreak as has taken place at Cincinnati without some very deep seated cause. The outrageous verdicts of juries, the corruption of judges, the infamous means employed by criminal lawyers, in the defense of criminals, has gradually but surely destroyed all confidence in the courts of our great cities. In partially settled localities the standard is better, but in the cities, where ward politicians and the corruption of modern municipal governments have done so much to destroy the character of the courts, the public have great reason for indignation. What will be the outcome of it I have no manner of foreseeing. Just such outbreaks as this one in Cincinnati may be expected at any time in any of our large cities. It may not be for the same cause, but the absolute rottenness and dishonesty of the municipal administrations of the larger cities of this country will certainly bring down a whirlwind of retribution from an outraged people. I am far from advocating anything in the way of mob rule and I am far from saying that any such popular outbreak is any way of remedying the evil; but where great wrongs exist the remedies for righting them are generally pretty violent. That is where is going to come the test of the republican form of government. Its weakness now is found in the great cities, in the centers of capital and trade which are at present dominated and eaten into by the very lowest elements of society—Ex.

"INTEMPERANCE AND LODGERY."—A Connecticut friend sends us five dollars to aid in our benevolent work and writes: "I rejoice that you are not afraid to express your mind and lift up your voice against evil, even if it is popular. * * * Intemperance and lodgery are closely allied; even temperance secret societies are a greater curse to the cause of temperance than they are help. I have reason to know whereof I affirm, having been a member of two such societies, and closely observed their workings. Many good, earnest Christian men have been influenced to join such societies—hoping thereby to help forward the car of temperance, but, alas! how many have been sadly disappointed. 'Evil seeks darkness, but righteousness needs no screens.' How true! God says, 'Let your light shine.' Lodgery says, 'No; let us put it under a bushel.' God says, 'Thou shalt not forswear thyself.' Lodgery says, 'Yes, take this solemn, terrible oath.' In short, secret, oath-bound societies have no defense from a Christian standpoint; but fall, rather, under absolute condemnation. Let not the things that are God's be mixed up with the things that are Cæsar's.' —National Monitor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

REFORM NEWS.

NEBRASKA STATE MEETING.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, April 14, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The longer I live and the more experience I have in the field of reform, the more I realize that secret combinations are the greatest obstructions in the way. In every town of importance, and especially in every county seat, the press, the pulpit, the legislation, is controlled by secret societies. Ministers who dare not say it publicly, tell me that these societies, behind the courts, are the greatest barriers to temperance and other legislation. There are only a few places where you can get an audience if you speak out against these orders, so powerful is the hold they have on the public mind.

I recently spent a month in Nebraska, lecturing on National Reform. We use the moral law or the Decalogue as our leverage, showing that if the national legislation was brought up to that standard, it would settle the prohibition question, the anti-monopoly question, the Sabbath question, the divorce question, the anti-secret question, and every other moral question. I confess this last issue, oath-bound secrecy, although the greatest violation of the Third Commandment, yet it is the most difficult to deal with. You have to put in the thin edge of the wedge and then tap it gently, or you do not get a hearing. Ninety-nine doors in a hundred will be closed against you if you announce your subject as "anti-secrecy."

Bro. E. B. Graham of Omaha, is chairman of the Executive Committee of the State Association. He proposes to have the largest rally of the anti-secret friends at the next State convention. At his suggestion I made inquiry of friends at the different points I visited, in regard to a good place for holding the meeting. It was proposed to combine the national reform and anti-secret issues and to meet in a town of some influence where we would have friends to rally for the cause. But I did not find such a town. Ministers are afraid to beard this lion. It would awaken too much opposition. Some of their members in business would be sacrificed. A quiet, indirect testimony is all they feel able to bear at present.

There may be points I have not visited where friends will welcome such a convention. If so, will they please notify Bro. Graham of Omaha, as the time for holding it is hastening on. M. A. GAULT.

KANSAS ITEMS.

STRAWBERRY, Kansas.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The U. B. church near here has had a good revival; between thirty and forty conversions and reclamations, I hear. One Mason was converted. I offered him a Cynosure, very kindly explaining the character of it. Said he knew all about it and didn't want it, and turned away as though he didn't "take much stock" in myself either, though very friendly before.

In Clyde the G. A. R. paraded the streets in arms. If the ex-Confederates should do in the Southern cities and towns as the G. A. R. does in the North it would augur perilous times.

Sulphur Springs, when laid out, left a lot for an Odd-fellow temple, but the United Brethren church got a hold there and the temple was never built. Miltonvale has a lodge of whiskyites. One Odd-fellow returned from the Miltonvale lodge so full that when he went out to plow fire guard last fall he plowed around a neighbor's well, till he sobered off. He then went to the wagon and broke the bottle over the tire, remarking that a man could not be a good Odd-fellow and get drunk; but afterward he said, Odd-fellow or no Odd-fellow, he was going to have his whisky, and did. He was elected justice of the peace lately.

Chetopa (Indian name meaning four lodges) has ten secret societies. They out-lodge the heathen Indians.

A Mormon preacher has been lecturing at Strawberry in favor of Masonry. Masonic lecturers are speaking at different points to counteract Anti lectures. The signs are good. An Anti-mason in Clifton used strategy on a saloon-keeper and caught him in the act of law-breaking and he had to dance to the tune of several hundred dollars. The Anti-mason was surrounded by a raging mob of whiskyites, when the M. E. minister, a Mason, came on the scene and, as I am informed, told them if they laid hands on that man he would take up the battle for him, which dispersed them. A Masonic saloon-keeper in this county was fined, costs and all amounting to a thousand dollars, and put in jail, but in a few weeks he was released of the whole thing and went at it again.

Palmer, it is said, has a lodge whisky ring the members of which can get drinks by the proper sign.

When traveling recently I had two tilts with infidelity. In one instance a "three links" bought of an agent in my presence the work of Tom Paine and took sides against me at first, but finally whipped around to my side. Stopping a few minutes in Perryville, Jefferson Co., I was informed that some years ago it had a U. B. organization and a Masonic lodge, but now both are extinct. There are two church edifices there and three denominations holding forth, but Christianity is at a very low ebb. There is a flourishing Odd-fellow lodge there, however. It has a good but dormant anti-lodge sentiment there, too, that does not seem to be posted on the anti-lodge-prohibition-American movement. S. HART.

CHICAGO AND WHEATON.

Taking advantage of Bro. Starry's call to the Michigan State Convention at Battle Creek, expositions were held in Chicago and Wheaton last week. With the Carpenter Hall meeting came a wet, unpleasant evening, and the attendance was not large, but among those present were a number of strangers to whom such meetings were a new experience. The exemplification of the Master's degree was made without any jar or unexpected circumstance, except that Bro. Ronayne, who was sitting in the rear, brought out with startling effect some more exceptionable part of the ritual by a pointed question. His interest arose as the work proceeded until, in the second section of the degree, he came forward and took a leading part as "Senior Warden," thus proving by the most emphatic demonstration the essential uniformity of Masonry. Starry was made a Mason in Springville, Iowa, years before Ronayne was made a Mason in Quebec: but while one is working a degree the other could come in and take part at any time without a break or jar in the proceedings.

At Wheaton the meeting was held in Central Hall on a day's notice. The hall was crowded so that hardly standing room remained. In the opinion of some who have been friendly but not active in our reform, it was one of the most effective meetings against the lodge ever held in the place. A few years ago the College was attacked, for one reason among others, that its president was making the name Wheaton odious through Anti-masonry, and in 1877, a meeting gotten up by Bro. Hinman to discuss the character of the railroad riots, which were controlled by secret orders, was captured by those desiring peace with the lodge. Anti-masonry, as well as prohibition, has been growing since then, and many were present perhaps for the first time to hear the character of Freemasonry exposed and denounced publicly; and what is more, the general expression was one of approval. A few remarks explaining the character of the argument of an exposition of Freemasonry were made by Pres. J. Blanchard and Bro. J. P. Stoddard, and Bro. Starry told in a few words his story of lodge experience and renunciation. The exposition went on smoothly and with a lively interest on the part of everybody; even to the members of the lodge who were present. Several of the pastors of the village were present and were plainly and deeply impressed by the performance.

Bro. Starry returned to Iowa Saturday morning, with the best wishes of all the friends, and a special commendation from the Cynosure to every friend of the reform.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet pro vides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C. A., to the amount of 25 cents.

The Home.

LOST, THE SOUND OF FOOTSTEPS.

BY ALICE M. BALL.

Lost, the sound of footsteps—my own footsteps; just once more
Do I long to hear the music of my feet upon the floor;
Dream I of the days, now vanished, when my lips first learned to talk,
Of the mother's love that fondly taught a little child to walk;
In the silence that surrounds me, tired of silence, tired of pain,
Do I long for hands to guide me, till I've learned to walk again.

Lost, the sound of footsteps; how the days have come and gone,
And my steps, forever silenced, wake no echo in our home,
Music floats about me, sweetly wafted on the air,
And the hum of merry voices sounds about me everywhere,
While I fondly long for music, that can be mine never more—
Just the music of my footsteps—my own footsteps on the floor.

Lost, the sound of footsteps; and I wait day after day,
In the midst of this long silence, where the Master bids me stay,
And dream of spacious meadows, where my child feet used to roam;
Of the footprints left so often on the graveled walks at home.
Does the Father know how restless our weak human feet may grow?
And guide them just as safely, when they lie in shadows so?

Lost, the sound of footsteps; when the soul's work here is done,
When the gates of heaven are opened, and our Father bids me come
From this silence so unbroken by the tread of human feet,
Over where immortal footsteps echo on the golden street.
Then, till then, dear Father, teach me, that through all these fearful depths,
In the silence that surrounds me, Thou art guiding still my steps;
And when life for me is over, even in heaven, may I once more
Hear again the sound of footsteps; my own footsteps on the floor.

—Household.

Note.—Since writing the above pathetic lines, Miss Ball has been healed by the prayer of faith.—S. C. K.

WHAT HAS THE BIBLE DONE?

The Bible is a wonderful quickener of the human mind. It has made more readers and thinkers, more teachers and preachers, more scholars and philosophers, than all the books in the world besides. It has produced incalculably more books than any other book ever produced. It has been mentioned as a remarkable fact that Shakspeare's works have given birth to four or five thousand other books. The Bible has given birth to millions. It has produced the richest and most varied literature the world ever saw. The best books in the world are its offspring, the books that are richest in truth and goodness, in holy feeling and transforming power. It is still producing good books in countless multitudes, in every line of thought, and it is likely to continue to do so as long as time shall last.

The Bible has exerted the happiest influence on men's temporal interests. It has raised the nations that have accepted its teachings and reduced them in a considerable measure to practice, from a state of barbarism to the highest forms of civilization. It has improved their health. It has increased their wealth. It has abolished serfdom and slavery, and promoted civil and religious liberty. It has favored peace. It has promoted learning and science, and improved and multiplied the useful arts. It has increased man's power over nature to an extent truly astonishing. It has favored trade and commerce, and increased and multiplied the conveniences and comforts of life. It has improved the very face of the earth, turning forests and wastes into fruitful fields and rich and beautiful gardens. It has made roads, built bridges, and erected lighthouses. It has favored marriage, restricted divorce, checked licentiousness, and greatly promoted domestic happiness. It has secured to men a seventh day's rest, and lightened their tasks on every day of the week. It has abolished the grosser forms of superstition, and freed men from a thousand horrors, obscenities, and cruelties.

It has produced a kind of men and women such as never appeared on earth before—men and women that take more pleasure in promoting the improvement and comfort of others, than in living for their own gratification.

It has produced a kind of institutions such as never were seen in pagan lands—asylums for the deaf, the dumb, and the blind; homes for the fatherless, the widow, and the stranger; hospitals for the aged, the sick, the helpless, and the insane, and the relief of all the varying wants and sorrows of mankind.

It has given birth to a kind of movements unknown to the nations of old; temperance movements, sanitary movements, educational movements, movements for every description of moral, social, and national reform.

It has produced a kind of governments such as never existed on earth before,—governments strong enough to maintain order, yet liberal enough to allow the intellectual, the moral, and the religious development of the people.

It has produced a feeling of brotherhood among men of different ranks and of different nations, and is tending to unite the people of all lands in one great family of faith and love.

It has awakened an interest in woman not known in pagan lands, and has converted her from a slave, a drudge, or a toy, into the companion, the counselor, the comforter and the equal of man.

It has awakened an unprecedented interest in children, delivering them from a state of slavery, and placing within their reach all the comforts and blessings of a free and happy life.

It has multiplied schools and colleges without end, extending the advantages of a good education to the children of all classes.

It has begotten an interest in the abject classes not felt before, and proved the means of raising millions of them, both men and women, to temperance, purity, and bliss, turning the corrupters and disturbers of society into its teachers and benefactors.

It has begotten in men's hearts new hopes and anticipations with regard to the future of their race, giving them a promise, and opening to them a prospect, of a regenerated and happy world.—Joseph Barker, a Converted Infidel.

NO TIME TO WASTE IN MAKING MONEY.

There is a legend well known to most of us—and which has an advantage over most legends in that it is substantially true—that a very distinguished man of science in this country was once approached by an eminent practical man, and urged to turn his great powers in a scientific investigation and exposition to effect in making a fortune.

And, to the great surprise of that man of business, the man of science responded, "But, my dear sir, I have no time to waste in making money."

Of all the recent great results of science, I think, sir, that those words have struck deepest and spread farthest in the average carnal mind on our side of the Atlantic.

"No time to waste in making money!" I have stood, sir, in the presence of a very eminent man of affairs—one whose word is a power in the great marts of the world, and watched him as he heard for the first time this astonishing dictum. He stood silent—apparently in awe. The words seemed to reverberate among the convolutions of his brain, and to be re-echoed far away, back, from depth to depth, among the deepest recesses of his consciousness—"No time to waste in making money!"—Pres. A. D. White.

THE PREACHER'S SALARY.

Nothing more cruel to a preacher, or disastrous to his work, can be done than to force upon him a feeling of dependence upon the charities of his flock. He is the creature of a popular whim, and a preacher without influence to those who do not respect him or his office sufficiently to pay him the wages due to a man who devotes his life to them. Manliness cannot live in such a man, except it be a torture—a torture endured simply because there are others who depend upon the charity doled out to him. Good, manly preachers do not want gifts; they want wages. They need them, and the people owe them; but they take to themselves the credit of benefactors, and place their preachers in an awkward and false position. If Christians do not sufficiently recognize the legitimacy of the preacher's calling to render him fully his wages, and to assist him to maintain his manly independence before the world, they must not blame the world for looking upon him with a contempt that forbids and precludes influence. The world will be quite ready to take the preacher at the valuation of his friends, and the religion he teaches at the price its professors are willing to pay in a business way for its ministry.—Sel.

An infidel on a steamboat was arguing that when he died there would be no more of him than of his old white horse, and turning to Mr. Hamline, afterwards a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church, he said, "Can you prove otherwise, stranger?" Mr. H. replied, "If when your old horse is reposing under the shade on a hot day, I should approach and whisper in his ear arguments to prove that he is immortal, would you not deem me a fool?" The company broke up in a roar of laughter. The poor man was left to hide himself as best he could. This was answering a fool according to his folly.

—In Erie, Pennsylvania, the courts recently rendered a decision of considerable importance for congregations. A sewer had been built through a part of the city, and the First Universalist church had been assessed for a part of the cost. The payment was refused, because according to the State law church property was free from taxation. The matter was taken to court, on the ground that the claim was not for taxes proper, but for improvements, but the decision was in favor of the church. The Supreme Court of the State was appealed to, but they a few days ago confirmed the decision of the lower court, so that according to their view church property, at least in Pennsylvania, cannot be taxed for city improvements.

The Invisible Children.—Oh, it is not when your children are with you; it is not when you see and hear them, that they are most to you; it is when the sad assemblage is gone; it is when the daisies have resumed their growing again in the place where the little form was laid; it is when you have carried your children out, and said farewell, and come home again, and day and night are full of sweet memories; it is when summer and winter are full of touches and suggestions of them; it is when you cannot look up toward God without thinking of them; nor look down toward yourself and not think of them; it is when they have gone out of your arms, and are living to you only by the power of imagination, that they are the most to you. The invisible children are the realest children, the sweetest children, the truest children, the children that touch our hearts as no hands of flesh ever could touch them.—Sel.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

THE LITTLE SCOTCH BOY WHO BECAME A GREAT TRAVELER.

All the children who are fond of reading books of travel, I am sure, have read the stories of Paul du Chaillu, and of his wonderful adventures in Africa, which he wrote specially for young people; but about the great Dr. Livingstone, whose travels were for a different object, and who wrote books for the grown-up people, the children may not know so much. The story of his life is a very interesting and instructive one, and shows how perseverance, industry and honesty can conquer all obstacles and make of an obscure little country boy a great and noble man.

Like many of the famous men of our own country, who have been born in remote country towns, and whose early life has been that of a farmer's boy or factory hand, so David Livingstone, or Davis, as his companions called him, was born at Blantyre, in Scotland, a small village near Glasgow, and at ten years of age was put to work in the cotton mill of the town, where he stayed till he was about twenty years old. From the time he was a little boy he had a strong love for learning, and would sit up late at night to read and study, and even carry his book into the mill with him, reading a sentence from it whenever his work permitted him to glance at the open page. Think of this as an example of industry and diligence, boys and girls, who find it so hard to study and "hate" your books and school. You have luxurious, comfortable homes; Livingtone's home was poor and unpretending; many of you have servants to do everything for you, and know nothing of what it is to work; he, when a little boy, began the hard, monotonous toil of a factory hand, and did everything for himself; many of you grow cross and fretful when asked to do the slightest service; he bore the most irksome toil with patience, and learned to profit by the discipline. He continued in the factory until quite a young man, having gained an advanced position by his diligence and perseverance.

When he was about twenty-one years old, he one day read a paper appealing to the churches of England and America for missionaries to China. This moved his heart very strongly, and he decided to become a missionary, although he could not then tell to what country he should go. His life thus far had been spent among poor people at the mills, whose sorrows and wants and burdens he was thoroughly acquainted with, so that his generous, sympathetic heart went out to the poor benighted people in distant lands who had not the opportunities for growing better and becoming good men and women that even the mill people had, and he determined to prepare himself to go to these poor, ignorant barbarians and try to benefit them. So, then, he left his home and studied medicine at first, as useful in his work among the people who knew nothing of doctors and medicine as you do; and after that he studied theology, which was to help him in preaching and instructing those to whom he was going. Thus he spent four or five years in preparing for his journeys, working hard and paying his way as he went. At last he felt himself ready to go, and after saying farewell to home he set sail for Africa, and after a voyage of three months landed in Cape Town, the southernmost point on the African land. He made but a brief stay here, hastening on to begin his work among the savage tribes in the interior. Indeed, it was a strange country to which he had come; a land of rocky ravines, of tangled forests, of desolate wastes, of thick jungles, unlike the land you know, of cultivated fields and pleasant homes, and beautiful rivers with boats upon their waters and railways along their banks.

The people, too, were strange, and lived under different laws and customs from ours. The tribes were named after different animals, which they worshiped superstitiously, and which they feared to kill or eat; part of their religious service was a weird, wild dance, which varied with each tribe, so that when two strangers would meet they would ask: "What do you dance?"—just as sometimes you hear your father, perhaps, ask a strange gentleman: "What city do you come from?" All kinds of wild animals inhabit this country, and were the terror of people. Fierce lions, hyenas, jackals, and wild dogs or dingoes roamed about at night and preyed upon the harmless zebras and antelopes, and on one occasion Dr. Livingstone was attacked and very near killed by a lion which he and a party of natives were hunting.

In so wonderful a country you may be sure he met with many strange and thrilling adventures, that sound like those of the beautiful young prince in your book of fairy stories, but are better than those because they show the perils a noble and heroic man encountered for the sake of doing good and benefiting mankind.

If I should undertake to tell you of all the wonderful things that happened to him; how he traveled into the heart of that great unknown country of Africa; how he discovered new lands, new rivers, and new lakes; how he was often near being left alone in the wilderness by his faithless followers; how he went for months and years without letters or news of any sort from home; how he was once reported by some deserting servants to have been killed, and was discovered by one of our own countrymen, Mr. Stanley, who tells of all his adventures in finding Dr. Livingstone; how at last he was overcome by the hardships and sickness of his wandering life, and died in the forest alone, with no friends near but his native servants, who found him on his knees by his bed with his head bowed in prayer—to tell you of all these things, and how they brought the body of this great and good man home to London, and gave him a grand tomb in beautiful Westminster Abbey, would take too long a time; and besides. children, I think you would rather ask your father and mother to read it to you, or else read it yourselves out of some book that tells it better than I can.—Christian Union.

An elephant keeper noticed that when his pets were fed on cakes and sweetmeats by the children they became unwell. Not being able to stand in front of them all the while, he had a sign painted warning visitors not to feed them. He was in the habit of pointing to this sign when he saw any one about to drop a cake or nut into the outstretched trunk. The keeper was sorely puzzled to find out who tore the sign down whenever his back was turned, until one day he caught one of the wise brutes dexterously removing it from the peg on which it hung and throwing it into a corner where it would not be noticed.

—Fifty years ago there was a boy in Africa who was taken prisoner in one of the fierce wars between the tribes, and was carried away from his home to be sold as a slave. First he was sold for a horse. Then his buyer thought him a bad exchange for the horse, and compelled his master to take him back. Then he was sold for so much rum. This was called another bad bargain by the man who had bought him, and again he was returned, to be sold for tobacco, with the same result. Nobody wanted the poor, miserable slave boy, who was on the point of committing suicide, when he was bought by a Portuguese trader, and carried away in a slave-ship. How little that wretched boy knew what the future had in store for him as he lay chained in the hold of the crowded slave-ship! But one of England's war-ships that were clearing the high seas of the slavers bore down upon the Portuguese vessel, rescued the captives, and the African boy was placed under Christian influences, baptized and educated, and to-day he is Bishop Crowther, England's black bishop in Africa.—The Gospel in All Lands.

TEMPERANCE.

COMPOSITION OF BEER.

In the manufacture of good beer, as it is called (I speak not now of the abominable adulterations, though they are common enough), three things are necessary; malt, hops and water. The water, though useful, is not food. The hop gives flavor, and helps to preserve the liquor, but it contains no feeding properties. To name its chemical constituents will suffice. These are volatile oil, resin—a bitter principle—tannin, malic acid, acetate, hydrochlorate, and sulphate of ammonia. The malt then is the only substance that can make the liquor feeding, either as it remains in the liquor, or as it may be converted into some other substance. Malt, we all know, is vegetated barley. Barley is food next in nutrition to wheat, and all we have to do is to ascertain how much of this feeding substance is found in the beer when men drink it. The brewing process will give us that, in tracing which we shall find, that at every step the object is, not to secure a feeding, but an intoxicating liquor, and to obtain this the feeding properties of the barley are sacrificed at every stage.

In making a gallon of beer six pounds of barley are used, which to commence with, is six pounds of nutritious food. In manufacturing this into beer it has to undergo four processes, in every one of which it loses part of its nutriment. The first is malting or sprouting. By this process the maltsters spoil the barley of one-fourth of of its nutriment, just in the same way as wheat is spoiled if it gets wet and sprouts in the field. Every housekeeper knows that when potatoes or onions sprout they lose much of their nutritive properties. The next process is that of mashing by which a saccharine solution is extracted from the grain, and here one-third of the barley is lost. Then follows the fermenting process, by which another fourth of it is converted into alcohol. The fourth process is that of fining. People don't like thick or muddy beer; and as some thick matter cannot be prevented coming over in mashing, the liquor is put to settle, and those settlings are disposed of as "barrel-bottoms." These bottoms are really parts of the barley, and here is another loss. Now in this gallon of beer how much of the barley is there left? At the outset you had some six pounds, or ninety six ounces. What is there now? Less than ten ounces. The truth of this you can easily ascertain. Get a pint of ale or beer and place it in a saucepan, then gently boil it over the fire. The fluid part will go—the solid part will remain. Thus every grain of solid matter can be obtained and properties and amount fully ascertained.

Scientific men have frequently made the experiment, and by careful tests demonstrated that the average quantity of solid matter found in a gallon of malt liquor is less than ten ounces. So that in manufacturing ale or beer you actually lose very nearly eighty parts out of eighty-eight, and all that you obtain in the place of it is upward of three ounces of alcoholic poison, which constitutes the strength of the liquor. What would you think of a man who should buy ninety-six ounces of wheat, making it it sprout, drying it, pouring hot water upon it, giving a part to the pigs, and throwing a part down the gutter, should waste upward of eighty ounces and should leave for himself and family only ten ounces? What if he did this for the purpose of getting about four ounces of poison, which will injure his health, destroy his reason, and corrupt his heart? Would you say that God sent the grain to be thus wasted, or would you call the poison which the ingenuity of this prodigal had extracted "a good creature of God?" Much has been said of waste and extravagances, but we know of no instance or example that will bear any parallel with the prodigality that is practiced in converting barley into malt and malt into beer. Cleopatra is said to have dissolved a precious gem in her glass and to have drunk at a banquet as a proof of the little value she could afford to set upon what was costly; but gems are less valuable than the food which God has created for the sustenance of life, and therefore he who destroys the precious grain of the earth destroys what is more valuable than pearls. and his criminality is not a little enhanced that he does this for the purpose of producing a poison. What then, we ask, is there to support or strengthen a man in a pint of ale or beer? Its contents are fourteen ounces of water, part of an ounce of the extract of barley, and nearly an ounce of alcohol. The water and alcohol go immediately into the veins, and while the alcohol poisons, the water, if not needed, unnecessarily dilutes the blood, overcharges the vessels and loads the kidneys and bladder; while there remains less than an ounce of indigestible extract of malt, which has been grown, roasted, scalded, boiled, embittered, fermented and drenched with water and alcohol till it seems unfit for the brute, far less the human stomach. Yet this is all that is left in the stomach to be digested. No wonder that all beer-drinkers feel a constant pain and sinking in their stomach, and that they are always craving for more drink.—Rev. J. B. Dunn.

Plainfield, N. J., is the scene of a remarkable temperance revival. Hundreds of drinkers have signed the pledge. Rum-shops have been closed. Men who have rented property for the sale of rum have publicly acknowledged their sin in so doing, professed repentance, and entered heartily into the work of reform. A wholesale liquor dealer went down to his firm in New York, resigned his place, returned to Plainfield, and in the evening meeting proclaimed himself henceforth a temperance man. The movement has been conducted entirely on Gospel principles and has had the hearty co-operation of all the pastors of the place. Much has also been accomplished in the same direction at Bound Brook and Somerville.—Ex.

How beautifully high license works: According to the sworn statement of W. D. Christy, City Clerk of the city of Des Moines, Iowa, the license fee in that city in 1871 was $150 per year, and that year there were twelve saloons. The next year the fee was increased to $200 and that year they had twenty-five saloons. The fee remained at $200 until 1880, when it was made $250, and the number of saloons rose to forty-nine, a gain of ten over 1879, the last year of the $200 fee. The fee was $250 until 1882, by which time there were fifty licensed saloons, and several that paid no license. In 1882 they clapped on a thousand dollar fee, and the first quarter sixty saloons took out license. Now the question is, if Des Moines keeps on raising the license fee, how long before she will have prohibition?

Here is a hint for the Christian agriculturist. One of Illinois' best men, a citizen of whisky ridden Peoria—of course you guess—I may as well tell. It was William Reynolds, president of the State Sunday-school Association, was invited to subscribe to the fund for the county fair. He immediately set down a good round sum, as he generally does, on condition that no intoxicants should be sold on the grounds during the fair. Several others followed his lead. Result: These subscriptions were never collected.—Signal.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON V.—May 4, 1884.—Christian Love. 1 Cor. 13: 1-13. Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Love is the fulfilling of the law. Rom. 13: 10.

"Though I speak with the tongues of men." It is impossible to fix the exact number of known languages, but their number can hardly be less than 900. The gift of tongues here referred to is the same as that which was given at Pentecost (see First Quarter, Lesson II., 1883). —The gift of tongues is placed first as that most overestimated at Corinth.—Ellicott. This was one of the most showy gifts, one most likely to be used for ostentation and pride (1 Cor. 14: 2). By "the tongues" is probably meant eloquence, as well as speaking in other languages.—Prof. Isaac Hall.

"And have not charity." The Greek word (agape) which is here used for love is peculiar to the New Testament (and a few passages in the LXX.). It is not to be found in any heathen writer. The word "charity," which signifies either tolerance or almsgiving, is an insufficient rendering of the original, and destroys the force of the passage, especially in verse 3, where "almsgiving" without love is pronounced worthless. The Latin caritas was used as the rendering of agape, probaply because the ordinary Latin word amor (love) was considered too significant of a mere earthly or fleshly affection; and hence the word "charity" in the English version. The word "love" had better be restored here. The rare purity of its surrounding atmosphere will completely deprive it of any earthly or sensual taint. It would be impossible to define love, as it is impossible to define life; but the best conception of what St. Paul means by love can be found from the description which he subsequently gave of it.—Ellicott. It contains all the fervor of the Hebrew "aspiration" and "desire," and of the personal affection of the Greek, benevolence toward men, affection toward God.—It is the parent of all other virtues, containing them within it. It is the sum of all other virtues, for "the greatest is charity." Humility, truthfulness, patience, magnanimity, the chasteness of temper that makes the soul white, the spirit of forgiveness that makes the soul Godlike, every excellence that exalts, every trait that adorns, is the child of benevolence.—Richard S. Storrs, D. D.

"Tinkling cymbal." Without love he would be no more acceptable to God than was the clangor of the brazen instruments employed in the idolatrous worship of the Egyptian Isis, or the noise of the tinkling cymbals which accompanied the orgies of the Greek Cybele.—J. Wentworth Butler. Such eloquence, without love, has little effect for good, does little for the character of the speaker, has little value in the world.—Peloubet.

"And understand all mysteries." The secret divine purposes, the hard questions that had perplexed rabbis and people, the dark things of God's providence, and his Word, and his world; the enigma's of the ages which all philosophers had failed to answer.—Henry.

"And all knowledge." The truths revealed and known, the whole range of Christian doctrine.—Henry.

"And though I have all faith." Not saving faith, but miraculous faith; the faith by which persons were enabled to work miracles.—Henry.

"And though I bestow all my goods." Here we have the thought of a charity extensive in its diffusion, as well as completeness in its self-sacrifice. The whole of the bestower's property given in charity, and so divided as to reach the largest number.—Ellicott.

"And though I give my body to be burned." This is a still higher work of love; namely, self-sacrifice for country or friends. Even a martyr's death might be included here. There may be an ostentation of self-sacrifice, an unlovely and counterfeit martyr spirit, an attempt to purchase heaven by almsgiving or apparent self-sacrifice.—Riddle.

"It profiteth me nothing." Love cannot act from a selfish motive. When a Buddhist ascetic leaps with smiling face on the blazing pyre, immolating his body that he may immortalize his spirit, what does it profit him? Nothing. The fanatic is in love with himself, and with no one else; he seeks his own sole happiness, whether in the shape of a coming deification, or of a present glorification of self. It should be borne in mind that the apostle had been staying in Athens, where he had probably seen or heard about the tomb of the Indian, with its epitaph: "Here lies Zarmanochegas, who made his own self immortal."—Lightfoot.

When Dr. Lionel Beal wishes to show what Life is, he applies the microscope to our bodies and finds at last "bioplasts," or life-workers or formers, so small that ten of them could move side by side on a razor's edge, one one-thousandth of an inch broad. And yet he can only tell what life is by what it does. So no one can define what love is, except, as Paul does in this description, by showing what it does, how it acts, what qualities it has. There are two sides to the picture:

I. NEGATIVE.	II. POSITIVE.
Charity is NOT—	Charity is— impatient.	patient.
envious.	benevolent.
proud and self-conceited.	humble and modest.
discourteous, indelicate.	courteous, with good taste.
selfish.	generous.
bad-tempered, fretful.	good-tempered.
evil-speaking, slanderous.	thinks well of others.
unbelieving.	truth-loving.
discontented.	hopeful.
easily discouraged.	faithful.
	long-suffering.

Take these evils from the world, and it would be like the dawn driving away the darkness and storms of the night. Fill the world with these good qualities, and it would be like spring clothing the earth with verdure and flowers and fruits in the balmy air of June.—Peloubet.

"They shall fail," i. e., be done away with. The gift shall cease to be necessary, for we shall speak with God face to face; and therefore it shall not be continued. When the prophecy is fulfilled, and the promised good is enjoyed, it is no more the prophecy; it is absorbed in its fulfilment.—Peloubet.

"Knowledge, it shall vanish away." All the knowledge which we now possess, valuable as it is, will be obscured and lost, and rendered comparatively valueless, in the fuller splendors of the eternal world; as the feeble light of the stars, beautiful and valuable as it is, vanishes, or is lost in the splendors of the rising sun.—Barnes. Said Cosrou to Mirza, "When the gates of Paradise are thrown open before thee, thy mind shall be irradiated in a moment. Here thou canst do little more than pile error upon error; there thou shalt build truth upon truth."

"But when that which is perfect is come." In the future world, after the resurrection, when our entire redemption begins.—Prof. Riddle.

"That which is in part shall be done away." Because the perfect includes the part, and vastly more. And all the imperfections of partial knowledge shall vanish in the light of full knowledge, as our childish ideas of the stars as points of light, as God's candles, are absorbed in manhood's knowledge of them as vast suns. So what the child learns with infinite pains about the letters of the alphabet vanishes in manhood's knowledge of literature. So our knowledge of the parts of a picture vanishes in the knowledge that comes from seeing it as a whole.—Peloubet.

"Darkly," obscurely; literally, in an enigma. In the presence of a profound riddle, with a problem before us and around us which we cannot solve. It is possible the apostle meant, "We look through a vague medium on a dark enigma." The enigma itself may be God's deep counsel of redemption, the contents of the gospel, which is a central mystery revealed, yet environed by a margin of mysteries unrevealed.—Cook.

"Face to face." Nearly all our words which express spiritual truths are metaphors or illustrations from physical facts; as Spirit and spiritual, from the wind; heaven, the perfect participle of heave, the uplifted air; sincere (sine cera), without wax. Now we see spiritual things through these enigmas; then by direct intuition, the veil of metaphor, of the flesh, being taken away.—Peloubet.

"But the greatest of these is charity." Love is the greatest, (1) for latitude, embracing all beings; (2) for endurance, it is eternal; (3) for honor, it is like God; (4) for nobility, because beneficial to man; (5) for manifestation, in its visible fruits.—Thos. Adams. Love is the more important virtue because (1) it exerts a wider influence; (2) it is more necessary to the happiness of society; (3) it overcomes more evils; (4) it is the great principle which is to bind the universe in harmony, which unites God to his creatures, and his creatures to himself, and which binds and confederates all holy beings with each other.—Barnes.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

THE FALSENESS OF LODGE CHARITY.

1. All other gifts without charity are nothing. Vs. 1–3. It does not matter how wise, eloquent or liberal a man may be who has not true charity; and the same rule which applies to a single individual, we can apply to organizations of men which profess to work for good objects. Of these none put forward such vast and high-sounding claims as do the various secret orders. Temperance societies claim to reform the drunkard; Masons and Odd-fellows profess to take care of the sick and poor, the widow and the orphan, but unless it can be proved that they actually practice true charity, their boasted claims are like the sounding brass and the tinkling cymbal.

2. The characteristics of true charity are not found in the secret lodge. Vs. 4–7. The lodge shows no mercy to those who violate its obligations. The penalty in Masonry is death in the most horrible forms. In the G. A. R. "of being treated and punished as a traitor." In the grange and the United Sons of Industry, "total expulsion from the order without the possibility of reinstatement, and to be forever disgraced among the brotherhood." This is not the charity which suffereth long and is kind. The church labors with offenders, expels them with sorrow when obliged to do so; and if they give evidence of genuine repentance, stands ready to forgive and take them back in the spirit of her Divine Master. "Charity envieth not," yet the numerous quarrels between lodges prove the truth of what has been frequently testified by seceders, that nowhere is there greater jealousy and strife than among secret orders. "Vaunteth not itself; is not puffed up." The lodge trumpets its good deeds far and wide, and puffs up the vanity of its members with the most grandiloquent titles the human mind can invent. "Doth not behave itself unseemly." The secret ceremonials of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship are disgraceful and ridiculous to the highest degree. "Seeketh not her own." The lodge seeks nothing but her own, for she binds her members to do good only to those of their own order.

3. Charity never faileth. V. 8. Every institution must fall which like the lodge is founded on human selfishness disguised as charity. It is a broken cistern that can hold no water. True charity is a fountain that flows alike in seasons of rain or drouth. Charity never fails because God is love, and every act or word that springs from love partakes of his own eternity.

4. The Christian puts away childish things. V. 11. The ceremonies of the lodge, even when they have a seeming innocence, are too puerile and childish for Christian men and women. Only children are expected to be amused with childish things, and even they drop them gradually as they advance to maturer years.

5. The lodge is deficient in faith and hope as well as charity. V. 13. Lodgemen can have no faith in their fellowmen or they would not hold their meetings behind guarded doors. Their hope is not founded on Christ and will fail them in the hour of need, and their charity, as we have shown, is a hypocritical pretense.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

How can we distinguish true charity from false? Matt. 7: 20. How does the church act with offenders? Matt. 18: 15–17; 2 Thess. 3: 15; 2 Cor. 2: 6–8. Then what must we conclude at the outset regarding the charity of the lodge?

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. W. T. Moffett, formerly of Illinois, has just organized the first United Presbyterian church in Dakota.

—The Woman's Missionary convention of the United Presbyterian church meets this year at Sparta, Ill., May 28th. The General Assembly of the same church meets in St. Louis about the same time.

—The Alabama Congregational Association proves that brethren Hinman and Feemster sowed good seed when working in the South. At the meeting in Montgomery, March 28, among the topics for review and discussion was "Secret Societies." Dr. Roy in his report to the Advance says, "Five years ago this body gave forth a strong testimony on the subject of secret societies. This year it showed that its shield was still holding temper in the heat of the conflict."

—A new church called the People's Tabernacle was lately organized in Cleveland, Ohio, which adopted the creed of the Chicago Avenue (Mr. Moody's) church of this city. The beauty of this creed is that it is a brief statement of doctrines composed entirely of selections from Scripture.

—In the last Bibliotheca Sacra Prof. Curtiss, of this city, relates an incident which occurred in the meeting conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Europe. Quoting from the Inverness Advertiser, he gives the following: "An immense hall was crowded last night. It looked as if all our jails, poorhouses and brothels had been emptied pell-mell into this wide area." The writer declared that he went steeled against any kind of excitement. A skeptic said to him as he was leaving the hall, with reference to the Christian helpers, "What brings these gentlemen and ladies here? Not money, not fame. There is a power at work here which I cannot fathom." Then another answered, "Yes, but do you know sir, that there are fine ladies nursing children in wretched hovels to-night, in order to let their poor mothers come here to this meeting?" It is more and more apparent that Mr. Moody is one of the true prophets of the latter days, raised up by God for a peculiar, a wonderful and a lasting work.—Advance.

—The mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London, says the Irish Christian Advocate, has been attended by results beyond even the exaggerated expectations of the most enthusiastic. At Stratford an exceedingly interesting incident took place. Two nights before the mission opened Mr. Bradlaugh appeared in the town hall in his old character of secularist lecturer, a role in which he has acquired an objectionable individuality which it is hard to separate from his public career, even if the one were not the shadow of the other. He attracted an immense audience; but, strange to say, the secretary of the club under whose auspices he delivered the lecture, was in a few days converted under Mr. Moody's teachings. There is still power, even for the worst of mankind, in the Word of God.—Telescope.

—Cyrus H. McCormick, the reaper manufacturer, made a formal tender to the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest, at the commencement exercises, of the buildings which he has recently erected for the use of the institution. The gift constitutes four residences, for the use of Profs. Skinner, Craig, Marquis and Johnson, and a dormitory which is to be five stories high, 40 x 130 feet in dimensions, and capable of accommodating seventy students. The five buildings represent a total cost of $100,000. In accepting the gift the trustees passed resolutions thanking the donor and the generous spirit which had prompted him to do so much toward establishing a theological seminary in the Northwest.

—Rev. W. M. Givens reports in the Telescope the work of one of the "minor orders" upon the life of a church: "Annapolis Mission, in the north-eastern part of the [Olney] district, was a few years ago a very promising circuit; but when the grange swept over this State a cruel wave struck this field of labor and reduced it to a second class mission. The grange is dead, but the church has barely survived. Bro. Cardwell is on this misson. He has worked as best he could, being blind.

—In the same paper Rev. P. B. Williams reports a gracious revival in Indianapolis: "This work was commenced under unfavorable circumstances. Many wondered if we were able to suport a movement of this kind: others, whether it would be profitable. But now all are ready to say it was a grand success. In all, there were 266 conversions, and 88 united with the church. This, considering two reasons, is a good per cent of the converts. First, many converts were already members of other churches; second, the host of secret society members who professed conversion help to cut down the per cent. And yet I am glad to be able to state to the church at large that quite a number gave up their lodge relations to become members of the church. Others have promised me that they will. Quite a number more will unite with us here. We have now received here 107 accessions to the church, making at present 196 members."

—The first edition of the entire Bible in the Zulu language has been recived at the mission stations in that country from America, where it was printed by the American Bible Society, under the superintendence of Rev. S. C. Pixley. The translation has been made from the original languages, and much labor has been bestowed upon it by different members of the mission during the last thirty-five years. The price is only six English shillings, and two shillings for the New Testament.

—The tabular view of the missions of the American Board at the close of 1883, presents the following facts: The Board has 19 missions, besides the North Pacific Institute, under its care, having 80 stations and 682 outstations. It employs 402 American laborers, of whom 147 are ordained ministers, 6 male and 2 female physicians, and 100 women other than the wives of missionaries. Of native laborers it has 144 pastors, 368 preachers, 1,011 teachers and 307 other helpers; a total of 1,830 native workers and 2,230 both native and foreign. It has gathered 275 churches with 19,333 members, of whom 1,688 were added in 1883. Its educational work is represented by 57 colleges and high schools with 2,066 pupils, 39 girls' boarding-schools with 1,549 pupils, and 835 common schools with 31,254 scholars—a total, under instruction, of 35,705. The receipts from all sources for the year ending August 31st, 1883, were $591,488.17, the expenditures $590,266.31. For the current year the Board asks its contributors for $1,000,000 to carry on and extend its already great and blessed work. Judging from past experience, if not gained this year it will not be long before this point is reached and surpassed.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

THE DIVINELY APPOINTED TEXT BOOK.

A CIRCULAR LETTER TO PASTORS, SUPERINTENDENTS, AND ALL FRIENDS OF THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

Chicago, April 3, 1884.

DEAR BROTHER:

As fellow-workers in the Gospel and in the Sabbath school, we have become painfully impressed with the prevalent disuse of the Bible as a text book. We rejoice heartily with all Christian people in the uniformity of Scripture instruction secured by the system of International Lessons and Leaflets, and we appreciate the valuable service rendered by the great variety of lesson leaves, class books and other helps so generally employed; but we are constrained to feel that there is need of making all these supplementary to the use of the Bible itself. We are led to believe that large numbers of the scholars never use it in preparing or reciting the lesson, and too often they have the teacher's example for depending entirely on the helps, with no Bible at hand. How can any such fragmentary method be any less injurious in a Sunday school than in a secular school?

Such a method tends inevitably to keep God's Word from the place it should occupy as the text book He has Himself provided. Such a disuse of the sacred volume prevents the familiarity with it, which is so desirable, and tends to a fragmentary and superficial method of study, by the exclusion of all reference to the context and to parallel passages, and in general leaves out of sight the divine order and relations of Scripture truths.

We feel assured that you will agree with us in the principle, for all evangelical Christians make the Sunday school, at least in theory, a distinctively Bible school. Therefore we venture nothing in requesting your sympathy and co-operation with pen and voice, in an organized effort to put the Bible into the hands of every Sunday school teacher and scholar in our country, and to secure its constant employment in studying the lessons both at home and in school.

Should not each scholar be persuaded, if possible, even at some sacrifice, to purchase a Bible for himself, or at any rate to own one?

Should not each teacher encourage its actual use among his scholars by precept and by example?

Should not each school adopt for itself a rule enjoining the use of that blessed Book in all regular exercises?

Perhaps you have already secured to the Bible in your school the place thus suggested. If so, kindly give us the result. But in any case we desire to know whether your experience has led you to approve the change which we urge.

In order to obtain definite returns from this letter, we recommend that the first Sunday of October next be fixed as the date upon which each Sunday school shall strenously endeavor that every member be possessed of a Bible of his own. That time is far enough in the future to secure concert of action among the schools, to obtain the necessary supplies of books, and to enable every scholar to earn or save money enough for the purchase.

If this recommendation be approved, we suggest also that the first Sunday of November next be observed by Sunday schools as a day of thanksgiving for the open Bible, and of prayer for the promised blessing upon its use.

Please favor us with your reply in full at the earliest practicable date, that we may be enabled to bring these recommendations before all the Sunday schools in the country if our circular letter meets general approbation.

We remain yours,

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Wood, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM AND GARDEN.

POTATO CULTURE.

In the present culture of potatoes greater attention is given to varieties produced than in the earlier days of the industry. This is true not only of those producers who grow potatoes for market, but also of those who aim only to supply their own tables. Among the recently introduced varieties there are an immense number of new seedlings, many of which give unmistakable evidence in appearance and character of belonging to the Rose family. Some of the varieties are not true seedlings, but have been changed into kinds distinct from the original by careful selection of seed. Many of these recent introductions seem unusually short-lived, especially when they fall into the hands of careless and unskillful cultivators. A variety of potato created by selection of seed is really only a sport, and needs to be bred with as much care as is displayed by the skillful breeder of Jersey or Shorthorn cattle in the selection of sires and dams.

General advice is of but little value in the management of special cases or under varying conditions. It matters but little how good or productive a new potato may be, the public must first learn its distinctive merits before any considerable demand can be created. We have in mind one of the best potatoes now grown, yet which was unsalable at first for several years, simply because the public was ignorant of its value. The potato under consideration was a dark-skinned tuber, and buyers were repelled by its appearance. Many of the lots first raised could only be disposed of on trial. Those who made the test were pleased, ordered large quantities, and spread the good news among their neighbors. In a few years a good local market was secured for this neighborhood favorite; yet to this day this potato, though productive and possessed of late keeping qualities, cannot be grown and sold to a profit for shipment, as it is not sought for in city markets, or outside of its local habitat.

A questionable method is practiced by some growers in selling new varieties of potatoes under the name of some familiar kind which in shape and form they most resemble. This is inexcusable, even under the common plea that the buyer may be benefited. The buyer is certainly deceived and often defrauded in such a transaction. As a case in point, the Late Rose has been so frequently sold for the Early Rose that discredit has been brought upon all potatoes of this class. The usual method of detecting this fraud is to cut into the potato. If it be red inside it is Late Rose and presumably of inferior quality. On the other hand, some really distinct and valuable new varieties of potatoes are red inside, which operates to their disadvantage, the popular prejudice being opposed to tubers thus colored. This fact should render farmers cautious about planting such seed, at least until a market for these varieties is assured.

The popular fancy demand a potato rather long or oval in shape, slightly flattened on one side, with few and shallow eyes and a smooth skin. Those of a medium size are preferred, since the very largest potatoes are apt to carry hollow insides. Again, many of the large tubers are inclined to coarseness and are of inferior quality, though these defects do not exist in all large varieties. In growing such potatoes, it is best, therefore, to plant on ground not very highly manured, and close enough, so that the tubers will grow only of medium size.

Since the general failure of the Peachblow many people have forgotten the taste of a really good potato. Most of the Rose class of potatoes are as nearly flavorless as possible. This is their distinctive merit, and is also their weakness. Persons who remember the old potato flavor of the Peachblow are not satisfied with the balls of white starch which illustrate the modern potato any more than were the children of Israel with the manna that fell in the wilderness. The individual taste of most of the consumers has degenerated so that the difference is not appreciated; but those who are really potato hungry will readily distinguish it. What is demanded to-day is a potato of the vigorous and productive habit, combined with the flavor of the old-fashioned Peachblow, and with eyes rather nearer the surface. If the coming potato could also resemble the Peachblow in appearance it would add to its popularity, though such a variety, whatever its appearance, would soon make a market for itself. There are still localities where a few Peachblows are grown in a limited way, and every spring, especially in New York State, there is an inquiry for such potatoes, both for seeding and eating. However, the glory of the old Peachblow seems to have departed, and, despite the many good and even more productive new varieties, it is difficult to name one to take its place. It was this and the Mercer or Meshannock that gave people the liking for potatoes. Nowadays most families use potatoes extensively, more from force of habit than anything else, and a most important branch of farm economy has potato culture already become.—American Cultivator.

DAIRY INTERESTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

A paper read before the Milk Association of Deckertown, N. J., March 8th, furnishes much valuable information relative to the dairy interests of the United States. It is shown that it requires 15,000,000 cows to supply the demand for milk and its products in this country, and that there are invested in the dairying business of the United States over $2,000,000,000, an amount nearly double the capital invested in banking and other commercial industries. It requires the cultivation of over 60,000,000 acres of land to furnish food for the above number of cows. More than $200,000,000 is invested in dairy machinery and implements alone. The men employed in dairying occupations number 700,000, and 1,000,000 horses are necessary. The cows and horses consume annually 30,000 tons of hay, 90,000,000 bushels of cornmeal, and the same amount of oatmeal, 275,000,000 bushels of oats, 2,000,000 bushels of bran, and 30,000,000 bushels of corn, to say nothing of the brewery grains and questionable feed of various kinds that are used all over the country. It costs $400,000,000 to feed these cows and horses. The hired help engaged on the dairy farms of the Union costs $168,000,000, or an average price of $20 a month per capita. The annual yield of the average cow is placed at 450 gallons, making the total milk product 6,750,000,000 gallons a year. The farmers' receipts for this milk, averaging it at 12 cents a gallon, amount to $810,000,000. Cheese and butter use up 50 per cent of the milk yield. To make a pound of cheese 10 pounds of milk are required, and 27 pounds of milk make one of butter. The comparative nutritive qualities of milk is as 3½ pounds to one pound of prime beef. A fat steer furnishes 50 per cent of boneless beef, but it would require about 24,000,000 steers, weighing 1,500 pounds each, to produce the same amount of nutrition as the 15,000,000 cows supply with their annual yield of milk.

A Life Doubly Assured.

A RESIDENT of Baugor, Maine, writing to C. N. Crittenton, New York, for a supply of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, mentions incidentally that three months ago a New England life-insurance company refused to grant him a policy on the ground that he was consumptive. "But," he adds, "thanks to the healing properties of that invaluable preparation my lungs are now perfectly sound, and I yesterday passed a medical examination without an objection, and insured my life for $5,000. IN BRIEF.

Bishop Tuttle, missionary bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church, is authority for the statement that the Edmunds act is not a failure in Utah, but is doing much good. It has introduced an entering wedge between polygamous and non-polygamous Mormons. The young men appreciate the advantage they derive from the disfranchisement of the old sinners, and the latter feel their stigma.—Examiner.

At Clinton, Mass., the Unitarian minister and people have agreed to dispense with the use of wine at the Communion, substituting in its stead water. All this is consistent, in view of the fact that they may really be said to count the blood an unhallowed thing.—Christian Recorder.

Not long ago a new member of Congress was invited to a dinner. He describes it thus: "There wasn't nothin' on the table when I got there but some forks, and spoons, and bricky-brack. Presently they brought in some soup. As I didn't see nothin' else I thought I'd eat all the soup I could get, though soup is a mighty poor dinner to invite a feller to. So I was helped four times; and then came on the finest dinner I ever see, and there I set," groaned he, "chock full of soup."—Hartford Press.

Stanley's process of civilizing the Africans is rather one of demoralization, "making them ten times more the children of Satan than before." The London Standard says that "in acquiring from two native chiefs a piece of land, in the name of the International African Association, he gave, for instance, twenty-five kegs of powder, one keg of rum, fifty-five guns, twenty-five kegs of gin, twenty-five kegs of liquor, and promised them at the same time, during their life, a monthly supply of three pieces of dress-stuff, and one gallon of rum. If that is the civilization with which the poor heathen world is to be blessed, one must wish that these lands had never been discovered. What entirely different things did the noble Livingston expect of Stanley! It cannot be denied that whisky is about the poorest kind of civilizing agent. It always was, and always will be, the greatest evil the promoters of Christian civilization have to contend against, both at home and abroad."

IMPOSSIBLE ESCAPE.

ABSOLUTE TRUTH WITH COLLATERAL PROOF FROM WHICH THERE CAN BE NO APPEAL.

For the past three years we have had a standing offer of $5,000 for any statement of cure published by us which was not, so far as we know, bona fide. We did this in order that all readers might know the absolute truth of all our assertions and that they were based upon the value of our remedy and not upon idle words. Below we give a few extracts from recent letters, which speak for themselves. We will only add that we could furnish one hundred thousand more of a similar nature did occasion require, but we believe the entire American public is now convinced of the positive value of Warner's Safe Cure.

"I suffered for over twenty years with a lame back caused by kidney complaint, and my spine and nervous system were badly affected. When I had abandoned all hope I began the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and have not felt so well and strong for twenty years."
Fon du Lac, Wis. J. J. Wright.

"For two years I suffered intensely and was made miserable through diseased kidneys and bladder, with nervous exhaustion and entire prostration. Doctors and medicine did not afford me any relief, and I was advised to use Warner's Safe Cure, which I did in connection with the Safe Pills, and am thankful to state I am entirely cured of the dreadful malady."
Mrs. Dormer,
448 South Tenth street.
Denver, Col., Feb. 19th.

"I want to state how much my husband has improved while taking Warner's Safe Cure. All swelling has disappeared from his limbs; his water trouble is much better, and his voice is so improved that he preaches every Sabbath. We are very thankful. The people all around here are taking the remedy, and some are getting well by the use of a few bottles. Multitudes more must have it."
Mrs. Rev. F. A. Soule.
Sing Sing, N. Y., Feb. 29th.

"For a score of years I suffered with what the doctors pronounced dilation and valvular disease of the heart, but now I am led to believe that the heart trouble was only secondary and a symptom of other complaints. Frequently I was threatened with death by suffocation, my breath failing me entirely. I became cold and numb, and was as near death as any living person ever has been. This was three years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed complete health wholly through the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

DORE GALLERY
Of BIBLE ILLUSTRATIONS and Stories. Including 52 cartoons, and a portrait of Dore. New and finer edition, large quarto, bevelled boards, fine cloth, richly ornamented. Price reduced from $5.00 to $2.00.

The unrivaled cartoons of the most widely famous artist of modern times; the most graphic illustrations of the sublime events and truths of the Bible, ever drawn by an artist's pencil.

The battles of The Literary Revolution have been fought principally in the interests of choice literature for the masses. It is proposed to win also for them the best works of the great masters illustrating literature.

Wonderful Offer.
Notwithstanding the marvelously low price, I offer the following discounts to agents and clubs:

5, or more, copies, each $1.50.
10, or more, copies, each $1.25.

ON CONDITION: First, That the addresses of all members of the club are sent with the orders. Second, That not more than one name in a club shall be that of a customer who has previously purchased books from me. Specimen for club agent, $1.50.

The point to this "wonderful offer" is, that I want new customers, which, as experience proves, means permanently increased trade.

Health by Exercise.
By GEORGE H. TAYLOR, M. D. Large 12mo., Long Primer type, 462 pages, with numerous illustrations. Cloth, 50 cents.

A new, enlarged edition of this greatest authority on the topics treated. A book for both healthy people and invalids—adapted to home use as well as for the skillful physician. What specific exercise is appropriate for specific ailments, how to prevent, as well as cure disease, are the practical questions solved.

"Blessed say I, is the man who has a good doctor, but more blessed he who can do without him. To enable my readers so to do has been my aim."—From Author's Preface.

500,000 Volumes.

CHOICE BOOKS—descriptive catalogue free. Books for examination before payment on evidence of good faith. Not sold by dealers—prices too low. Books by mail 20 per cent. extra, for mailing.

SECRET SOCIETIES FOR SALE BY THE
National Christian Associat'n
221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A complete Catalogue sent free on Application.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

The Broken Seal: or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7.50 Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1 25.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—The probability is that no measure regulating the counting of the electoral vote will be passed at this session of Congress. This may turn out unfortunately, as there is no certain assurance that complications concerning the election of President may not ensue, especially if there should be several candidates in the field.

—Majority and minority reports have been prepared by the subcommittee of the House committee on Pacific railroads. The former proposes to extend the provisions of the Thurman act to the Kansas Pacific road, and to withhold from the subsidized lines all payments for services rendered. The minority report states that at the maturity of the bonds issued there will be due the government $102,376,312.

—A petition was received by the Senate from Mrs. James A. Garfield and five hundred other citizens of Cleveland, praying that the Nez Perces be returned to their home.

—The House committee on Territories, by a vote of 7 to 5, has adopted the substitute offered by Mr. Alexander to Cassidy's bill providing for the appointment by the President of a commission to govern Utah. The provision relative to marriages requires they shall be solemnized by a minister, judge, or justice of the peace, and the person so officiating shall file a certificate of marriage before the County Recorder.

—Senator Sherman reported to-day from the Committee on Library an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bills, proposing an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of Mrs. Fassett's painting, "The Electoral Commission."

—Friday the House committee on Postoffices and Postroads by a vote of 10 to 1 adopted a resolution declaring it the sense of the committee that it is expedient to adopt the contract system of postal telegraphy.

COUNTRY.

—All cases in the Federal docket at Charleston, S. C., for violation of the national election laws were discontinued Friday upon motion of the District Attorney, the latter claiming that in the present state of public sentiment convictions were impossible.

—A decline of 3 cents in highwines at Cincinnati Friday caused excitement in the whisky pool, which had not ordered the reduction, and is reported now in danger of collapse.

—A sudden storm Friday morning wrecked the colored church at Dallas, Texas, which was used also as a school. A wing of the structure fell in, injuring several children seriously, one fatally. Shade trees and fences in several parts of the city were leveled.

—E. D. Hogan, the aeronaut, made a balloon ascension Friday from Jackson, Mich., a lumber wagon being attached to his balloon. A dispatch (not confirmed) was received later from Cambridge, Ohio, that Hogan had fallen to the earth.

—The memorial services of the late Wendell Phillips were held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Friday afternoon, hundreds being unable to gain admission. The Governor and Council, Federal and State Judges, municipal officers, and literary and other distinguished persons were present in great numbers. George William Curtis delivered the oration.

—Judge William P. Murphy, of Sparta, Ill., accidentally fell from a third-story window at St. Louis, Thursday night, and was killed.

—A cyclone swept Blackhawk, Miss., Monday, leveling the school, church, dwellings and barns, and seriously injuring many persons. The value of property destroyed is large. A tornado visited Chiply, Ga., and its vicinity early Tuesday, devastating the district and killing several persons.

—Mary M. Windsor, recently an inmate of a convent, lectured at Annapolis, Md., Tuesday night, alleging gross immoralities between priests whom she named and Sisters of Mercy.

—Widespread terror prevailed in the Shenandoah valley the other evening, occasioned by a crazy balloon cutting queer antics in the heavens. There was not wind enough to carry it along very rapidly, and it became the toy of capricious upper currents. Being a large one, that had gotten away from an aeronaut in Tennessee, it was rather difficult to recognize, as the gas had escaped until it had lost its shape. At times it was the very figure of an immense eagle.

—Queen Pomare V., of Tahiti, arrived in New York from Havre Tuesday. She will stop a few days, and then proceed to San Francisco, whence she will sail on the 1st of May for Tahiti.

—It is calculated that there are now residing in the United States nearly a thousand Japanese, and of this number it is said that not one has ever been convicted of any criminal offense in an American court.

—An exploring party that has just returned from a point 150 miles north of Missoula, M. T., reports having found twenty-two cascades, each of which is over five hundred feet high. They also discovered a true glacier a mile in width and over five hundred feet in height. According to their stories the Yellowstone is nowhere alongside of this wonderful place.

—A dispatch from Brenham, Texas, says: A negro named Gibbs brutally murdered the wife of L. P. Moore, a prominent farmer of Burelson county, on Saturday evening, because she would not allow him to sit at the supper table with the family. The whole community turned out, and on Sunday afternoon overtook Gibbs ten miles away and captured him after a fight, in which the negro was wounded. He was taken back to Moore's place where the exasperated citizens chained him to a post and burned him to death. Gibbs was an escaped convict.

—The first installment of the cost of the Cincinnati riots is the introduction of a bill into the legislature appropriating $500,000 to restore the records destroyed in the burning of the court house.

—Two terrible accidents occurred on the Western & Atlantic railway, April 15, one to a passenger train and the other to a north-bound freight train. The passenger went through a trestle bridge near Ackworth, Ga., and the engine, tender, mail-car and smoking-car were dashed into the torrent many feet below. Three persons were killed. The engine is a total wreck. About the same time a north-bound freight train went through a trestle five miles from the scene of the above accident. The engineer and fireman were instantly killed. Both accidents are due to the terrific rain storm.

FOREIGN.

—General Gordon has received from the English government a message urging him to withdraw from the Khartoum, but ignores the advice.

—Patrick Joyce, Secretary of the Fenian Brotherhood, has issued a circular addressed to all Irishmen calling upon them to continue the dynamite policy.

—A dispatch from General Gordon states that the Tegeba tribes had twice defeated El Mahdi, which places the False Prophet in precisely the same position as General Gordon is, completely hemmed in. Zebehr Pasha is willing to go to Khartoum and act under the authority of the Khedive, but not under General Gordon.

—The Pope has issued to the cardinals an encyclical relating to secret political societies The Pope's letter to the cardinals gives an elaborate explanation, historical, philosophical and political of the origin and purpose of political secret societies. He pronounces Freemasony the inspiring element in all the secret associations of Italy.

—The Catholic mob which assailed the Protestants at Carbonnear, N. F., April 13th was later dispersed by the Protestants. One man was fatally wounded. On Monday a Catholic shot at an Orangeman when the partisans of the latter turned out with guns and bayonets and paraded the streets all night. A war ship is en route to the scene of the disturbance.

—The exodus to the States continues from Canada. Large numbers are leaving from all the country districts, principally for the New England manufacturing centers. It is said the Catholic bishops will shortly issue pastorates urging their flocks to stay at home.

—The latest advices from Shanhai indicate that the Chinese government is greatly exercised at the recent French successes in Tonquin. Persons in any way responsible for the reverses are being degraded and punished, and active measures are being taken to prevent a further loss of prestige. The viceroy of Canton has been publicly degraded for refusing to obey orders. The officers answerable for the loss of Bach Ninh have been condemned to be beheaded, and the governor of Yunnan has been summoned to Pekin to receive punishment. A general levy of men for the Chinese army has been ordered.

BUSINESS.

NOTES.

We again wish to call the attention of canvassers for the Cynosure to the necessity of their stating in their letters that there is an extra copy due them, when such is the fact.

1st. Unless you do state it, the subscription clerk may not think of it.

2d. When you send in a few names at a time, it is impossible for us to keep the account so as to know when each has his quota of subscribers, for we have not the time.

3d. Some have preferred not to take any commission though sending in full clubs. But we wish it clearly understood that if anyone who wishes it has failed to receive his extra number of the Cynosure or any commission due, we hope that they will write us at once that we may correct the error.

4th. We are doing the business for you, friends and if it is not done satisfactorily we hope you will write us a personal letter.

Buds and Blossoms is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. We shall be happy to introduce this magazine to hundreds of American homes, and have secured a special arrangement from the proprietor. Buds and Blossoms is 75 cents per year; with the Cynosure the two will be $2.50, or any subscriber who has already paid for this paper can get the magazine at the same rate.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our advertisers treat the readers well.

Moncure D. Conway, whose checkered public life, begun as a pro-slavery Methodist preacher, has run through the phases of an anti-slavery advocate, a Unitarian preacher and lecturer, and last in London a preacher of the "Rationalistic faith," has determined to give up his London church and the pulpit for America and a literary life. It does not seem like a compliment to this country when he speaks of Americans as easily influenced in favor of "right changes," and therefore a more fruitful field for the infidel notions which he is now promulgating. He thinks that Washington is the central point for this work, and he will make no mean addition to the failing influence of Ingersoll. It is an interesting question why infidelity and the lodge make Washington their headquarters.

A paper signed by seven hundred names led by Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and his brother John Quincy calls a meeting in Boston this week to form a league against the continued high tariff rates of the government. Their reasoning sounds sweeter to a poor man than that of the protectionist, thus: "The present enormous surplus in the national revenue is demoralizing and dangerous, and should be cut down without further delay, not by increasing public expenditure, but by lessening the burden of taxation. This burden should be removed from the necessaries of life and not from whisky and tobacco. The policy of taxing imports, not for the purpose of raising revenue, but for obstructing trade, is unsound, and must ultimately be abandoned."

The Odd-fellows may yet be able to say from experience "You know how it is yourself," but not after the manner of the great and lamented Mason, William Tweed. A few years ago ambitious and snobbish members of that order got up a set of degrees, corresponding to Knight Templarism in Freemasonry. But this "circle," by a singular taste called "Patriarchal," could not manage the horse they had caught. The Odd-fellow Grand Lodge decided after a desperate struggle that its members had no authority for surplus degrees and must give them up or leave the order. The alternative was avoided by making the "Patriarchal Circle" a new secret society, distinct from Odd-fellowship. But the old society leaders are beginning to tremble for their supremacy. They fear the new lodge is working under its own grips to get into the saddle again, and a "Patriarchal" correspondent of the Inter Ocean seems to intimate that the thing is already accomplished. "Don't trouble yourself," he writes to an alarmed Odd-fellow. "Even if the P. C. members are working secretly to get control of the order of Odd-fellowship, it will do you no harm, for it will get into good hands, and if you are repentant, and say you are sorry for what you have done against the circle, and will never do so any more, the boys won't hurt you."

JAMES G. BIRNEY.

[See pages 3 and 8.]

The courts have "sins of commission" as well as of "omission" for which they are heaping up popular wrath and preparing for a Cincinnati mob. A Chicago justice has fined a ragged and friendless news-boy $10 for getting drunk; and a week ago, in Judge Williamson's court, two men were sent to the penitentiary, one for a year the other for three for stealing a bag or coal from the Alton railway company! They were poor men and friendless, and could do nothing against a powerful corporation, and perhaps stole to mitigate the suffering of wife and children. But thieves and gamblers and confidence men by the score, who are able to make known their distress Masonically, or can employ a shrewd and unscrupulous lawyer, find no trouble in avoiding just punishment. A change must come in the administration of justice. Thousands are repeating under breath, "It must come;" but they dread the storm that shall sweep away the refuge of lies. It will beat down many an innocent head with the guilty.

Mr. Young, auditor of the Union Pacific Railroad at Omaha, deserves mention beside the late Col. Hammond in his regard for the Sabbath day. A base ball club made up of railway employes has planned an eastward trip; but Mr. Young forbids his clerks to leave their desks, because the club has Sunday games on its programme. Little of that righteous concern for the law of God had a Fort Wayne grand jury a few days since. A base ball club was before them for indictment for playing on the Sabbath. The judge pointed out the violation of law, but the jury excused the boys!

A conference of Ben. Butler with some of his henchman in New York gives color of truth to the alarming story about the great Butler secret society which will try to carry him into the White House next November. With Walter H. Sharpe, John W. Keogh and John F. Henry, he has arranged for the nomination by the anti-monopoly party of Butler and Reagan of Texas, the Greenback convention in Indianapolis to endorse the ticket. Henry is president of the anti-monopoly organization formed here in McCormick Hall last year. Keogh was one of the speakers at that meeting who tired the crowd out and stepped from the platform to the rear of the hall to smoke and swear. Sharpe, we believe, published a few years ago the Advocate in New York and had Dr. Albert G. Mackey for his Masonic editor. He is to run the Butler machine. Audacity is the timber under this platform. That it should ever succeed seems monstrous and impossible—but Butler was governor of Massachusetts for no better reason than he has for being President.

A GREAT DISCOVERY.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Fifty years ago we were taught that the millenial glory would be the result of converting sinners from sin to holiness and never thought that sin itself might be sanctified and so secure the same result. True, we might have learned this of Rome centuries ago. She could tamper with fundamental law and make the means sanctify the end. Not till within the last half century have Protestants found this new way. Time was when we all believed that sinners must be converted from card-playing and all such things, to Christ and to the church, but it is now generally thought, that by taking gambling right among the saints, and so by sacred contact its virus is removed, and thus this practice so long condemned by the church is made a saintly exercise. In this way the church can utilize gambling to her own aggrandizement and edification. What economy! Many years ago it was not regarded as specially saintly to frequent the opera and theatre, but these practices are not only soundly converted to the church, but are now the chief attraction in pulpit and orchestra. A church without operatic preaching and singing would be deemed "behind the times" and doomed in the world's esteem.

Fifty years ago profane swearing in the street and in the lodge, was in the eye of the church, a grievous sin, and was subject to prompt discipline. Now so many "good men" (?) have adopted these practices that the church takes them into her fellowship, while ministers, class-leaders, deacons and elders are foremost in lodge swearing, the worst sort of profanity, till sanctified by the church. So what used to be condemned by the church as downright profanity is now sanctified to her use and is made her "handmaid." If you cannot convert the sinner from the lodge to the church, why then, convert the lodge to the church, which means, always and ever, the church to the lodge. "So mote it be," responds the Grand Master.

This is to be as wise as a serpent and harmless as a scorpion. Let us go on in this direction in the same ratio for fifty years to come and all the sins recognized and forbidden in the Decalogue, will be sanctified by and to the church. Then the enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent will be abolished and the world and the church go hand in hand to the "Grand Lodge above," or some other good place where "dogs and sorcerers and fornicators and murderers and idolators and all that love and make a lie" shall repose in sweet wedlock. Is not this a short route to the millennium? When all the crimes known to this apostate world are sanctified and adopted by the church our conflicts will all be accomplished. Though the world continue to hate the Master, it cannot hate his unfaithful Bride which ceases to testify of its works that they are evil.

Who, but the church, can regulate the moral sense? God's people have in every age given tone to the people's conscience. But when the "salt has lost its savor" and pride, worldly amusements, profane swearing, and the legions of wrongs are sanctified by the church to the church, she must soon be "trodden under foot of men," unless she repents and faces right about. A corpse has the human form but it is not a man. The man has gone out and the result you see in the ghastly, cold, motionless form of a man, called a corpse. So when a religious society, called a church, having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof, ceases to be "led by the Spirit of God," it is lifeless, soulless, and is hence a moral corpse. Such is Rome to-day and such will be soon, if not already so, such religious bodies as are led by the spirit of the world. When God's people take high ground for God, against all sin, sinners will be struck under pungent conviction, as of old, and flee for refuge to lay hold on Christ, but when nearly all the sins of the world are adopted by the church, our revivals will need reviving and our conversions will need converting.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—Not mine to give.

MY BRETHREN:—The true reformer may get a glimpse of the promised land. If his standpoint of disinterestedness is as high as Mount Pisgah, he may look across the streams and mists of the intervening valleys and see the green and smiling fields beyond. But he must not be impatient; he must not hasten down from the mountain, get ahead of the ark, swim the river, and rush into the goodly land of promise in order to get the first choice lot for himself.

My friends; when our Lord had set his face towards Jerusalem with the solemn purpose of meeting the Tempter in his last strong-hold, viz.: in the temple itself, he was appealed to by an ambitious woman for the first two places in his kingdom for her two sons, who were doubtless devoted followers of the Lord, and very able, sincere men. Yet with all their sincerity, there doubtless lingered a strong selfish feeling that their Lord's kingdom was to be one of earthly wealth and grandeur.

But the Lord told the ambitious office-seeking woman that the kingdom of heaven was not made for furnishing offices to its followers. It was the duty of its subjects to serve it, not to plot for posts or offices of distinction in it. We cannot make terms with the kingdom of heaven; log-roll for its benefits, and serve it on the condition that it will serve us with offices of trust, and profit, and distinction. As true reformers we must show a stronger desire to serve our cause than to take the elevated seats on its right hand and on its left. Our cause has nothing to give at our asking; it is despotic, and may demand anything of us. We belong to it; are slaves to it, and can have no other desire but to serve it.

My friends, there is no greater cause on the face of the globe than Anti-masonry. It is the cause of humanity against the devices of the devil; the cause of republics against imperialism; the cause of liberty against slavery; the cause of truth against glaring, shameless falsehood. No man down on his face in the dust before the image of a snake imploring divine aid and protection ever exhibited a more wretched spectacle, or one less suiting the dignity of human nature, than does the man under Christian light who worships the darkening moral monstrosities of the Masonic lodge.

Yea, verily, my friends, there is no greater earthly cause than ours. It aims to emancipate not a few Africans only from slavery, but the whole human race; not a few wretched unfortunates only from wine, and opium and strong drink, but the whole world from the deadly, soul-destroying intoxication of secret acts and Christless worship.

My friends, we must have Presidents; and it is our duty to vote for Anti-masonic Presidents; but we must never forget that out first duty is to our cause. We should labor and pray for the coming of Anti-masonry; and should never vote for a Freemason under any circumstances, for that would be moral confusion. If we are not permitted to seek for seats on the right and left of majesty for ourselves, least of all should we vote to put Masons or self-seekers there. O that there might be millions of voters who in a question of true reform would dare to stand alone and ask for no office either on the right or left.

SO MOTE IT BE!

ELIJAH'S GREAT TRIAL TEST.

BY REV. GEO. THOMPSON.

It had been a time of general wickedness in Israel. Ahab married a heathen, idolatrous wife, erected altars to 450 priests of Baal, and "sold himself to work wickedness." Jezebel sought to slay the true worshipers of Jehovah, and many were put to death.

At this juncture Elijah appeared to Ahab, and said, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew, nor rain, these years, but according to my Word" (1 Kings 17: 1); and he "prayed that it might not rain, and it rained not for three years and six months."

Elijah was provided for all this time. Ahab sought him in all the kingdoms, but found him not.

Suddenly (after three and a half years of famine), Elijah appeared and called a general meeting of king and people, and of the false prophets, to Mt. Carmel. It was a great and notable gathering.

Then Elijah boldly cried aloud to the multitude, "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the LORD be GOD, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." But no one answered. Then he proposed a test, to which they all agreed. The test is made.

Baal is vanquished and Jehovah triumphant. The priests of Baal are put to shame, and Elijah is soon "master of the occasion." All look upon him with awe, and are ready to do his bidding. Not a "dog moves his tongue against him." Ahab looks on with wonder, and is ready to obey the Prophet, whose life he so long and zealously sought.

In the enthusiasm of the moment Elijah gave the astounding command, "TAKE THE PROPHETS OF BAAL. LET NONE ESCAPE." "And they took them; and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there."

How wonderful all! But he takes them at their word. They had agreed to the test before all; and since it had been thus proved that GOD was the proper object of worship, it followed that Baal was a deception, and his priests false teachers; and such were required to be put to death. There were none to oppose the execution. It was done.

Did these things really happen? (1) The Bible (1 Kings 18) says that they did. But if any doubt this word, then (2) The names given to places there, from that time to this, are clear proof of the same.

The celebration of the Fourth of July is proof that there was such an event as our "Declaration of Independence."

So the remembrance of these events has been perpetuated to the present among the people of that country, by the names given as follows: (1) There is still a broad terrace there on Mt. Carmel, suitable for such a gathering, called by the people "The place of burning!" (2) The large spring is still there which supplied the water needed for the occasion (3) A mound there is called "The hill of the Priests.' (4) The brook is named Nahr-el-mokatta, which means "The river of Slaughter." (5.) The mount is called "The mount of Elijah."

These names would never have been so given, and handed down if the events of 1 Kings 18, had not been a reality.

Then the Bible is true, and GOD is still the one supreme object of love and worship; and all other systems are deceptions and ruinous. O, votaries of the world, "how long halt ye?" Will you not submit to and love him as your God before it is too late?

Christians, be his faithful witnesses, and so live that he can hear your prayers, that God will arise and plead his own cause.

The worshipers of Baal are yet numerous, and their priests, under the names of "Worshipful Master," "Grand High Priest," "Most Excellent," etc., etc., are many times 450. (For proof of this statement see "THE MASTER'S CARPET," by E. Ronayne, and the numerous quotations from standard Masonic authorities). The facts therein stated are startling, and unknown to the lower degrees.

Pierson says "The religious system of Masonry comes from the East, and has reference to the primitive religion, whose first occupation was the worship of the sun." (Baal was the sun god of the ancients).

Again he says "All of the Masonic symbols of the present day can only be thoroughly comprehended, and properly appreciated by this reference to sun worship." Hence their facing the East.

Would that every one could read this book. Let light go forth, and discussion increase, and conventions be called, and papers be multiplied, and Elijahic prayers ascend, till the fire of God shall descend to consume "with the brightness of his coming" these relics of ancient heathenism, and abominable idolatries and cruel tyrannies which enslave so many of our sons, and fathers, and rulers; and inflict so much evil upon us as a nation and as churches.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.—H. E. Reynolds, in Mysteries of Masonry, says on page seven, "All the work of our order is for the sake of divine life." Again he says, "The degrees of Masonry are degrees of regeneration." Again he says, "When a man becomes a Royal Arch Mason, he is a man-angel and is led of the Lord."

Dr. Oliver, a very eminent and high Mason, who has written much and is high authority in Masonry, says in his work, Star in the East, p. 18, "The business of Masonry is enforcing the duties of religion." On p. 20, "Masons never assemble for any purpose, but they perform acts of religion."

Preston also says, "Where there is no religion there can be no Masonry."

The above authorities are not to be disputed with impunity or denial by Masons.

Such religion as is here taught is a religion without Christ. In great charity I am inclined to believe that many men who are Masons, yet mean to be good, are connected to an institution that they but little understand. May they be manly and willing to investigate that they may know the truth and it shall make them free.—The Rescue.

THE GRAND ARMY.

We personally served too many years in the late "unpleasantness" between the North and South, and know too much of the perils and hardships of a soldier's life to have it in our heart to say one word to cast a shadow over the name and fame of our country's brave defenders. While this is true, we have no words of warning which can be too earnest as against the deception practiced by the votaries of secretism, in leading them with their war record of honor into secret sworn clans. Such relations to secrecy seem to us the most unnatural relation possible for the soldier. What has he to conceal that can in any way bear upon his soldierly character and interest? His record while under the "star spangled banner" was sufficiently honorable to be known and read by all men. Returning to the ranks of honorable citizenship, in these relations, as in those of the camp and battle-field, the true soldier has no wonderful secret to conceal from the people whose homes he so heroically defended. Neither has he any legitimate use for any of the senseless secrets that Fremasonry may invent and offer to sell him for a premium. It illy becomes the soldier who marched and fought in full view of an admiring nation, for the life of which he made the repeated public tender of his own, to seek to hide away from public observation in some sworn, tyled, and curtained dark corner, as though engaged in a service unsuited to general "inspection" and "review." If soldiers see fit to associate themselves together in an open, soldier-like manner, to perpetuate the memories, and mutual sympathies of camp-life, let them do it with the same frankness and independence of character and work as characterized their military career. Away with the mummeries of secretism in the presence of such honorable patriotism! Once in the coils of the lodge system, which is in these minor branches invented and manipulated by the anti-Christ of Freemasonry, it is not easy telling into what the deceived and duped may not be led, almost or quite unawares. Take as an example, the effort being made to capture the Grand Army in the interests of those who slew half a million of our comrades, and filled our land with widows and fatherless children; and not only to turn the Grand Army of the Republic over to them, but to transform it into a theatrical troupe in their interests. We clip the following from the Syracuse Daily Journal of March 26th:

"The committee of Confederate soldiers at its conference in New York, Tuesday, with representatives of the Grand Army, with regard to the proposed Home for Destitute Soldiers in the South, decided that the best means for procuring money for the enterprise was to hold a mass meeting at an early date. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. A committee of the Grand Army representatives was appointed to make arrangements for giving theatrical performances to aid the proposed Soldiers' Home."

While universal charity is a precious grace, we believe in this especial case, if the rebel soldiers are to be pensioned, let the "Confederacy" see to its own, while the Union and Union soldiers see to it that the heroic army that instrumentally saved to the country the security and blessings of a government, and wrested the millions in bonds from the grasp of oppression, are cared for in as tender and liberal manner as possible. In this case it is clear that charity begins with the destitute and homeless loyal and true, and we protest against ordering the patriotism of the North into the theatre business in the interest of Southern treason. We protest against this transformation of the army into a theatrical troupe for any purpose whatever. This but shows the immoral drift and tendency of secret societies. We warn especially all professed Christians against associations which may call upon them to engage in morally corrupt enterprises. We again warn all our dear brethren against all secret societies as un-Scriptural and un-Christian, whatever may be the nature of their professed objects. We warn our people, as well, against the sophistries of those who seek in any way to countenance and defend these anti-gospel secret institutions, which in their nature of direct antagonism to social evil and religious interests, are planting a secret mine of dynamite destruction under everything dear to society, civilization and the Christian religion. We have no disposition to offend any of our old companions in arms, but to give them a soldier's most earnest and affectionate advice to keep clear of all secret societies.—Wesleyan.

JAMES G. BIRNEY.

HIS RELATION TO THE ANTI-SLAVERY MOVEMENT AND PLACE IN HISTORY.

BY A LIBERTY PARTY VOTER IN 1840.

The advent of James G. Birney marked a new era in the anti-slavery movement. He was the first Abolitionist who, in that great division of our history which began with the Missouri Compromise and ended with the Rebellion, conceived, attempted and achieved the organization of a national party on the principles of constitutional freedom. This is not inconsistent with the facts that Lundy had steadily advocated political action against slavery, and that Holley was the most active man in the nominating conventions of 1839 and 1840. The guiding and shaping influences of the infancy of the party now known as Republican were those of James G. Birney. His public career began in the summer of 1832 and came to a close in August, 1845.

The father of James G. Birney was a native of north Ireland. When sixteen years of age he migrated to the United States. After a thorough mercantile training in Philadelphia, he made his home at Danville, a flourishing town in the famous blue grass region of Kentucky. There he became a leading merchant, a manufacturer, and the president of the local bank. He was intelligent and well-informed, especially in politics and history; but he was chiefly remarkable for force of character. He was a personal friend of Henry Clay and his steady supporter. He built an Episcopal church, and was punctual in attendance on Sunday mornings. He paid a large part of the rector's salary and brought him home, after sermon, to dine; but, if occasion served, he handled his theological notions without gloves. He owned about thirty slaves and lived in good Kentucky style. His wife died when the subject of our sketch was three years of age.

James G. Birney was born at Danville, February 4, 1792. From early youth he was educated with a view to a career as a lawyer and statesman. After thorough preparation by private tutors and at Transylvania University, he was sent, in 1806, to the college at Princeton, New Jersey.

That State was then passing through the experiences of gradual emancipation under a law passed in 1804. Slavery must have been frequently a topic of debate among the students, and the young Kentuckian must have become familiar with the idea of emancipation. There were Abolition societies then not only in New Jersey but in the neighboring States, and a biennial convention of them met in Philadelphia. The most illustrious men of the nation were members. Distinguished statesmen, including Franklin, Jefferson, Jay and Hamilton had been or were then members. Congress, too, was maturing the laws against the slave trade, which were passed in 1807.

For the first time in his life he was brought under the steady pressure of religious influence, and he saw the church represented by learned and able men. Though he did not become, during his college course, a convert either to Abolitionism or Presbyterianism, the seeds of both were sown, and they germinated many years afterwards. He was graduated with the second honor in the class of 1810. The next year was passed in travel and in making the acquaintance of the leading public men of his native State. He was much noticed by Henry Clay and the friendly relations begun then lasted many years.

In the autumn of 1811, he became a law student, at Philadelphia, in the office of Alexander J. Dallas, then United States District Attorney, and, in 1814, Secretary of the Treasury. He remained there until his admission to the bar in the spring of 1814, when he returned to Kentucky and entered at once upon the practice of the law. He had then resided nearly seven years in States in which gradual emancipation was taking place. His personal habits had been formed under the influence of free institutions, and his habits of thought were probably more cosmopolitan than was then common in Kentucky.

In 1815, he was elected to the Legislature and served two terms. In 1816, he married a daughter of Judge McDowell, United States District Judge, whose family connection was the largest and most influential one in the State. In the autumn of 1817, he removed to a cotton plantation near Huntsville, Alabama, taking with him about thirty slaves.

Having traced our hero to what was apparently a poor training school for the anti-slavery champion of 1834, let us consider what manner of man he then was. He had inherited from his father a robust and active body. He had always been healthy, bright and vigorous. The father was a frank, bold and vehement man; the son was courageous, and remarkable for his entire truthfulness and moral power. His manners were those of a genial and perfectly self-possessed man, accustomed to the best society. He had committed the freaks, follies and extravagances to be expected from a generous youth with an unlimited supply of money. In the South of his day, card-playing was common, and the side-board was always covered with cut-glass decanters. He was always free from the vice of tobacco chewing and profanity. He resided in Alabama fifteen years.

We will now glance hastily at certain events, bearing directly or indirectly on slavery, of the decade and a half of his Alabama residence. This was a most important epoch in the formation of our national character.

During its course, immigration began to pour into the Northern States from Great Britain, caused by the hard times resulting from the great contraction of British currency in 1819, and the industrial reaction after the Napoleonic wars. Agitation on the subject of slavery was carried on in every civilized country as well as our own. In Great Britain, the discussion of colonial slavery was revived in 1820, and it was extended, in 1823, by the organization of the English Society for gradual abolition, and the passage in Parliament of an act greatly mitigating colonial slavery. Auxiliaries were formed, conventions were held, public addresses made, bills introduced into Parliament, and the publications of the Society, in the form of tracts, were scattered broadcast over Great Britain, and found their way into the United States. The works of Clarkson and speeches of Wilberforce had a large circulation, even in this country. English newspapers were full of the subject and their articles were copied by our press more freely than at a later period. The agitation in England was greatly increased by the slave insurrection which took place in Jamaica in December, 1831, and caused the destruction of fifteen millions of dollars worth of property and the massacre of four thousand persons. The whole civilized world stood appalled. In 1832, the British Government adopted the principle of compulsory gradual emancipation in the colonies, and a bill to that effect was brought in and passed August 28, 1833. It went into effect August 1, 1834, and gave freedom to 800,000 slaves near our borders.

In 1826, Austria proclaimed the doctrine that any slave escaping to or brought upon her soil or upon one of her vessels became free. In the same year, Brazil passed an Emancipation Act; and in 1829, Mexico abolished slavery within her limits and extended freedom to the western boundary of Louisiana. The French Revolution of 1830 gave increased activity to the discussion of the rights of man. It was followed, in 1831, by a convention between England and France, for the suppression of the slave trade.

The Congressional debates on slavery followed each other almost without intermission during these fifteen years. Those relating to the admission of Missouri as a slave State convulsed the country. Parties were almost equally divided and the ability shown in the debate has never been surpassed. On the free State side more than thirty members distinguished themselves. Their speeches were widely circulated. The contest was carried into the next elections, and most of the Northern members who voted for the admission were not re-elected. In 1820, Congress legislated against the African slave trade; in 1822, the President called for legislation of a more stringent character on that subject; in 1823 and 1824, Congress discussed it at length; and in 1829, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 114 to 66, adopted a resolution against the slave traffic in the District of Columbia, and instructed the Committee on the District of Columbia to inquire into the expediency of gradual abolition in that District. Part of the preamble is as follows:

> "Slave-dealers, gaining confidence from impunity, have made the seat of the Federal Government their headquarters for carrying on the domestic slave trade".

In 1822, a wide-spread conspiracy was formed at the South for the purpose of establishing slavery by law in the State of Illinois. To promote it, settlers with slaves were sent into the State, as they were sent into Kansas thirty years later. Resistance was made. The question was made a test one at the elections and was discussed on the stump in all parts of the State. The conspirators were finally defeated in 1824. In its day it was the sensational topic, and it kept fresh in the minds of the people the events of the great struggle of 1819–20.

In 1828, more than a thousand citizens of the District of Columbia petitioned Congress against slavery and the slave traffic; and in 1829, the Grand Jury of the District made a presentment against the latter. In 1827, abolition of slavery was finally effected in New York, and Alabama passed an act prohibiting the importation of slaves into her limits. About the same time the last vestiges of slavery disappeared in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In Virginia there were, during the epoch under review, four years of almost continuous discussion of slavery. The State Convention of 1829–1830 gave much of its time to the subject, and the Legislatures of 1831–1832 brought out the best talent of the State in attack and defense. Very little, if anything, has since been added to the argument on either side, with the single exception that the relation of the National Government to slavery was not touched. The immediate cause of the debates in the Legislature was that a bloody slave insurrection, headed by Nat Turner, had broken out in Southampton county, Virginia, in August, 1831. It cost the lives of more than four hundred persons, black and white, and threw the State into the wildest commotion.

Anti-slavery literature was not wanting. The tracts, periodicals and newspapers from England were abundant. Several anti-slavery volumes had been published by Americans: one by Elias Hicks, the Quaker, 1814; another by Dr. Jesse Torrey, of Philadelphia, in 1817; a third by James Duncan, of Indiana, in 1824; and a fourth by Rev. John Rankin, a Presbyterian from Kentucky, 1824. The last was an able presentation of personal experience and observation, and had a large circulation. In 1827, George M. Stroud, a Philadelphia lawyer, published a collection of all the laws of the several States relating to slavery. For effective value, this book by Stroud ranks with Theodore D. Weld's "Slavery as it is," and Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Elizabeth M. Chandler published a book of anti-slavery poems of some merit. The different Abolition societies published addresses and reports. Among the best of these may be mentioned the Address to the People of North Carolina in 1830, by the State Manumission Society. It was written by William Swain. Between 1820 and 1831 there were but four newspapers specially devoted to the abolition of slavery: Benjamin Lundy's was the most prominent. He had published it in Ohio, from 1816 to 1819. Elihu Embree, in 1820, published the Emancipator, at Jonesborough in East Tennessee. On his death, Lundy left Ohio, where he had been publishing a similar paper, and took charge of Embree's paper. He afterwards removed to Baltimore and published it there until 1830, and afterwards in Philadelphia. The other three were "The African Observer," at Philadelphia, "The Freedom's Journal," at New York, and "The Liberal," at New Orleans. Some of the leading newspapers discussed freely the slavery question. Among these were the Cincinnati Gazette, edited by Charles Hammond. William Goodell wrote a poem against slavery as early as 1820, and articles of the same kind in a newspaper at Providence as early as 1821; and Joshua Leavitt began his career in 1825 as an anti-slavery newspaper writer.

In the decade between 1820 and 1831, Abolition societies were numerous. The one established by Franklin at Philadelphia was the oldest. In 1815, Lundy had organized several in Ohio, and they had multiplied. State societies and auxiliaries existed in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina. In 1826 the Manumission societies of North Carolina had three thousand members. A similar society existed in Loudon county, Va., and was active. The American Convention for Abolition met in 1823, 1826, 1828, 1829, and perhaps in other years. In 1826 it had 81 auxiliaries, of which 73 were in the South. With the mitigation of slavery and imminence of emancipation in the British colonies, the attention of the people of the Northern States were drawn more to slavery after 1823; discussion of the subject became general, and renewed activity was infused into the organization of societies. The effect of the bloody slave insurrection in Virginia in August, 1831, was to arrest this activity and enable the slave power to crush out abolition in Virginia and Kentucky, to stop agitation in the slave States, to get control of the political parties of the country, to inaugurate mob law against Abolitionists in the North, and to push the scheme for the separation of Texas from Mexico, with a view to its annexation to the Union as five or more slave States.

In 1822 Mr. Birney gave up his cotton plantation and resumed the practice of law, and in 1823 he removed to the city of Huntsville for that purpose. He was personally popular, and was at once elected solicitor, but resigned at the end of a year because of the rapid increase of his civil business. He soon became the acknowledged leader of the bar in North Alabama, and was offered a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, but declined. After 1824 he was placed in the political minority by his adhesion to Clay and Adams. He was one of the candidates in 1828 for elector on the Adams ticket, and, to carry some local measure, he was elected about 1829 to the Legislature.

The turning point in his career was his profession of religion and connection with the Presbyterian church in the spring of 1826. The change was sincere and vital. From that time he lived on a higher plane; his sympathies were enlarged and he sought to do good. He had been a Mason, but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order. He contributed liberally to benevolent enterprises, aided in establishing at Huntsville an academy for boys and an institute for girls, and was the chief actor in establishing the State University. Having been the legal counsel of the Cherokee nation, he became the efficient protector of the Indians. He favored the Alabama law prohibiting the further importation of slaves into that State. So far as appears he had never regarded slavery as a divine institution or defended it on any ground of natural right. In May, 1832, in a conversation with Theodore D. Weld, he admitted that property in slaves could not be defended on any sound, legal principles. He probably always looked on it as a political evil, harmful to the whites, entailed, unavoidable and perhaps necessary in the culture of the great staple of the South. He thought it the duty of masters to be humane, not to separate families, and to provide well for the comfort of the slaves. His attention was first drawn to the subject in 1830, when an agent of the Colonization Society lectured in Huntsville. A society was formed of which Mr. Birney became a member. On the 21st of August, 1831, there occurred the massacre of women and children, in Virginia, known as "The Southampton Insurrection." He began then to regard slavery as a constant menace and imminent danger to the South. His eyes were opened to its corrupting influences upon the young. At that time he had seven children, six of them boys. In the winter of 1831–2 he decided to visit Illinois, with a view to a removal. This he did in the spring of 1832, and selected Jacksonville as the place of his future residence. He had advertised his property for sale when he received an unsolicited and unexpected appointment dated June 11, 1832, from the American Colonization Society, as its agent for the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Tennessee. The salary was very small, being about a tithe of his professional income; but he accepted in the hope of doing good. In the autumn and winter of 1832–3 he organized State Colonization Societies in those four States, and lectured in their principal cities.

During these journeys he learned the views of many representatives of the slave-holding interest and saw more of the workings of slavery. He returned from them with the conviction that the Colonization cause was hopeless in the far South; that the best way to arrest the development of the evil was to stop the supply of slaves from the border States; and that emancipation in the latter should be added to Liberian colonization of freedmen from the South. This conviction was acted on with his characteristic decision. He was in possession of what was then considered a large fortune, and there was nothing to prevent him from devoting his time to the work. Resigning his agency, he removed in November, 1833, to Kentucky, his native State, where his personal popularity and influential connection gave him great advantages. In the December following he aided in organizing at Lexington the Kentucky Gradual Emancipation Society. Its membership comprised between sixty and seventy slave-holders. Some of them, for instance, Judge John Green, Professor Buchanan, and Dr. Luke Munsell, were men of mark and influence.

The slave-holding interest, already disturbed and alarmed by the Southampton insurrection and emancipation in the West Indies, and plotting Texas annexation, had become agitated to its depths throughout the entire South. A movement by slave-holders boded serious danger to the system of slave labor, and the necessity of suppressing it was manifest. A powerful social pressure was brought to bear upon the members of the society. The timid among them withdrew; a prominent clergyman, a native of New England, was driven from his pulpit and the State; several found it prudent to sell their property and migrate to the States north of the Ohio; and, at the end of three months, scarce a vestige of the society was left. It did not hold a second meeting. This was but the beginning of the popular feeling which culminated in the mobs and personal outrages which dishonored the five years ending with 1838 in every part of the Northern States, and in the lynchings and murders which were perpetrated in the South from 1834 until the time of the Rebellion. For a time Mr. Birney was a marked exception to the persecution. The kindly feeling towards him, as a favorite son of Kentucky, was deeply rooted. He published articles, made speeches, and held public discussions. One held in the large Presbyterian church at Danville, with Dr. Young, president of Centre College, continued several days, and was attended by immense crowds. He now began a careful study of all the literature, law and history of slavery. He studied carefully the National Constitution and the reported legal decisions on the subject; and he procured and read the works of Clarkson, the speeches of Wilberforce, the Parliamentary and Congressional debates on slavery and the slave trade, the works of Hicks, Torrey and Rankin, and some or all of the tracts published by the Tappans at New York. His views ripened rapidly. In May, 1834, he saw clearly that the slave himself had rights, and, as soon as the necessary formalities could be perfected, he emancipated his slaves. This marks the date of his final adoption of the Abolition doctrines towards which he had been steadily tending since August, 1831.

Becoming convinced that the Colonization Society had fallen under slave-holding influences, and had become a hindrance to emancipation, he resigned the vice-presidency of the Kentucky branch, giving his reasons for the step in a letter, which was promptly republished in a large pamphlet edition at New York and in many Northern papers, and attracted the attention of the whole country. Its effect on public opinion may be inferred from the enthusiasm of the Rev. Dr. Coxe of New York, a famous preacher. Referring to it, he said in a sermon:

"A Birney has shaken the continent by putting down his foot; and his fame will be envied before his arguments are answered or their force forgotten."

This letter was followed Sept. 2, 1834, by one appealing to the Christian sentiment of the South. The following winter and spring were passed in further studies of the legal aspects of slavery and in efforts to ascertain and rally upon some plan of organized action the opponents of slavery in Kentucky. Feeling the need of a medium of communication with them, and of explanation to the people of the State, he issued a prospectus for a weekly paper, the first number of which was to be issued on the first day of August, 1835. The ascendency of the slave-holding interest had by this time been established, and early in July a mass meeting was held at Danville, which passed resolutions pledging the persons present to prevent at all hazards the proposed publication. A large committee was appointed to confer with Mr. Birney. He declined to yield. The committee then waited on the man who owned the printing office and had contracted to publish the paper and found means to send him and his family out of the State the same night. They took possession of his office under claim of purchase, and gave public notice that any man who should thereafter contract to print Mr. Birney's paper would be summarily dealt with.

It was soon made clear to Mr. Birney that he could neither print a paper nor hold a meeting in Kentucky, and that he could not travel in the State without losing his life. Even in his native town the change of public feeling toward him was marked. His movements were watched, his letters and mail scrutinized at the post office and the persons to whom he spoke questioned. His family, too, were subjected in some degree to what is now known as "Boycotting." The end had come. He could not remain in Kentucky. Two years of effort in behalf of his native State had demonstrated that free speech and a free press would not be tolerated within its borders. In that brief period the slave power, sensible of its danger, and preparing for its great measure, the annexation of Texas, in from five to nine slave States, had revealed its gigantic strength. It controlled the leading commercial influences of the country; it was the master of both political parties. At its bidding mobs raged in fury through the streets of Utica, New York city, and all the principal towns of the North to destroy presses and silence speakers known to favor freedom. For liberty, justice and the rights of free citizens, 1835 was the most gloomy year known to American history. As Mr. Birney expressed it, the nation was living down the foundation principles of its government. With the deepest sense of the serious danger of the supremacy of the South in the Senate, and a determination to do what he could to prevent it, he removed to Cincinnati in September, 1835, and issued his prospectus for the Philanthropist.

In the three years of his experience Mr. Birney had been forced by the logic of events and the revelation of the astonishing power of the slave-holding interest into a position not at first contemplated by him. Beginning with a humanitarian effort to enable freedmen in the far South to migrate to Liberia and save the South from the horrors of slave insurrections, passing from that to one in behalf of his native State, he found himself an exile from that State, and compelled to choose between abandoning the contest and grappling with slavery as the great moral and political evil of the nation. He did not hesitate. That he expected from the very first to accomplish his end by political means is proved by the facts already stated. He had been bred for politics, had been a public man, was a lawyer, and was thoroughly familiar with the history of slavery and emancipation. His movements for colonization and for emancipation in Kentucky had all looked to political action. He had publicly abandoned the Whig party. He was of mature age and was not a sentimentalist. His habit of thought was eminently practical; he was unable to divorce conviction from action: the firstlings of his thought were the firstlings of his hand. As a matter of fact he landed in Cincinnati with a lively sense of the imminent danger of the permanent ascendency of the slave-power in national affairs, and a well-defined intention to organize the anti-slavery men of the North for political action.

It was not long before he found that such an organization was much more difficult than he had supposed. He had been under illusions arising from ignorance of certain peculiarities of Northern thought and social action. The North had changed since his life in Princeton and Philadelphia. With the peace of 1815 there had begun a new era of material prosperity and general education. Vast numbers of immigrants had poured into the Northern States; manufacturing industries had been multiplied; turnpikes, steamboats and railroads had come into use; the busy hives of the Eastern States had swarmed to the fertile West; newspapers and magazines had quadrupled in number and circulation; common school systems, academies, colleges and universities had filled the North with persons of more or less education; religious newspapers were known for the first time; religious revivals were frequent; there were popular discussions, great theological debates, social reforms, Anti-masonic societies, peace societies, religious anniversaries and conventions. The lecture platform had become an institution: nearly every church opened its doors for discourses of itinerant speakers on every conceivable topic. The lecturers were of every grade of intellect and character, ranging from the polished professor of astronomy or belles lettres who attracted cultivated audiences in cities to the seedy "crank" who stole around through the country school-houses to lecture on the second advent. Most men were engaged in the feverish pursuit of wealth; they found recreation in the oratory of itinerants. They avoided politics which took too much time from business and were of no practical utility, the country being destined to prosper. Politicians were generally poor and, with a few exceptions, little respected.

Mr. Birney was sadly disappointed to find himself almost alone in his idea of political action. The rank and file of the Abolitionists belonged to the intelligent, respectable, moral and well-to-do classes, but most of them were rather sentimental than practical. They had a lively sympathy with fugitive slaves, clear notions of the way to operate the underground railroad, great repugnance to the use of cotton or other slave-grown product, a strong sense of the rights of petition, free speech and a free press, of the horror of selling men, women and children on the auction block and of the sinfulness of slave-holding generally: but the idea of voting their convictions into practical operation was not yet accepted. That seemed to most of them either inexpedient or carrying a noble sentiment into "the dirty mire of politics." The lecturers were most of them earnest men; some of them were able, eloquent and effective. But as a class they were inexperienced in public affairs. It was impossible, too, to prevent the intermeddling of eccentrics. In a certain measure, these gave plausible pretexts to the enemies of the cause to associate it with erratic notions. One wanted all money abolished by law; another advocated the community system of labor; a third, slave insurrection; a fourth, a stampede of all the slaves to the North, taking all property they could lay hands on, and there were labored disquisitions to prove that this was not stealing; a fifth, the dissolution of the Union and the secession of the Northern States; a sixth, non-resistance as a philosophy, the sinfulness of all systems of force, including penal law and human government and as a corollary, the sinfulness per se of political parties, voting and petitioning; a seventh, the abolition of jails and dependence upon the sentiment of love alone for the restraint of thieves, ruffians, robbers and murderers; an eighth had laboriously collected all the strongest epithets in the English language to be hurled with little regard to their applicability at slave-holders and their apologists, instead of arguments; and a ninth, making the false and fatal admission that the slave-holders had the Constitution on their side, endeavored to attract public attention to themselves by stigmatizing the fundamental law as an "agreement with death and a covenant with hell." The overmastering appetite for personal notoriety greatly prejudiced the anti-slavery cause. Some of these gentlemen cultivated oddity of personal appearance: they wore Byronic collars and outlandish garments or allowed their hair to flow over their shoulders or their beards to hang over their breasts. To Mr. Birney these people were strange. At first he was amused. One day after listening to a gentleman with long locks who had spoken well, he said: "Now if some friend would only tell him that an Abolitionist need not out-hair a buffalo." He was accustomed to say that the stream would work itself clear in good time of these impurities.

He resided at Cincinnati two years, where all his energies were given to the work. He edited, wrote legal arguments, made the acquaintance of young men of promise, traveled, lectured, attended conventions and anniversaries, spoke to legislative committees, and did everything to consolidate and direct to practical purposes the growing anti-slavery sentiment of the country. One of his first coadjutors in the Philanthropist was Gamaliel Bailey, afterwards the distinguished editor. He labored long with S. P. Chase, who did not, however, identify himself with the cause until 1841. One of his chief objects in travel was to converse personally with every leading man in the ranks, with a view to harmonize action and direct it to political ends.

In 1836, the N. Y. State Anti-slavery Society passed a resolution expressing deep regret that citizens of free States should aid in electing men to office who would trample under foot the great principles of civil liberty. Finding it premature to attempt any national party organization at that time, he encouraged in his paper and by active private correspondence the practice of questioning candidates in localities where practicable, having little faith in it but hoping it would lead to something better. The results were various: discussion was caused, the attention of politicians attracted and Abolitionists led gradually into concert for political action. During these two years, his press was mobbed five times. In June, 1836, the mob spirit at Cincinnati was lashed to fury by visitors from the South, who made it known that the Southern trade of the city depended on the expulsion of Mr. Birney and the destruction of his press. A mass meeting of thousands was held at the Court House in the evening. The mob was to march thence, destroy the editor's house and office, and inflict violence on him. Among the numerous illustrations of his fearlessness, nerve and moral power, his conduct on this occasion may be selected for mention. Unaccompanied, except by a son seventeen years of age, he attended the meeting. At the close of a furious speech against him, Mr. Birney, who had been standing near the speaker, stepped forward and said: "My name is Birney and I ask to be heard." The wildest uproar followed, but, through the influence of Gen. Lytle, the presiding officer, quiet was restored. Mr. Birney then made one of the best speeches of his life, and retired without being molested. On reaching home, he saw that about forty pieces of firearms, which he kept there for self-defense, were properly loaded and capped. The mob did not come that night, but in his absence from town in July, it destroyed his press and the entire contents of his printing office, throwing them into the Ohio River. A number of anti-slavery meetings in different cities and towns were broken up by mobs in 1836 and early in 1837. Several times his life was endangered by personal violence. As the year 1838 wore on, however, especially after the burning of Pennsylvania Hall, the right of citizens to assemble peaceably seemed to be won, in most parts of the North. In September, 1837, Mr. Birney went to New York as the Corresponding Secretary of the American Anti-slavery Society, turning over the Philanthropist to the Ohio A. S. Society. That paper had been a business success from the beginning, the receipts from subscribers being in excess of ordinary expenses. Mr. Birney's pecuniary losses, however, from the mobs were heavy.

At that time he had become recognized by both friends and enemies as the chief representative of the legitimate, practical and constitutional anti-slavery movement. His intelligence, candor, firmness and moderation were known; and he was regarded as a safe guide for a cause requiring prudent and wise counsel. It is probable that his call to New York was dictated by an apprehension on the part of the Executive Committee of danger to the cause by an attempt in certain localities to identify it with the "no human government," "no-voting" and woman suffrage movements, between which, in spite of fundamental antagonism in principle, a temporary coalition had been patched up. On the 16th of February, 1838, Hon. F. H. Elmore, of S. C., at the instance of the entire Southern delegation in Congress, wrote to Mr. Birney for full information in regard to the anti-slavery movement. In a later letter, Mr. Elmore said: "I heard of you as a man of intelligence, sincerity and truth, who, although laboring in a bad cause, did it with ability and from a mistaken conviction of its justice." In his elaborate answer, Mr. Biruey says:

"The Abolitionists regard the Constitution with unabated affection." They have "nothing to ask except what the Constitution authorizes, no change to desire, except that the Constitution may be restored to its pristine republican purity." He speaks of "the ascendancy that slavery has acquired and the apprehension that it will soon overmaster the Constitution itself;" of the "usurpations on the part of the South and the unworthy concessions to it by the North"; and alludes to the Missouri Compromise "by which the nation was wheedled out of its honor." This characterized the means adopted by Mr. Clay to secure the passage of that measure. He said, too, that certain officials in New Hampshire and Vermont, who had spoken contemptuously of anti-slavery men, would "soon be made to see the grossness of their error." The letter clearly looked to political action. While Mr. Birney was preparing it, his friend, William Jay, who had adopted his views, was preparing his remarkable book on "The Action of the Federal Government in Behalf of Slavery." This was published in 1838 and had a large circulation. A still larger and revised edition was published in 1839. Mr. Birney's efforts at New York were directed to strengthen the practical side of anti-slavery action; to stimulate local organization for obtaining legislative action in behalf of trial by jury and of personal liberty. Instead of centralizing, he preferred measures requiring discussion and action in every township and county. Four hundred and forty societies were organized in the first year; sixty lecturers, prudently chosen, and free from the "no-human-government" heresy, were sent out; and tracts and newspapers were liberally distributed. He visited in person the principal cities and lectured chiefly on the political encroachments of slavery; and, in the summer of 1838, at a large convention in Northern Ohio, he publicly declared his conviction that all the anti-slavery agitation would be sterile unless it resulted in the formation of a national political party. He thought the time had come. On his return to New York, he prepared a clear and terse statement of his reasons, and had it sent in lithographed form to all the leading anti-slavery men, soliciting their views in return. The discussion on this subject grew general and threatened disruption. At first, the majority was hostile; but the project gained friends rapidly. Elizur Wright, John G. Whittier, Alvan Stewart, Gerrit Smith, Beriah Green, William Goodell, Joshua Leavitt, Samuel Lewis, ex-Senator Thomas Morris, Dr. Brisbane, Thomas Earle, Myron Holley and other leaders concurred. The Rochester Freeman was chosen, because of its unofficial character, to be the first paper to advocate it; and it was followed by the Emancipator, Friend of Man and Massachusetts Abolitionist; but the Liberator, with its following, was hostile, and all the other anti-slavery papers either wavering or lukewarm. Six State anti-slavery societies condemned it. "Great numbers of professed Abolitionists were too closely wedded to their parties to abandon them," and a few had adopted the anarchical ideas of the "no-human-government" faction and were disposed rather to throw off all political responsibilities than to add to them. Mr. Birney remained firm. In the early part of 1839, he thus characterized the plan of questioning candidates and its fruitlessness: "Our political movement, heretofore, may be compared to the wake of a vessel at sea, never increasing in length, no matter how many thousands of miles she may sail." * * * "I look on the independent party movement as proof, not only of the greater force and energy of the anti-slavery cause, but of its greater expansion; and I am not more surprised at it than I would be at seeing the young of a noble bird, grown too large for the nest, and feeling its strength and courage equal to the attempt, committing itself to the bosom of the air and training its powers in the region of thunders and lightnings and storms."

It is to the writings of Mr. Birney and Wm. Jay that the student of the political aspects of the anti-slavery movement must go for light. They are the armory from which the orators, platform makers and writers of the anti-slavery political party took their best weapons for many years. The best history of the aggressions of the slave power was written by Mr. Birney; and it was he who first presented in many lights the doctrine of the inherent antagonism of the free and slave labor systems, under a common government. The phrase "irrepressible conflict" uttered in 1860 by Mr. Seward, was used before 1840, by Mr. Birney. In 1840 he wrote:

"The conclusion of the whole matter is that as a people we are trying an experiment as unphilosophical in theory as it has been, and ever will be, found impossible in practice: to make a harmonious whole out of parts that are, in principle and essence, discordant. It is in vain to think of a sincere union between the North and the South, if the first remain true to her republican principles and habits and the latter persist in her slave-holding despotism. They are incapable from their natures of being made one. * * * 'One or the other must, in the end, gain the entire ascendency.' " (See letter of acceptance).

One of the most able and instructive documents of the anti-slavery conflict was Mr. Birney's letter of March, 1838, in answer to a demand for information about anti-slavery designs and measures, made upon him by Mr. Calhoun and other South Carolina Congressmen. The several letters of Mr. Elmore, who wrote in behalf of his colleagues, disclose the high respect felt by the South for Mr. Birney. In the one of May 5th he says:

"I heard of you as a man of intelligence, sincerity and truth: who, though laboring in a bad cause, did it with ability and from a mistaken conviction of its justice."

No man stood higher in the esteem of both friends and foes than the subject of this sketch. President Kellogg of Illinois, who visited England in 1844, four years after Mr. Birney's visit there, thus writes:

"It was truly refreshing to me while I was in Great Britain, amid the many complaints against my countrymen, to which I was obliged to listen, to hear an excellent friend, James G. Birney, so frequently spoken of and always in terms of unqualified approbation and respect."

As Mr. Birney had been for several months before the British public as a speaker, this tribute to him is valuable. No man who has taken a prominent part for twelve years in a heated controversy can have altogether escaped using personalities. The only occasion on which Mr. Birney ever used one was when he found himself obliged by Mr. Adams' course in Congress to warn Abolitionists to withhold their confidence from the man who had so nobly maintained the right of free mails, free press, free speech and free petition. For these services the Abolitionists had elected Mr. Adams to Congress, where he had refused to vote for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, or for rejecting the application of Florida for admission as a slave State; and he had spoken contemptuously of the characteristic doctrines of the voting Abolitionists. Mr. Birney in a published letter stated the facts and said:

"Mr. Adams owes much of his present popularity, may I not say nearly all? to his connection with the anti-slavery agitation. Abolitionists have contributed more than any other class of persons to swell the tide of his influence. That influence is now active in fortifying against them every practicable point at which they have attacked slavery in this country; and his quasi sympathy with them gives it an independent and unusual force." "His course in my judgment has been eccentric, whimsical and inconsistent; defended in part by weak and inconclusive not to say frivolous arguments; and taken as a whole, thus far, is unworthy of a statesman of large views and a right temper in a great national conjuncture."

So long as John Quincy Adams was true to right principles he had no better friend than James G. Birney. To Senators Morris, Chase, Sumner, and Wilson, as also to Slade, Giddings, Wilmot, Lovejoy and other true men in Congress, Mr. Birney always extended cordial sympathy. With his co-laborers, William Jay, the Tappans, Theodore D. Weld, Joshua Leavitt, H. B. Stanton, Elizur Wright, Beriah Green, Gerrit Smith, Samuel Lewis, Dr. Bailey, Dr. Brisbane, Jonathan Blanchard, Leicester King, William Goodell and other noble men he always lived in uninterrupted friendship. Between Mr. Weld and himself the relation was for life that of two brothers.

In 1838 it became his duty, as representing the political-action Abolitionists, to declare publicly what was already an accomplished fact,—that the "no-human government" faction at Boston had withdrawn itself from the main Abolition movement and ought to withdraw from the American Anti-slavery Society. He did this without reflecting upon the motives or honesty of any of the parties, putting it upon the grounds that they had changed their views since joining the Society, the constitution and declaration of which recognized the U. S. Constitution and the law, both of which were rejected by the "no-human government," non-resistant, non-voting party. He said:

"Could they be agreed and could they walk together? It seems to me not. And simply because their aim, their objects are radically and essentially different. So with the no-government and the pro-government Abolitionists. One party is for sustaining and purifying governments and bringing them into perfect conformity with the principles of divine government,—the other for destroying all government."

The fact is that the no-human government faction had covered up and lost sight of abolition, piling upon it a great number of temporary notions and transcendental absurdities such as: the sinfulness of force in all its manifestations, whether congresses, legislatures, courts or jails or slavery. With them it was a sin to vote for the abolition of slavery. Oddly enough they made an exception in favor of petitions; but they never explained how they could petition Congress to act when it could not act without sin! Mr. Garrison and Henry C. Wright were the leaders in this ism and the Liberator was used to propagate it. Mr. Birney's letter marked the point at which the voting Abolitionists went one way and the "no-human government" men another, never to meet again. The former organized in 1840 the Liberty party; the latter after running in full stream a little while, distributed itself into numerous rivulets, such as Grahamism, spiritualism, abolition of money, secession, disunion, ruin of the church, overthrow of the clergy, "constitution a covenant with death and an agreement with hell," which were absorbed by the sands and dried up utterly. At the present time it is not likely that a single man exists, out of Russia, who holds the no-government, non-resistant notions of Mr. Garrison; and although rhetorical attempts have been made to appropriate to Mr. Garrison as disciples, the Kansas settlers, John Brown and Abraham Lincoln, it would puzzle even Oliver Johnson to prove these persons non-resistants. Mrs. Stowe suggests that Mr. Garrison's denunciations of the Liberty party may have helped to build it up. Perhaps so: but he did not mean to help it. The difficulty was that among his numerous isms, he claimed Abolitionism, and popular prejudice long held the Liberty party responsible for all of them. The relation between Mr. G. and the political Abolitionists was something like that now existing between Kernan of the Okalona States and the Democrats: he brought discredit on them although they disowned him. Let us return from this digression.

In the autumn of 1839* a convention of anti-slavery men in western New York nominated James G. Birney for President of the United States. He declined, his view being that the candidacy would cripple his usefulness, and that longer discussion would better unite the anti-slavery men. Upon all his friends he urged the propriety of nominating the Hon. William Jay, who was in every way competent, and who had contributed to the cause the best book on its political aspects. But Mr. Jay and all the friends of the movement insisted that he should be the standard bearer. No other name was considered at any subsequent convention, State or national, for the campaigns of 1840 and 1844. On the 2d of April, 1840, a national convention, held in Albany, nominated James G. Birney for President, and Thomas Earle for Vice-President. A still larger general convention was held at New York, May 11, 1840, and ratified the nominations. The ensuing campaign was marked by a popular frenzy seldom equaled in this country. It is known in political history as the "log cabin and hard cider campaign." Trivial issues took precedence of vital ones. Abolitionists were courted by Gen. Harrison and wheedled by Horace Greeley into the support of two Virginians, both pledged to the slave-power. It was impossible, too, to get correct returns of ballots cast, the Abolition vote not being considered that of a regular party organization; about seven thousand votes, however, were returned.

May 12. 1841, a large national anti-Slavery convention was held at New York, and unanimously nominated Mr. Birney for President, with ex-Senator Thomas Morris for Vice-President. This nomination was regarded by him as premature. August 30, 1843, a large national convention at Buffalo renominated the ticket in the name of the "Liberty Party," which name had gradually supplanted other names in popular usage.

In the campaign of 1844, it was generally calculated that the number of anti-slavery voters was about one hundred thousand; the managers of the Liberty Party expected more. The voting in 1843 in the different States had revealed a steadily increasing party strength; and neither of the candidates of the two large parties had apparently any prospect of gaining any votes among anti-slavery men. Mr. Polk was a slave-holder, and Mr. Clay was not only a slave-holder but the most able representative of the slave power. It was Mr. Clay who had succeeded in gaining the admission of Missouri as a slave State; it was Mr. Clay who had, as Secretary of State, negotiated with Great Britain for pay for slaves; and it was Mr. Clay who had been the bitter assailant of Abolitionists and advised their exclusion from social life. Besides, he was notoriously a gambler and duellist, and, for that reason alone, not a popular candidate in the North. His nomination was a defiance of the anti-slavery men of the country who had, in sundry conventions, denounced him as an enemy. As the campaign waxed hot and chances were seen to be about equal, Democrats and Whigs alike appealed to the anti-slavery men for votes. As the election drew near and Clay's chances were seen to be growing less, the appeals of the Whigs became almost frantic. Horace Greeley, then a violent Whig partisan, but who had for years, in the N. Y. Tribune, adopted a friendly tone toward the Abolitionists, and who had thought himself able to deliver their votes to his chief, Mr. Clay, redoubled his entreaties, arguments and appeals. The Whig papers abounded in false statements. Mr. Birney was abused and cajoled by turns. The last resort of the Whigs was the "Garland forgery," concocted by the Whig Central Committee of Michigan. It purported to be a letter from James G. Birney to one Garland, a resident of his Legislative District in Michigan, soliciting the Democratic nomination for the Legislature and declaring his Democracy and his intention to defeat Henry Clay. It purported to be duly sworn to and to be printed on an extra of the Oakland Gazette. This infamous document was printed at New York by the Whigs in immense quantities, and sent to active Whigs in every county in the Northern States, with instructions not to circulate it until after the first of November. In western New York it was withheld until the 3rd, on which day it was known that Mr. Birney, who had been in the State for about a month, expected to leave Buffalo in a steamboat for Detroit. He did not leave on that day, and a copy of the forgery fell into his hands. As far as possible he contradicted it; but it was too late to expose the political crime fully. The National Intelligencer, Portland Advertiser, and Ohio State Journal were among the papers that published this forgery; and the Whig State committee of Indiana issued a public address containing it; but the contrivers of the use made of the forgery were doubtless at New York. The probable knowledge by Horace Greeley of this electioneering trick put an end to the friendly relations between him and Mr. Birney. Mr. Greeley gave orders that Mr. Birney's name should not be mentioned in the Tribune thereafter, and carefully avoided all mention of it in his large work on the history of the anti-slavery conflict except in the election returns. His bitter malice ended only with Mr. Birney's death. The effect of the "Garland forgery" probably was to diminish Mr. Birney's vote at least half. In Ohio, where it was not exposed except in the northeastern part of the State, Mr. Birney lost several thousand votes, most of which went to Mr. Clay. The Whigs carried the State by a plurality of between four and five thousand. In New York, the Whigs gained largely, but not enough by 5,107 to carry the State. In spite of the forgery the Liberty party polled 62,263 votes in all the States.

This staunchness of the anti-slavery men in 1844 saved the party from disbandment. In 1848 there was a large accession from the Democratic party, and it polled 291,000 votes; in 1852 many of the VanBuren men fell off, but it polled 156,000 votes; in 1856, on the breaking up of the Whig party for want of any principle of cohesion, the anti-slavery party polled over 1,300,000: and in 1860 it elected its ticket. Whether under the name of Anti-slavery party, Liberty, Free Soil or Republican, its main political principle was unchanged. September 3, 1835, the officers and Executive Committee of the American Anti-slavery Society, in an address signed by them, said: "We hold that Congress has no more right to abolish slavery in the Southern States than Congress has in the West India Islands." In 1840 the platform of the party was the "abolition of slavery wherever it exists under the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress and to prevent its further extension," etc. In 1841 the Liberty party of Ohio resolved: "That we expressly disclaim, in behalf of the general Government, all right to interfere with slavery in the States where it exists." The party was not a whit more conservative in 1860 than in 1840.

In the summer of 1845 Br. Birney, who was then residing in Michigan, was thrown from a horse. A stroke of paralysis followed which disabled him for public life. He had a genial and happy old age, surrounded by relatives and friends. He lost none of his interest in the progress of the struggle, and, after the breaking out of the Kansas difficulties, he gave up the hope that slavery would be peaceably abolished but thought the aggressions of the slave power would lead to civil war. He died in 1857.

*In August, 1839, Mr. Birney's father died intestate, leaving two heirs. The property consisted of money and twenty-seven slaves. Mr. Birney took the slaves, setting off twenty thousand dollars to his co-heir as their value, freed them and provided homes for them. Nearly all of them turned out well.

The work in this State began November 1st by the appointment of J. K. Hunter as colporteur for southern Illinois. The State meeting was held at Sparta, in Randolph county, and there Mr. H. began the work of visiting from house to house, enlightening the people by conversation, by suitable tracts, and wherever he could by selling anti-secret books. He visited five hundred and eleven houses, mostly in the country; he left a suitable tract or tracts with each family; and worked up six lectures, and was the means, indirectly or directly, of a good deal of discussion of the anti-secrecy reform. His sale of books amounted to seveuty-five dollars and fifty cents.

Rev. D. S. Faris, chairman of the committee for southern Illinois, writes in reference to the work of Mr. Hunter: "We are indeed grateful to the State Executive Committee for the great work they have helped us to do. The work of Mr. Hunter will keep up the influence of our State Convention held here, and not allow it to pass away in smoke."

A series of lectures have been arranged for by Mr. A. G. Laird of Chicago. Three of the series have been held. In all, five lectures have been given in Chicago, one in Mercer county, and six in Randolph county.

Otber items of interest to the work are such as several Sabbath-school superintendents have applied to the N. C. A. for tracts to distribute to their Sabbath-schools. Several debating societies in different parts of the State have had this reform under discussion. Several pastors have preached to their people on the anti-Christian character of secret societies. One pastor of a large church has not preached upon the subject, but special meetings have becn held for the church to attend, inquire and learn about this subject. Hundreds of Sabbath-school teachers havc again and again had their attention turned to this reform at the great Saturday noon meetings iu Farwell Hall. And finally the General Agent of the N. C. A. has agreed to visit and lecture through ceutral Illinois.

You will noticc by the above report that there is a small balance still in the treasury. The Statc Executive Committec could have of course spent it all very quickly in colportcur work, but it has seemed best to look for and pray for an efficient lecturer who shall give his whole time to the work.

One such gentleman has given some encouragement to the committee that he will accept the position. That there might be something in the treasury to enable such a man to bcgin work as soon as the man is found, the committce have not expended all the cash received up to date.

We believe that the right way is for us to keep giving, working and praying until the right man is found to take the position of agent for the Illinois Christian Association, and lead us to better work and greater results than we have yet known.

W. I. PHILLIPS,

GRAND ARMY RITUAL.

The correctness of the Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, published by E. A. Cook and sold by the National Christian Association, has been questioned. It is doubtless true that changes have been made since this expose was printed; but it is also true that when first published it was the work then in use. A soldier during the war and a member of the Grand Army gave a complete expose of the initiatory work at Clear Lake, Iowa, during one of our conventions there. He used the coffin, cross-swords, skull, Bible, etc., and carefully explained the various ceremonies through which the candidate passes, and repeated the obligation administered, with various other matters of miuor importance. This he did from a personal knowledge obtained in the lodge, and entirely independent of, and so far as I know, without any knowledge of the printed ritual.

A young man, member of the church of which I was the pastor, gave me substantially the same description of initiation as that given by Peter Woodring at Clear Lake, and also related how terrified another young man was at the time of his initiation. Others have told me the same thing and I have no doubt of the correctness of the expose at the time when it was given. Doubtless the ritualistic work has undergone some change, but the spirit, purpose and character of the order remain unchanged, and are no more Republican, American or Christian than Freemasonry, or any other pagan despotic institution of modern times.

J. P. STODDARD.

A STRIKE AT PROHIBITION.

Mr. J. C. Schoenberger expresses the opinion in the Cynosure of April 17th that I have gone far out of my way "to get a strike at prohibition." And he seems to advocate "public virtue" in the name of prohibition.

But I doubt whether the eause of public virtue can be served in the name of a politieal movement which undertakes to reform the Eucharist. The Pope tried to reform the Eucharist for the sake of "public virtue;" and the Jesuits of the lodge administer their sacrament in the name of "virtue" and the "virtuous." But still, I think that the best way to serve the cause of public virtue is to preserve the Eucharist and to abolish the Masonic lodge. If we are not strong enough to cope with this lodge monstrosity, we shall hardly be able, I fear, to accomplish much of a reform in any other direction.

J. W. PHELPS.

THE GRAND ARMY DISPUTE.

DENVER, Colorado.

DEAR EDITOR:—Please indulge a lover of truth and a regular reader of our grand old Cynosure, while I am moved to vindicate the position of E. A. Cook, our former publisher, in reply to J. R. Brown on the G. A. R. ritual in the paper of April 10th.

I entered the army in 1862, a private; was fifty-four years of age; passed the board of examiners; entered with the boys in blue, three of my own sons being in the same company. Did my duty everywhere as a private, and as far as I could the work of a chaplain, unappointed. We were drawn out in battle array to test its horrors and to feel its thrusts. Many suffered—some death. As for myself I was well saturated with blood, but thanks to God the wound was not mortal. Yet I was reminded while looking at the blood that it was only part of the price of the salvation of the country. I carried gun and knapsack eighteen months and was then promoted to be chaplain, and remained with the boys to the close.

At home it was evident that some enchanting element was at work. The old lodgeites, the Masons and Oddfellows, they did so love the boys! Soon a G. A. R. camp was organized. The boys with one consent stood in solid rank as before, and I, the "old boy," with them.

But the manner and matter of going in—how much change has been made in those schools of folly within eighteen years, I have no means at present of knowing. But the M. E. parson Brown makes the breach awfully wide. It may be he is so leproused over with lodgery that he cannot speak the truth. As a case of two deacons of the same congregation: one of them being pressed pretty hard on the fact of the ante-room preparation for lodge folly, declared he never had a cable-tow around his neck to be led into the lodge. The other promptly replied, "You lie! I had hold of the rope that led you in."

Now my knowledge of this matter is thus: prepared in the ante-room; eyes closely bandaged; led by a guard stumbling on a circuitous route; ordered "Halt, and get down on your knees:" hands on the Bible, our eyes still closed, we were required to parrot after the leader. he a miserable infidel. I cannot now well recollect, but I know the obligation was so much like the Freemason "promise and swear" that I said but little of it, At the close the hoodwink was snatched off and a sepulchral voice said, "Beware of the fate of any one that divulges the secrets of this camp;" and a sign points to an open coffin very near at hand. As for the oath I do say I believe it to have been largely a duplicate of the Masouic arrangement.

Is God honored by those "camp fires," reunions, etc.? Many of these are costly. Men will follow those excitements even if the wolf is at the door. God is not honored, "is not in all their thoughts."

My dear soldier brethren, we did under God a great work, and we do well remember the many struggles on the field of conflict—how the Southern brethren held us to the work of blood. It was a hard conflict, yet we had a good government to care for us, and were crowned with a glorious victory. Can we be kind to a conquered foe? Then do not taunt those who have been in our power.

ABRAHAM HARTZELL.

A LODGE ILLUMINATION.

SILVER CITY, Idaho.

Before me is a report, a column in length, recording a public installation of the officers of Alma Lodge, Damarascotta, Maine. It is not that such brilliant exhibitions are new to me that I take particular note of this. The lodge of Silver City and those throughout Idaho, as far as I have seen, practice the same. But the Masonic lodges here are composed chiefly of men of foreign birth, many of whom are very ignorant, and inheriting a love of vain show and pomposity, their regalia exhibitions have not been surprising. This report, however, coming from a part of the country whose people are noted for their culture, and for their unflinching attitude on the side of reform, fills me with the greatest wonder and mortification. The leading actors are men I have met; and the editors, who are made the burden bearers of the occasion, I esteem most highly—men whom I know at heart are opposed to all wrong, yet are held within the ring of Masonic favor by the circumstance, no doubt, of our grandfather, Jesse Dunbar, having been a Freemason, but how good a Mason may be judged from the fact of his having refused his consent for the fraternity to officiate at his funeral. The report says:

"At the conclusion of these ceremonies the toasts were announced by P. M. Wm. A. Stetson, and responded to as follows: 'Our Grand Master;' response by Hon. E. W. Stetson: 'For four and thirty years since Alma Lodge with sister lodges emerged from the voluntary retirement into which they went from the spirit of bitter, intolerant and relentless perseeution which followed the Morgan craze, it has annually commemorated the birth of that patron of Freemasonry, St. John the evangelist, by appropriate ceremonies and festivities."

Could St. John have been a patron of Freemasonry and an evangelist at one and the same time? See the duty of the evangelist, Eph. 4: 12; and could he have edified and followed Christ and been a "patron of Freemasonry?" John 18: 20.

"We sit in a presence to-night in which few of us ever sat before—the presence of the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Maine."

The civil name of this Most Worshipful Grand Master is not given, nor is it stated by what deed of valor, statesmanship or otherwise, he has been invested with this long, high-sounding title; nor why he dare sit there before that learned and honorable assemblage, an index of contempt to our Government, and a violator of the Constitution of the United States.

"The Craft"—response by Wm. R. G. Estes.

"Mr. Estes said that by this term is meant Freemasonry, which institution embraces men [not women] of every country, sect and opinion. Freemasonry has been patronized by kings, princes and potentates; statesmen, scholars and philosophers, as well as by the common people—our true nobility."

These last are the members from whom the money comes to pay for suppers, wincs, brass bands et al. So the true nobility are held in line and made subservient to the purposes of their superiors, whose mandates they have sworn to obey without the slightest equivocation, under penalty the most brutal that fiends could devise; and an occasional example like the author of "The Three Distinct Knocks," the autbor of "Jachin and Boaz," William Miller, Smith, Murdock, Forgie and William Morgan, has a powerfully subduing influence upon the poor dupes of the lodge.

"It is not because our institution is ancient that it is patronized, but because of its character, founded as it is upon benevolent, charitable and Christian principles."

The gentleman is not informed, it seems, of the late decision of the Supreme Court of Maine, concerning the character of Freemasonry, to the effect that Masonry was not benevolent nor charitable, but was based and conducted on entirely selfish principles. And when Mr. Estes spoke of Masonry's Christian principles he must have forgotton he had stated in the first part of his speech, that Freemasonry "embraces men of every country, sect and opinion."

"It may be that bad men have been patrons of our order, but a 'tree is known by its fruit.' When there is care enough to keep the tares out of the church, we trust there will be Masonry enough to keep them out of the lodge."

Masons, in the interest of the lodge, will get themselves into the church, create discord, prevent revivals, and seek in every manner to use the church for the aggrandizement of the lodge, and then will caricature it as above!

"Our Work"—response by Jas. D. Genthner in rhyme:

> "Masonic work—there is a kind—
> The kind the ladies' have in mind,
> Because it is the kind that breaks
> The fireside circle when it makes
> For Masons the convenient dodge,
> There's work to-night at Alma Lodge."

The fireside circle is broken in more ways than one. The secretist stands as one forever ostracized, as compared with those who hold no secret from their families.

He occupies the position of one cognizant of some terrible machination, the very mention of which is attended by a silence about the fireside like that naturally assumed in the presence of the dead.

"The gridiron story is a hoax Got up to fool the women folks."

Could the "women folks" get a voice and a vote at the polls this fooling, which is spoken of so boastfully, would soon stop.

"Nor is it true that by mistake,
Exchange in underwear we make,
And wear each others shirts, till they Reveal the secret, washing day.
Ladies, I fear it will get out,
But I will tell you all about
The goat, and if our victims ride
Side-saddle fashion, or astride;
But no; I have another fear,
The fear of all my brothers here,
And I dare not incur their hate
For I remember Morgan's fate.
Jesting aside, there's work to do
For every Mason good and true;
Work for a brother in distress,
His widow, and his fatherless;
Work to prepare the heart and mind
For better work for all mankind,
The work of charity—that love,
That fits us for the lodge above,
And makes us worthy to obtain
An entrance, we can never gain
By sign or word; for these alone,
For want of work will not atone."

From the above it would seem that Masons have provided a very convenient means of reaching their "Great Grand Lodge," and one would infer, too, that that great Grand Lodge was no less place than heaven. But these representatives of this great thesaurus in charity make no mention of having made preparation for the salvation of the rest of mankind—not even for their own wives and daughters! Viewing the situation from this standpoint, remembering that Masons' wives and daughters are not allowed to breathe the odorous air, nor drink from the lucid cup of the lodge-room; nor pass through any of those ceremonies which conduce to make those so favored(?) exceptable in the lodge beyond. When your lodge friend shall have lived out the time allotted him on earth; when he shall be about to take his departure for that great Grand Lodge eternal in ——; when you shall stoop over him to pass the last farewell kiss, is it not plain, according to lodge theory, that that parting must be forever?

In closing, I would earnestly advise a careful investigation of these things by all classes. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good" (Thess. 5: 21). "Take heed that no man deceive you (Matt. 24: 4); for if it were possible they would deceive even Him who has said: "I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me." J. N. TRASK.

PITH AND POINT.

LAWYERS' USE OF THE LODGE.

I saw in the Cynosure of April 17th, "Preachers' Use of the Lodge," and was prompted by it to tell what I know of lawyers' use of the lodge. During the war an officer of a Northern regiment was killed in a battle. It was hot weather, and thought to be dangerous to bring bodies killed in battle home to bury, and an order forbidding it was issued by the military authorities. A lawyer, a son of the officer referred to, told me that he went to get his father's body, but could not get it on account of the order, to which reference has been made. On his way home he learned that the officer in charge where the battle had been fought, was a Mason. He himself was a Mason, and went back, got his father's body and brought it home with him. Disobedience to military orders, danger to public health and, I suppose, disregard of the military oath were all involved.—H. P. T., Readington, N. Y.

AN OLD BROTHER'S TESTIMONY.

I united with the people called Wesleyans in October, 1843. I have endeavored to advocate the principles of reform—anti-slavery, opposition to lodge power, from the time of the murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan to the present. I adopted the principles of prohibition more than forty years since, and now as I am about to leave the world, being seventy-five years old, it is a pleasure to see these principles springing up in different parts of our land. Thank God! Again I am permitted to see the doctrine of heart purity so prominent among our dear people. God bless them forever. And having been under the power of sickness nearly seven years I must soon pass away to my heavenly home, so I say to my brethren all, farewell. Meet me on the other shore, where Jesus reigns for evermore. —Z. T. PETTY, Oramel, N. Y.

HOME MISSIONARY APOLOGISTS.

I have thought for some time that I would tell you how we found things soon after we arrived here, about the first of April last. We were not half settled before two missionaries called upon us, a Presbyterian and Congregationalist. In conversation with the first I asked what about Freemasons in the Presbyterian church? "O," he says, "we let them alone. We don't know anything about them. We think it quite a good insurance society." I told him we had means enough at hand to know all about them, if we would avail ourselves of them; and asked if he had read Finney and others. I gave him to understand what I thought of the matter. Do the Home Missionary managers know what kind of men they are sending out; or what good does it do for the synods or Congregational bodies to pass resolutions against Masonry, and then send out men to apologize for the lodge? I think an apologist as bad or worse than the Masons—does full as much hurt in society.—A. G. FORD, Frederick, Dakota.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

BUDS AND BLOSSOMS is a charming illustrated magazine, published by J. F. Avery, Halifax, Nova Scotia, containing forty pages monthly of anecdote and argument for the Christian home. Every number is profusely and finely illustrated. We shall be happy to introduce this magazine to hundreds of American homes, and have secured a special arrangement from the proprietor. Buds and Blossoms is 75 cents per year; with the Cynosure the two will be $2.50, or any subscriber who has already paid for this paper can get the magazine at the same rate.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1884.

"The hour cometh in the which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and shall come forth." The lodge resurrection of Hiram by a profane lodge master, by "the strong grip of the Lion of the tribe of Judah," is the vilest caricature of Christ and the resurrection ever invented or practiced on earth. Its object is to indissolubly associate a vulgar and detestable sham with the sublimest event in the destiny of man, and thus break its force over mind.

HON. JAMES G. BIRNEY.

The most beautiful characters thrown up by the convulsions which overthrew American slavery were Southerners. An ignorant old Georgian had slaves, one of which he treated as his wife. He had all the haughtiness of a slave-holder with the human feelings of a man. He literally ran a gauntlet from Georgia to Galesburg, Ill., via Missouri, to find means to save his dusky progeny from the auction block. A man of higher grade of culture and intelligence, came into the writer's study at Cincinnati. He had brought by wagon twenty-four slaves from Tennessee to Missouri; thence to Ohio, to shelter them from the harpies of the slave-system in case of his death. He had with difficulty got his flock across the Ohio river, after suffering inconceivable agonies of fear caused by the suspicions and oppositions of slave-holders along the road. As an ounce of powder, exploded, will lift a mountain of granite; so the mighty force of humanity, in the hearts of these men, lifted the iron mountain of slavery, and bore these unsophisticated men, with their slaves, out from the dungeons of the American Bastile, toward light and freedom.

HON. JAS. G. BIRNEY and JOHN G. FEE were Southerners, with education and religion thrown in. They had the courage of patriots, the spirit of Christians, the instincts of gentlemen, and the cool determination of martyrs.

We have given up this number of the Cynosure to the sketch of Mr. Birney by his son, Gen. William Birney of Washington; as the highest and best treat and instruction we can give our readers; and the greatest benefit we can do to the present and coming ages. It is an attempt to restore that portion of American history which covers the fall of the slave-power, from the mists and madness which oppression engenders and which had darkened it. Garrison assailed slavery as Attila or Alaric opposed the grinding despotism of Rome. Judge Birney was like Alfred of England, Gustavus Vasa of Sweden, or our own Washington; only with an earlier mission, and, consequently, a narrower field; and it is the field that makes the hero. England was maddened by invasions of Northmen. Sweden united by Danish oppression; and the American Colonies were driven to flock around Washington by the savage roar of the British lion.

Birney, a philanthropist by nature, a Puritan by education, a statesman by instinct, and a gentleman by culture, found his way out of the labyrinthine darkness of American slavery, "the vilest that ever say the sun," to form, found, and become the leader and first nominee of an infant party which made the American flag, which had become the symbol of slavery by its bloody stripes, the symbol of freedom by its stars! The light of the churches around him had been snuffed out by slavery. He was a reasoner without an audience, a leader without followers, and an agent without a patron. He lit his own forge and made his iron hot by striking. And though forsaken by Clay, who had been his idol; hated by politicians for advocating political action; and denounced by Mr. Garrison and his handful of followers for the same cause, he neither lost balance or temper. He taught no heresy in religion or politics. Like Elijah, he stooped down and reared up the altar of freedom which was broken down, and having put his country on the upward path to freedom, he passed quietly away to let others enjoy the luxury of a land without a slave.

Mr. Birney followed his political file-leader, Clay, into the Masonic lodge; but, as the sketch says, he never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and he warned his sons against joining secret societies. This was long before he became associated with Lewis Tappan, Gerrit Smith, and the leading Antimasons. If alive to-day, he would be a leader of the American party.

The history of the Liberty party is replete with instruction and hope for the American party, and for this cause we give it to our readers in the sketch of Mr. Birney. They will be sure to thank us for it; for the destiny and triumph of both are the same.

OUR COMPLICATION WITH THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

We are in receipt of a letter from a good brother (D. C. Hewell, pastor Baptist church, Hermitage, N. Y.,) in which he argues with candor and force that the American party should join the Prohibition party, thus:

"As wisdom seems to dictate united and harmonious action against the one crying iniquity, the saloon, why not combine all our forces, and make one grand universal rush?" etc.

The American Reformer gives us similar advice, Mar. 29th:

"Formerly the American was known as the Anti-secret party, and its foremost attack now is upon secret societies. In this category are placed the Sons of Temperance, the Good Templars, the Rechabites, the Royal Templars, and every other secret temperance organization. Inside these orders, it is safe to say, are one-half the voting force of temperance workers, the very men whose efforts have brought public sentiment up to its present level on the temperance question. That these men will enter a party created for beating down their favorite organizations it is not reasonable to expect or to ask."

A beloved and venerable friend in California who loathes the secret lodge system gives similar advice.

We answer these friends and all who hold with them, that we cannot give up our present position and be absorbed by the Prohibition-Home-Protection party for a multitude of reasons, as:

1st. The American party is full ten years older than the Prohibition party.

2d. It seems to us "reasonable to expect and ask" Prohibitionists to give up their secret methods: (a.) Because they say their secrets are trivial. (b.) Because their secret orders contemn and reject the example of Christ. (c.) Because their secret wing will always betray the open wing or rule it. (d.) Because the theory of the secret orders omits Christ, without whom we can do nothing. (e.) Because there is nothing in a Good Templar lodge to prevent a profane swearer being chosen chaplain, which has often been done. (f.) Because Christ commanded his disciples to use no secret methods, but to proclaim from the "housetops" what they heard "in the ear." (g.) Because the secret temperance orders are all modeled after the Masonic lodge, and are really little man-invented religions with the deist's creed, and solemn rituals. Even the little homeopathic doses of secrecy taken by the "Sons of Temperance," in one or two years grew into a "Temple of Honor," with degrees of concealment, the upper from the lower.

3d. In our Washington correspondence last winter, it was proposed by Prohibitionists that we unite with them with the understanding that all persons nominated to office by us, should agree to confine themselves to open methods of work. Senator Pomeroy, Bailey, Hinman and Blanchard, with others, met and agreed to those terms, and we are ready to stand to that agreement now.

4th. The Reformer is assured that "the anti-Pittsburg wing was and is the Masonic wing of the Prohibitionists." Our information is direct and reliable; but we do not wish to provoke animosities by giving names. The Reformer is candid and sincere, and doubtless believes that the secret temperance orders "are the very men whose efforts have brought public sentiment up to its present level on the temperance question." We feel equally certain they are not. In Wheaton, Ill., a Good Templar lodge voted to sustain its Chief Templar, who advocated giving the Germans of the county licensed liquor saloons, to gain their vote in a struggle for the county seat. In the adjoining township of Wayne, a swearing boy was made chaplain of the Good Templar's lodge. John B. Gough told the writer that, having been induced to join a Good Templar lodge he became disgusted; stripped off the regalia during a public procession, and never wore it afterward. The apostle of temperance, Dr. Chas. Jewett, gives several pages in his popular book, "Forty Years Fight with the Drink Demon," condemning secret temperance orders. He himself had joined one. Henry C. Child, master of the Wheaton Masonic lodge, offered $1,000 to Wheaton College if it would allow its students to join Good Templar lodges. Mr. Child used liquor himself, but he considered a Good Templar lodge the herald and harbinger of Masonry. The life of a secret order always takes precedence of the reform principle which it professes. And all history proves that the spirit of a secret society is not the Spirit of Christ but of the "god of this world."

5th. The Reformer's conjecture that "one-half the voting force of the temperance workers" are inside the secret orders is because women do not vote; yet since the Ohio women's crusade, the women have done more for the cause than the men. And we submit that "it is not reasonable to expect or to ask" open Christian temperance workers to put rings in their noses to be led by the secret temperance voters, whose lodge rooms are perpetual caucuses; and many of whom are Masons and Odd-fellows and so in pledged or sworn secret fellowship and brotherhood with Masons who are liquor men and saloonists.

The Reformer is too wise and candid to wish Christian temperance people to give up Christ's example, and adopt the secret subterfuges of the lodge. If Mason-prohibitionists are false to their brothers, who are liquor men, how can they be trusted? But if true to their Masonic oaths, they will betray the temperance cause.

6th. The secret lodges give up no principle by joining in open work, but to join secret lodges, we must give up our fealty to Christ's example, and the command to "follow" him, i. e., do and work as he did. Our good brother Herrell must see, that instead of "losing nothing" we lose everything by joining in with secretists who meet with us in open conventions, and then go into their secret lodges by themselves, and discuss what they will do!

7th. But the gist and point of our whole objection to joining and working with the secret Prohibitionists is the same reason which forbid Ezra and Nehemiah uniting in work with Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, "people of the land. who came to them saying, 'We seek your God as you do.'" Those men were doubtless sincere. They had sacrificed to the God of the Hebrews, they said, "since Esarhadden." But the trouble was, they practiced religions with Christ left out, as do Masons and Good Templars. We object to the worships of Masons, Good Templars, etc., because Jews who hate Christ and Christians who worship him are all on a level in their worship and brotherhood. And putting Christianity on a level with Christless worships is denying Christ! For there is no Christ who is on a level with the gods of false religionists and non-professors!

Now we hope the Reformer, whose candor and ability we endorse, will advise the open Prohibitionists to ask the secret ones to give up the thin veil that does little but identify them with the older secret lodges, and unite with us, or permit us to unite with them on equal Christian terms.

The American party convention meets in Chicago, June 20th. If the Prohibitionists will meet with us on the terms proposed to us last winter, viz., that all nominees agree to confine themselves, as Christ did, to open work, we will joyfully hail their coming and we will go to Pittsburg, July 23d.

THE AMERICAN.—The mail of Monday morning brought in the long-expected paper from Washington. Bro. Bailey has met strong currents and head winds not down on his chart, but he brings into port a fair vessel with a rich cargo. His fair new type and good paper are such an introduction as the Cynosure would have been thankful for sixteen years ago. With him are associated brethren Needels, Hinman, Day, Butler and Worrell as corresponding editors, and the American shows in every column the mark of strong thinking. Let us sustain them and prove the reform strong enough to sustain—nay, that it demands two papers. The American must become the best exponent of American principles for American voters, or it will fall short of our anticipations.

—The editor of the Cynosure started for western New York on Saturday, expecting to spend the Lord's day with Bro. Foote in Detroit. He will, by arrangement with the General Agent and Bro. Bailey of Washington, attend the county meetings in western New York and at Northampton, Mass., while Bro. Stoddard gives attention to meetings in Illinois and adjoining States. S. A. Pratt, Esq., of Worcester, chairman of the Massachusetts State political committee will probably arrange for the New England meeting, and under his management it will achieve a great success.

—Bro. M. N. Butler has the congratulations of all about the Cynosure office in having lately taken to himself a wife. His blows against the frowning towers of Masonry will now have a double energy. May both husband and wife live to see them fall like Jericho's.

—The letter from Bro. C. B. Ward, missionary to India, is like a Macedonian call to our National Christian Association. We believe we shall be able to report next week that his offer is taken and the tracts on their way to those "ends of the earth."

—It would be a commendable kind of "Jingoism" if the Association would adopt an energetic "foreign policy" and extend its labors into such parts of Europe, Asia, Africa and Mexico as might with very little effort be effectively reached with our reform literature. What shall be said about this at the annual meeting?

—Bro. Bancroft of Wisconsin is at the end—the sad end of his weary watching at the bedside of a beloved and faithful wife, who passed from suffering to rest on the 18th ult. He expresses sincere gratitude for the tokens of friendly esteem and sympathy in this affliction, which mitigate in some measure the sharpness of the loss. He intends visiting Baraboo this week to attend the meeting called for the 30th and will then go on for the summer campaign.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The time of our annual meeting occurs this year June 19th, at 10 o'clock A. M. Every corporate member, and as many of the friends as possible should attend. Each annual gathering is more important than those preceding it, and the one approaching has special significance. Our work has been hedged about from the first by indifference, criticism, and a determined opposition, so that its growth has of necessity been slow. God has been pleased to bless our labors and hear our prayers for enlargement until not only in the United States and civilized countries, but in Africa and India the principles embodied in the N. C. A. are advocated by devoted missionaries, and its literature widely circulated among the natives, and the call for our publications and the means for supplying home and foreign missionaries is urgent and steadily increasing. Among all the mission boards for home and foreign work there is not one which is intrusted with an equal diversity of interests or that requires greater prudence, wisdom, foresight and faith in its management. Without respect "of persons," sects, or political parties, its mission is to all classess alike and with all for their emancipation from the thralldom of the secret empire, which grows more desperate as the light enters and exposes its "secret abominations."

Beloved, hath not the Master chosen you for this work and honored you in bearing the reproaches that come upon those who follow Christ? Will you show yourselves worthy the honor and meet for the work by coming up to the annual gathering "filled with the Spirit" and ready for every good word and work?

Our ranks have been thinned since we last met by the Reaper, and you may be the next to whom it shall be said, "Come up higher," and so it behooves each one to stand in his lot in the time appointed. The two veterans who have stood by this reform from its inception, with purse and pen, with tongue and influence, though "well stricken in years" are still spared, and you ought to cheer their hearts and your own by coming up once more to take the hands of Philo Carpenter and Pres. J. Blanchard, and renew your covenant vows to remain faithful unto death in defence of God's truth and free government against the encroachments of the secret empire.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM INDIA.

THRILLING LETTER FROM A METHODIST MISSIONARY.

SECUNDERABAD, India, March 18, 1884.

DEAR DR. BLANCHARD:—For the last eight years I have watched and sympathized with the work of the N. C. A. I never needed to be convinced of the unrighteousness of secret societies. In India I see the curse of Masonry as I never saw it in America. The moral character of Masonry out here is bad. Drunken carousals are the inevitaconcomitants of the lodge meetings. The un-Christliness of the order is manifest here where Christ-hating Mohammedans and Hindoos join with eclat. Romanists let down the bars in this country and do not excommunicate for lodge connections in all cases.

I am glad to get the Cynosure in exchange for the India Methodist Watchman. I oft extract from it for my paper. I am glad to say that in South India Conference, the tree of Wm. Taylor's planting, we have not one Freemason minister. In our sister conference of North India we have a few who worship at the altar of secrecy. Good Templar secrecy is a fond idol with our North India men, too. So far as we know, missionary societies, not excepting the Salvation Army, keep aloof from action on secrecy. Many missionaries in India are Masons. Our conference is clear so far, and a strong anti-secret sentiment prevails among us. As for myself, I am committed to fight secrecy in India as a work of darkness.

I am in need of anti-secrecy tracts. I enclose a slip of your Cynosure publications. I cannot but think some good brother of the cause in America would gladly donate me $25 worth of the tracts I indicate. I have the address of every missionary in India, Burmah and Ceylon, 100 in all, and am sending them holiness and anti-tobacco tracts. I will undertake to scatter $25 worth of your tracts all over this empire among missionaries, laymen and native Christians, if you can find the doner of the same. Pray for the cause of truth in India and send these tracts if possible. Your brother in Christ,

C. B. WARD,
Editor India Methodist Watchman,

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

The meetings in western New York will be held as follows:

Genesee county, at Batavia, April 28th and 29th.
Orleans county, at Albion, April 30th and May 1st.
Monroe county, at Rochester, May 5th and 6th.
Onondaga county, at Syracuse, May 7th and 8th.
Ontario county, at Canandaigua, May 9th and 10th.
Livingstone county, at York, May 12th and 13th.
Wyoming county, at Warsaw, May 15th and 16th.

Friends attending convention at Rochester should call at No. 47 St. Joseph street; for direction at Syracuse, at the Wesleyan Methodist Publishing House.

THE EIGHTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

BLACKBERRY STATION, Ill., April 25, 1884.

I attended the Republican Senatorial convention at Aurora yesterday. It was organized by the choice of Mayor Barclay of Elgin as chairman, and the usual number of secretaries. After the appointment of committees, the convention adjourned till 1: 30 P. M. A magnificent dinner was gotten up in the basement of the Universalist church, to which all the delegates had tickets. The convention re-assembled at 1. 30 P. M., and nominated by acclamation Col. Evans of Aurora for Senator, and John Stewart of Campton, Kane county, and L. L. Hiatt of Wheaton, for representatives. Stewart is a Knight Templar. His principal qualifications are Masonry and property. He would not stand the shadow of a chance of election were he not a Mason. Hiatt is also a Mason. We were surprised to see Anti-masons from Du Page county voting for Hiatt and Stewart. So long as our young men see that a membership of the lodge is a stepping stone to office just so long will they continue to join secret societies. Nearly all the leading delegates to the convention were Freemasons. Col. Evans is not a Freemason. He will probably be re-elected. But Hiatt and Stewart will meet a strong opposition. There are hundreds of men in the district better qualified for representatives than they are. But they are Masons and the craft is bound to support them. J. P. BARTLETT.

NOTE.—In justice to Mr. Hiatt we must add that when he was nominated two years ago for the legislature many Freemasons of Du Page county were opposed to him, because he had left the lodge. The American voters in that district expect, however, to nominate and vote for a man who has no complicity with the lodge.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.

GRANT'S PRESIDENTIAL PROSPECTS.

His elements of success lie: First, in the Democratic party. Second, in the large Democratic element of the Republican party. Third, in Masonic Methodists. Fourth, in the Grand Army of the Republic. Fifth, in the Grand Army of the Confederacy. Sixth (not least), in the Masonic lodge.

If he succeeds by the force of these elements of success, and should aim higher, at imperial government, then there is a large treasury filled with gold; enough to pay a hundred regiments for a year! May not Cæsar have need of it?

The ultimate fruiting of Grant's military operations might very naturally end in anything else but the interests of the Republic. War's delays are dangerous things to a republic. OLD SOLDIER.

GOOD FOR THE AMERICAN PARTY.

In my sermon of last Sabbath, while reprehending the political parties of this day for their present degradation, I said that the two great political parties had done their work, and that we should, before long, have a new party. The Republican party was formed to kill slavery. Slavery is dead and damned. The Republican party, having achieved what it started for, had better pass out of existence. The Democratic party was founded by Thomas Jefferson to oppose the adoption of laws of primogeniture by which the oldest son got all the inheritance, and to drive out of the land all foreign titles, and to give equal rights to all classes of people. Having fully accomplished that work, its mission seems ended. We are now ready for a party organized for new, particular, supreme God-given work. I showed you last Sabbath that such a party first of all must acknowledge God in its platforms, in its ensigns, in its plans and purposes; that it must also be the foe of national wastefulness and the friend of national economy. I come now to say that it needs not only to whisper but to thunder against the curse of curses, the abomination of abominations, the infernalism of infernalisms—the intemperance of the land—and by national prohibition go forth to slay the red dragon of alcoholism.—Talmage.

—The Ohio State Prohibition Convention to appoint delegates to the Pittsburg National Convention, is the only political body outside the American party which has made the national recognition of God a part of its platform. The Ohio meeting at Columbus, March 6th,

Resolved, That this convention recognize God to be the author of government for man, and that in it he has corporated protection for the citizen in his person and possessions.

A WANT.—There is no more melancholy feature in the Blaine boom than the absence from it of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, the gallant old infidel, who really started it in 1876 by the "plumed knight" speech. He was remorselessly thrown aside in 1880 however by Mr. Blaine's managers on account of his skepticism, they being above all things a religious body of men and anxious that their candidate should retain his hold on the religious sentiment of the country. Now Colonel Ingersoll cannot get to the convention at all, either as a Blaine or anti-Blaine man. He has just been defeated in Washington, and is beginning to find out that the divorce between religion and politics, even in the United States, is not as complete as some people suppose. But even the infidels have been pained of late by the Colonel's defence of all kinds of rascals. There ought to be some morality they say, even in his irreligion.—N. Y. Evening Post.

The ILLUSTRATOR, the latest, freshest and one of the most practically useful of the S. S. lesson helps, will be sent with Cynosure for $2.30 per year for both, price separate $2.60. Working teachers will find a great advantage in using this magazine.

CHEAPEST AND BEST.

In the whole range of the literature of our reform there is nothing cheaper than the Cynosure. Compute the amount of reading in each number and multiply it by fifty-two, and the result will be a surprise that so much can be furnished for $2.00. No book or pamphlet provides so much in proportion to the cost. As for the variety and quality of their work, the writers for the Cynosure are among the best and most conscientious and intelligent Christians in the world. To surpass their work would be difficult. Let them be sustained by increasing the circulation of the paper by thousands.

If each one will add to his effort for a good cause the name of a new subscriber, enclosing $4.00 for both, the sender may have also his choice of the following valuable pamphlets:

1. The Batavia Convention pamphlet, with the great speeches on that occasion, illustrations of the Morgan Monument, etc.; or

2. Egypt in History and Prophecy; or, Pharaoh Proclaiming God, by the celebrated Robert Patterson, from Hasting's Anti-infidel Library; or

3. The Anti-masonic Scrap Book, a new and enlarged edition now in press, containing all the tracts published by the N. C. A.; or

4. The Island of Madagascar; the excellent history written by Gen. J. W. Phelps and noticed in a late Cynosure.

5 Copies of any of the pamphlets sold by the N. C A., to the amount of 25 cents.

THE HOME.

YOUTH AND AGE.

BY J. W. MOSS.

"I wish I was a boy again,
To sport upon the green."
Go, then, unhindered, and renew
The frolics of fourteen.

What! still contented, do you sit
In that old rocking chair,
Wishing to play upon the green,
And yet not romping there.

No, friend, deceive not thus yourself,
Your joys are none the less;
Age has its sweets as well as youth,
Though different, I confess.

What means that twinkle in your eye,
That smile upon your face,
As looking out you see the boys
Each other wildly chase?

'Twas joyful in your younger years
Youth's antics to go through;
With greater pleasure now you see
Your grandson skip for you.

If virtue crowns the life God gives,
We need not live it twice;
A melancholy out-look has
The hoary head of vice.

"I wish I was a girl again,
In freedom from all care,
To gather blossoms in the fields
And braid them in my hair."

No, mother, all the hours of youth,
No equal pleasure yields,
As when your noble boy comes in
To dinner from the fields.

But flowers, the brightest hued of them
In beauty bloom in view,
And yet no effort do I see
To pluck them made by you.

Sure, then, a change of heart has come
To correspond with years,
And virtue's blossoms bloom in age,
Though watered by our tears.

Cameron, W. Va.

REV. GARRICK GREEN.

What Beecher is in Brooklyn, what Murray used to be in Boston, Garrick Green is in Prodington. He came to a church that was feeble and in debt. The congregation might have averaged two hundred. This was three years ago. Now that church has a house of worship that will seat fifteen hundred, and is full every Sabbath. Of course, its finances are booming. It is the popular church of our city. The strangers all go there. The young people drift there from the other churches to the great grief of parents and pastors. What is the secret of this wonderful success? It can be told in one word: the Rev. Garrick Green is dramatic. He is not an orator, but an actor. He does not preach; he performs. He has a large platform instead of a pulpit. On that platform he appears twice every Sabbath in various characters, and sustains them generally with a good degree of histrionic power. Does he want to make avarice appear mean and contemptible? He takes the part of Judas in the drama of the Crucifixion. Does he want to thrill his hearers with sympathy for the suffering Saviour? He does not hesitate to re-enact the scene on Calvary. He holds up one hand, and pretends to drive a nail through it with the other. He seizes a cane, and thrusts it against his side as if it was a spear. All this he does so naturally and so earnestly that the people gaze with moistened eyes and throbbing hearts. They sit as if they were spell-bound until the performance is over; then they go away saying one to another, "Was not that splendid? Is not Mr. Green a grand preacher?"

Now one would think a man so gifted and so earnest would be a great power for good in our city. I asked one of his pious praying members the other day: "How are you prospering at the X Avenue church? I see by the papers that it is crowded every Sabbath."

"Yes," he replied, "we have a flood there and plenty of driftwood, and yet we don't catch any of it. Though, for the matter of that, it is all water-soaked and not worth catching, anyhow."

"What! are there no additions to the church from that crowd of hearers?"

"Scarcely any. Last year we received six on profession and excommunicated five, a net gain of one. The people come to be entertained. The most of them pay something. The fifteen hundred hearers give an average of about five cents apiece each Sabbath. But this makes $4,000 a year. So we are prosperous financially. Spiritually we are dead. We glory in the popularity of our preacher. We talk about him ten times as much as we talk about Christ. We trust in him to build us up, and don't realize our need of the Holy Spirit. I tell you, turning churches into theatres don't pay in the long run, and the preachers who get up performances to attract congregations may be immensely popular, yet I don't believe that they do much good. Our man Green is sincere. He wants to be useful. He thinks that the first thing is to get people to come to church. But if they come only to be entertained I think they might as well stay away. His performances give them the idea that our churches are places of amusement. If he should begin to preach the Gospel pure and simple, to tell these people that they are sinners and must repent or perish, he would drive them all away."

Going down the street after parting with this brother I met a young man who used to come regularly to our church. I said "Good morning, John, I haven't seen you for weeks. Have you been out of town?"

"Oh, no," he replied, "but you see I go to Green's now Sundays. All the young folks go there. Some that used to go to the theatre Sunday nights now go to the X Avenue. They say the performances are just as good, and that they need not pay anything unless they choose. Fellows that used to spend two or three dollars taking their girls to other places of amusement now take them to Green's. So they do their courting just the same, and save their money and are not tempted to drink. I tell you, Mr. Old-school, that man Green is a great preacher, and he is doing a power of good."

Well, thought I, it is a good thing to keep people from patronizing theatres and saloons on the Sabbath. But if the minister of the Gospel stops there, and gives them the idea that that is his mission and the whole of it, does he benefit them, after all? He makes them believe that because they go to church they are as good as anybody; that conversion, a radical change of heart and life, is an obsolete dogma; that the other preachers are dyspeptics and their people bigots; that orthodoxy is a sham, depravity a bugbear and hell a hideous dream. While to be honest and amiable, and to go and hear the Rev. Garrick Green every Sunday, is the sum and substance of true religion.

I had not seen Mrs. Shallow, who is one of our members, in her pew for several Sabbaths. So I thought she might be sick, and went to visit her. She met me at the door. She was cordial, but seemed slightly embarrassed. I said, "Have you been sick? I have missed you from church a month or more."

"Why, haven't you heard that I have quit your folks and joined Green? The old doctor's preaching used to make me feel uncomfortable. My husband would never go to church with me and would invite company in on Sunday, and wanted an extra good dinner. I had to humor him, yet I was troubled because I heard so much in church about keeping the Sabbath day holy. But now, since I have joined Green, I am a great deal happier. He tells us that the Sabbath was made for us, and that it ought to be a day of cheerfulness and joy. We keep it so at our house. We have a nice dinner party, a quiet game of cards, and in the evening we all go to church, my husband and all. John says that if all the Christians were as liberal as Green, he would be one himself. But when I urge him to join, he laughs and says, "What's the use—there is no difference between the outsiders and the insiders anyway." And I don't really think that there is. John is a good husband. True, he drinks a little too much now and then, and he swears sometimes; but he is honest and kind-hearted, and I believe he is as good a Christian as some who go about with long faces and make long prayers."

It was useless to argue the case with Mrs. Shallow, so I went sadly home.

Whitefield was dramatic in the pulpit. So was Rowland Hill. So are some preachers to-day whom we all esteem very highly for their work's sake. But dramatic power brings with it many temptations. Let the young man who possesses it not depend too much upon it. Let him remember that it is only that truth which reaches the conscience and rouses it to action that does any good. Pulpit popularity is not always the test and the measure of ministerial usefulness.—Obadiah Oldschool, in Interior.

The imprecation of President Witherspoon in the long ago should not be forgotten: "Cursed be all the learning that is contrary to the cross of Christ; cursed be all that learning that is not coincident with the cross of Christ; cursed be all that learning that is not subservient to the cross of Christ." When the States are expending such large sums on the scholars; when the national government is besought to appropriate millions in aid of education; when private beneficence is lavished on academic and colegiate institutions; it is well to recall the fact that culture may be a curse.

KEEPING THE SABBATH.

A lady who spoke recently in the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, ascribed her conversion to the following incident: She was traveling through New Mexico three years ago, and was side-tracked at Santa Fe one Sunday. She and a lady friend had some handkerchiefs that they wanted washed, and spying a Chinese camp a short ways off went to it, and she asked a Chinaman if he would wash the handkerchiefs. He replied, "No, me no washee to-day." The lady friend, thinking, of course, that John was lazy, recommended her to display her cash, and renew the request. So she held out a dollar bill to John, together with the handkerchiefs, and asked him again to wash them. At this John grew solemn, and reaching up to a shelf took down a book, which the lady was surprised to see was a Bible, and holding it in one hand and pointing to it with the other looked into her face, while a tear stood in his eye, and said: "You savee, me Chinaman and you Melican lady; and I lovee that book. You no good lady." There were no handkerchiefs washed that day, and a profound impression was made on the ladies and their party, ending in the conversion of the speaker.—Journal.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

"PEACE, BE STILL."

In the rush and the roar of the city
In the busy morning hours,
A little boy—"a waif and a stray"—
Was trying to sell his flowers;
He dodged where the wheels were thickest,
He darted across the street,
Flying hither and thither,
With a scamper of eager feet;
And ever amid the pauses
He sang a simple strain;
"Peace, be still, peace, be still,"
Was the sweet and low refrain.

Nobody stopped to listen,
But many must have heard;
For the boy sang on in his gladness
As if he loved the word;
And into his office many a man,
Perhaps against his will,
Carried the tune and its lingering thought,
"Peace, peace, be still,"
For it forced its way to the busy brain
And into the anxious breast;
And seemed to promise the toilers
A respite of after-rest.

"Fresh flowers! will you buy a bunch, sir?
Ah, I am glad you will;
Only a penny a bunch, sir—
Peace, peace, be still!"
The city man, in his hurry,
Passed on the crowded way,
And he little guessed what waited him
Of trouble and care that day,
But among his morning letters
Was one that, as he read,
Covered with pallor the ruddy face,
And filled the heart with dread.

"Ruin, absolute ruin!"
"Peace, peace, be still!"
"I never dreamed that this could come!"
"Peace, peace; be still!"
"Is there any help in earth or heaven?"
"Peace, peace be still!"
At last he heard the gentle voice,
And answered it, "I will!
Peace is courage, and courage strength,
I shall find the light ere long;"
And the man was helped to victory
By the lesson in the song!

THE NORTHERNMOST GARDEN IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the summer of 1883, a small exploring party, under command of Lieut. Schwatka, of the U. S. Army, crossed the coast range of the Alaskan Mountains from Chilkat, and reached the head of the great Yukon River, over two thousand miles long, and there built a raft and floated down this stream over one thousand three hundred miles, exploring and surveying it as they went along. At Nuklakayet, some seven hundred odd miles from its mouth, the first white trading station was encountered, although a few abandoned ones had been met before—and the raft exchanged for a civilized boat. Nuklakayet is near the junction of the Yukon and Tanana, in latitude 65 degrees 8 minutes north, and therefore eighty-five geographical, or ninety-eight common miles from the Arctic Circle. The station was kept by Mr. A. Harper, and here he had raised a garden of vegetables. It is the most northern one in the United States, within a day or two's journey of the Arctic Circle itself. The predominating vegetables were turnips, the largest of which raised last year weighed a trifle over six pounds. A few other hardy plants make up the small but interesting garden. The greatest obstacle in gardening in this valley is the dense swarms of mosquitoes that abound from the time the snows disappear in the spring until frost comes in the fall, and makes life a burden for all kinds of animal existence. Another almost equal is the character of the ground. In winter, with the thermometer at from 50 degrees to 60 degrees below zero, the soil freezes to six or seven feet in depth, and in the short, hot summer it thaws but two or three feet, leaving a substratum of ice that holds the water and makes even the sides of the hills marshy, and more like a bog than tillable soil. This marshy character gives rise to a luxuriant superficial moss that grows everywhere, and makes walking toilsome and cultivation almost out of the question. Mr. Harper has chosen a southeastern slope on the river bank, and here the immediate drainage has helped him to raise this phenomenal garden. The northernmost spot on the globe where rye and oats ripen is at Kengis, in the Swedish Province at Norrbotten, forty-nine miles to the north of the Arctic Circle. The northernmost place where corn matures is at Muoniovara, ninety-eight miles north of the Circle, and is located just the same distance above that Mr. Harper's garden is below it.—American Agriculturist for May.

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS.

"Gentlemen," said a repentant drinking man at a temperance meeting held in ———, during the Murphy excitement, "gentlemen, it has cost me $10,000 to bring my nose to its present state of perfection." Ten thousand dollars! And what did he have besides his red nose? An aching and remorseful heart, a pain-racked and diseased body, a home where a miserable woman probably dragged her weary life along in a wretched, hopeless apathy, crushed and bowed to the earth by the shame of being a drunkard's wife. "Ten thousand dollars!" wrote the recording angel, and turned in stern sorrow from the page. "Ten thousand dollars!" chuckled the rumseller; "I am that much richer; am I not a lucky man?" "Ten thousand dollars!" whispered a little boy away back in the corner, whose father was killed in a drunken brawl; "ten thousand dollars would make my mother happy and I wouldn't have to sell newspapers for a living, and stay out of school when my heart is hungry for books. "Ten thousand dollars!" soliloquized the young man who drank a little; "I can't afford that." And he signed the pledge, though he did not mean to.

The confession was like a spark that sprang into a flame, and ran with vivid tongues of fire through the vast audience. The little boy went forward with the throng with all the manliness of twenty-five. He wrote his name as well as he could, and proudly took his pledge card. When he thought himself unnoticed he wrote slyly on its back: "Ten thousand dollars saved for mother bi not drinkin'." That was exactly the way he wrote it, so you need not laugh. Maybe his father had wasted as much over his cups, and now his child had no time to learn to spell. He was busy all day at anything to turn an honest penny; and nights, poor fellow, he was too tired and sleepy to even look at a book.

How do I know what he wrote? In passing out, his precious card was brushed from his hand. He could not go back, for the throng pressed on. It was picked up by the janitor, given to one of the officers in charge, and was next day posted on an immense blackboard and served as a text for one of the most magnificent lectures of the course. What a lot of wet handkerchiefs there were when the speaker was through! How red the ladies' eyes were—almost as red as the drunkard's nose! And Jimmy—there I didn't mean to tell one bit of his name—who had stolen back to get his treasured card, and see if he could sell a few books and papers, trembled like a leaf with excitement to think that he was the hero of all that grand talk; and the color went in and out of his cheeks with just that quiver you have seen in the sky when the northern lights wave and tremble. By and by the gentleman called his name, and somebody put him on the platform, and then there was such a stamping and clapping as you never heard of before in your life. And how did it all end? Why, good people interested themselves in the child and his mother, and Jimmy goes to school now and his mother is matron in a "temperance house;" and some day, if you don't study hard boys, Jimmy will be at the top of the ladder while you are just beginning to climb. I want you to remember the man—for he was a real, living man—who said: "It cost me $10,000 to bring my nose to its present state of perfection;" and think of the boy, a drunkard's orphan, who resolved to save $10,000 for his mother "by not drinking," and if you are tempted to drink, see if you cannot make and keep a good resolution. —Sel.

OUT OF THE MOUTH OF BABES.

Last summer a gentleman's family passed the heated term in one of the small towns not far from this city. The place of their sojourn was sufficiently near to allow him to spend Sunday with them. On one of these visits, taking his little boy less than four years old, he occupied the holy time in fishing. He had no "luck." At length, disappointed at his want of success, he said, "I wonder why the fish don't bite." The little fellow replied, "Papa, I think it's because the big fish are at church, and the little fish have gone to Sunday school."—St. Louis Presbyterian.

TEMPERANCE.

A NEW EMANCIPATION.

There are some men yet to arise in the Senate of the United States or the House of Representatives who, ordained by the laying on of the hands of God Almighty and the hands of all righteous men and women of America, shall demand that the right arm of the American Government be stretched out for the stopping of this plague. And he will in his speech intone the plaint of hundreds of thousands of homeless children and the groan of widowhood that reaches from sea to sea, and from earth to heaven, and before the vision of those national legislators before whom he pleads there will appear two lakes, a lake of tears and a lake of blood, and two scrolls, the one written like Ezekiel's scroll within and without with lamentation, and mourning, and woe, and the other scroll containing an emancipation proclamation mightier than that which Abraham Lincoln signed, and giving freedom to more slaves from worse bondage, and declaring that under the majesty of the law, as well as under the sword and bludgeon of an outraged nation, shall go down the red dragon which so long has hooked with its ten horns, and reigned with its seven crowns, dragging the third part of the stars of heaven after it.—Talmage.

We are not given to recounting the horrors of intemperance. They are too ghastly, too piteous to wring hearts with very often, but the "cry of the children" will not "down." Our good friend, Laura Haviland, was recently invited to speak in a small Michigan town where lived a German who was kind and industrious, save when under the influence of drink. At such times, in demoniac rage, the butcher knife or whatever came to his hand, was used in driving his wife and children into the street.

He came home in this condition one night to find his little daughter of nine years in the burning heat of scarlet fever, and to turn all out of doors. The pleadings of the heart-sick mother and the sympathizing children were of no avail. "I'll take care of 'er; I'll cool 'er off;" was his brutal threat, and suiting action to word, he seized a pail of cold water fresh from the well, stripped off the blankets, and dashed the water over the sick child, who was thrown into convulsions at once. The agonized mother strove with him still, but still he raved.

"I'll bring 'er out of this," and taking up a bottle of camphor sitting near the bedside, threw a handful of the burning liquid upon the little face so dear to him when whisky was not his indwelling fiend. The poor child gasped once—twice—and God in his mercy took her to his arms. An indignant community tried to administer justice, but he compelled his terror-stricken family to testify falsely, and so another murderer is free. The true fatherly heart trembles with honest anger at such savagery, but fathers legalized the saloon where this father was crazed. Will not the blood of this little one cry out against them also, and be required at their hands?—Union-Signal.

Arkansas has lately done a good deed, and after a valiant fight, won a notable victory for temperance. No saloon will now be allowed to stand within three miles of a church or school-house, if a majority of the men and women over twenty-one and eighteen years of age are opposed to it, and present a paper so stating to the county judge. This has made a great stirring up in that State, and is doing a vast deal of good.—Golden Rule.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON VI.—May 11, 1884.—Victory over Death. 1 Cor. 15: 50-58.

Get your Bible and read the lesson.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Death is swallowed up in victory. 1 Cor. 15: 54.

"Cannot inherit the kingdom of God." It is not a little remarkable that the prevailing opinion should be that the very same particles of bodily substance which are laid in the grave, or otherwise disposed of, are to be reassembled and reunited at the resurrection, so as to form, as is supposed, the same body in which the soul resided before death, and that Scripture teaches us to believe this. Paul's words, however, express almost as strongly as words can, the direct contrary. Throughout Scripture the phrase, "resurrection of the body" or "resurrection of the flesh," nowhere occurs. The Scriptures only speak of man's resurrection from the dead, of his "vile body" being "changed," of his being "clothed upon." Of this new kind of body he tells us no more than that it will be "incorruptible," and that it will be (in Christ's approved followers) made after the image of his body.—Richard Whately, D. D.

WE ARE THE SAME PERSONS, THOUGH CHANGED, just as each flower and plant is the natural outgrowth of its particular seed. Each seed produces its own plant, and no other. We recognize the oak the moment we see the acorn. We see the flower in its seed, the seed in its flower. So in heaven we shall be changed, but the same persons still. In heaven we want to see our own friends, the very persons who died, and whom we loved. They may be as much changed as the loveliest flower is changed from the black seed from which it grew, as the oak is from the acorn. That which makes us ourselves, that which belongs to our innermost nature, will not be changed. We are not changed into other persons. We shall recognize and love the friends in heaven whom we loved and knew on earth.—Peloubet.

NEW POWERS. It seems to me not improbable that the change which shall take place in the body may be itself the appointed means for bringing about a change in the powers and tendencies of the mind. It is plain that the mind greatly depends on the body as its instrument, and on the several members of the body depend the exercise of several distinct powers of the mind; so that the loss or imperfection of any one particular organ—of the eye, for instance, or the ear—will shut out one particular kind of knowledge and of thought from the mind; that of colors, for instance, or that of sounds. It is quite possible, therefore, that our minds may at this moment actually possss faculties which have never been exercised, and of which we have no notion whatever; which have lain inactive, unperceived, and undeveloped for want of such a structure of bodily organs as is necessary to call them forth and give play to them. A familiar instance of this kind is the case of a man born blind, whose mind or spiritual part is as perfect in itself as another man's, yet through this imperfection one whole class of ideas is completely wanting. He only learns from others that there is such a thing as seeing, and as light and colors, though he cannot comprehend what they are. On this point, however, the sacred writers have not thought fit to gratify our curiosity, but have been content to tell us generally that we shall be greatly changed.—Whately.

VICTORY OVER DEATH'S TERRORS. The heathen sorrowed without hope. A shattered pillar; a ship gone to pieces; a race lost; a harp lying on the ground with snapped strings, with all its music lost; a flower-bud crushed with all its fragrance in it—these were the sad utterances of their hopeless grief. The thought that death was the gate of life came not in to cheer the parting, or brighten the sepulchre.—Bonar. The Romans had thirty epithets for death; and all of them were full of deepest dejection. "The iron slumber," "the eternal night," "the mower with his scythe," "the hunter with his snares," "the demon bearing a cup of poison," "the merciless destroying angel," "the inexorable jailer with keys," "the king of terrors treading down empires,"—some of them were these, the bitterness of which is indescribable. The revelation which the New Testament furnishes, breaks like beautiful sunshine through the unutterable gloom. Our Lord Jesus came to bring life and immortality to light in the Gospel.—C. S. Robinson, D. D., in S. S. Times.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

VICTORY OVER DEATH IS VICTORY OVER SIN.

1. Corruption cannot inherit incorruption. V. 50. This means that we cannot become heirs of immortality till we have implanted within us the germs of a new and spiritual life. By nature we are all born under the dominion of death, and the only way its fetters can be broken is by being born again into another nature; i. e., having our hearts so changed that we shall love what God loves and hate what he hates. We read that no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of God. This is reasonable, for while the drunkard sows in his physical nature the seeds of corruption and death how can he expect to reap anything else? One result of alcohol—and beer is as bad or even worse than stronger liquors—is to cause the muscles and nerves of the drinker, which in health are living working organisms, to first lose their vital properties, then break up into minute granules, and finally alter into oil globules. When this stage is reached the nerve or muscle is dead. This disease is called "fatty degeneration," and is a part of the same process of corruption which goes on in the corpse after it is laid away in the grave carried on in the living body. People who drink a great deal of beer are apt to grow enormously bulky, and they think it a sign of health, but it is not. The bloated form of the drinker is only a sign of the physical putrefaction going on inside. While of the moderate drinker, Dr. Greenfield, from whose work on the Use and Abuse of Alcohol the above facts are taken, says: "A man may drink in such a way as never to feel consciously excited or embarrassed, yet ruin his health and cut short his days more speedily than the man who is dead drunk every Saturday night." The smoker also "sows to the flesh, and must of the flesh reap corruption." Slavery to any vicious habit is a bondage to death, like the chaining of the living to the dead practiced by ancient conquerors

2. Victory over death must be through Christ alone. Vs. 51, 55-57. We cannot tell just how our bodies will be changed at the resurrection. It is a great mystery, but so is the whole fact of our existence. Christianity has its mysteries which no one can understand. They differ, however, from Masonic "mysteries," in the same way that the mock miracles of the lodge-room differ from the real ones related in the Bible. Masonry, like Christianity, promises men the victory over death. This can be proved (1) by the remark so frequently made by Masons, that the lodge is as good as the church; (2) by its prayers over deceased members, that however profane or godless their lives are always assured to be safe in the Grand Lodge above; (3) by its calling initiation "the new birth"; (4) by the statements of such writers as Mackey, who tells us that "a Mason who lives in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin." Sin is all that makes death dreadful. If we were sinless beings we should be no more afraid to die than we are to go to sleep. But this glorious victory over death and sin is not the gift of any secret order, or even of any church. It is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

LIGHT FROM THE WORD.

What does the Bible call those things in religion which we cannot comprehend? 1 Tim. 3: 16. To what do Masonic mysteries belong? 2 Thess. 2: 7: How is the mystery of iniquity described? V. 9. Does this show why good men are sometimes deceived by it?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE LABOR BUREAU.

The passage by the House of Representatives by the pronounced vote of 182 to 19 of a bill to establish a Bureau of Labor Statistics is a just and wise concession to the labor interests. For, while labor ought to be perfectly free, and all organizations that undertake to control the laborer in selling either his works or its products in the market where he can sell them the best, should be sternly repressed; yet the highest interests both of capital and labor will be promoted by a careful study of the condition, wants and possibilities of the laboring class. I do not believe there is or can be too much labor. It only needs to be diversified, and each class of laborers will afford a market for others. It is not probable that in business relations men will ever learn to act on any other principle than enlightened self-interest. But interests ought to harmonize, and I believe they will, when men cease to "look not only on their own things but also on the things of others."

CHARTERS.

The passage by the House of Representatives of a bill to amend section 545 of the Revised Statutes of the District, being an act in reference to corporations, looks like a plan to provide for the charter of all sorts of lodges and secret orders that have been, or may hereafter be organized, and to authorize them to hold property so that they may have a yearly income of $25,000. It is time that secret lodges are not named, but the clause "benevolent, charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific, religious, or missionary purposes, including societies for mutual improvement or for the promotion of the arts," may apply to Masonic or Odd-fellow lodges, for they claim to have these objects. Doubtless it is appropriate that there should be a general law authorizing societies of a general character, but all such institutions ought to be required to report all their laws, rules, obligations, penalties and ceremonies of initiation, to the court of records; and also to keep a record of all their doings which should be open to public inspection. This was the wise provision of the Rhode Island legislature, adopted in 1832, which effectually broke up the lodges in that State till the Constitution was changed in 1842.

During the debate on this measure Mr. Belford of Colorado, introduced an amendment to provide that the Smithsonian Institute and the Botanical Gardens be opened on the Sabbath. He called attention to the growing disregard of that day as an evidence of advancing civilization and hoped that all restraints would soon be removed. Should Mr. Belford and Mr. Ingersoll ever get outside of the influences of the Sabbath and the Bible they will be very glad to get back.

The charges preferred against that distinguished Freemason (of the thirty-third degree), Judge Advocate Swaim, have been withdrawn by Mr. Bateman the banker, and the business matter between them has been settled. Still they are to be investigated and Secretary Lincoln has issued an order to that effect. I quite agree with the National Republican that "it is to be hoped that the inquiry will be thorough. If Mr. Bateman's charges are found to be true Gen. Swaim is not a fit man to hold the position of Judge Advocate General of the army. If they are found to be groundless, the world should know it—officially."

To the many beautiful statues that adorn this city there is to be added one of Chief Justice J. Marshall which is to be placed at the foot of the steps on the west side of the Capitol. Congress has appropriated $20,000 and it is to be supplemented by private donations. It is expected to be unveiled about the middle of May, and Wm. H. Rawle of Philadelphia is to deliver the oration. The foundations of the statue are being laid. The following in reference to the Washington monument will be of interest:

"The Washington monument reached the height of 410 feet yesterday afternoon. The total height of the shaft will be 555 feet, which will make it the highest monument in the world. This leaves 145 feet yet to be added, 55 feet of which will be a marble roof of pyramidal shape. There are twelve men at work on the dizzy-heighted top, and it is estimated that the monument will be completed by the first of next November. At that time it is proposed to hold a grand celebration in this city. The affair will doubtless be managed by the Monument society. After the shaft is completed much interior work will have to be done. A large number of memorial stones, appropriately inscribed, will be placed in position. These stones were presented by foreign countries, individuals, and the several States. Only a few of the States and Territories have failed to present marble memorials. Among the number is Texas. An appropriation has been made by the Texas legislature to purchase a handsome tablet of native stone."—Republican.

I will add, while the States have sent some beautiful stones, the lodges have sent more, and that this grandest of our national monuments is to be very largely used to advertise Freemasonry and Odd-felship.

The investigation of the Star-route frauds still continues, and the developments of crime are more and more startling. The Second Assistant Postmaster Lyman testifies to additions made to previous contracts for "expediting" to the amount of $2,172,832.-87. In all these cases he said there was fraud. How shocking was the perversion of justice that permitted a trial to go on for six months, and none of these facts were developed! Surely there is, there must be, here in Washington a hidden, malign influence that infects the department of justice, and makes the trial by jury a burlesque on the administration of law. How much Freemasonry and the other secret orders have to do with this perversion of justice, it would be difficult always to say; but there is great reason to think that they have much to do with it. A gentleman in this city, of most exemplary Christian character, and excellent business methods, but who is outspoken in his abhorrence of the lodge, was for seven years denied a settlement of his accounts, cheated out of a considerable sum that was due him, and finally sued for twenty thousand dollars, which suit was afterwards compromised for one dollar. True, this gentleman had given great provocation, for he had prevented the stealing of some two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and such things are rarely forgiven. The particulars of this affair await a further statement.

REFORM NEWS.

THE MICHIGAN CONVENTION.

At the appointed time, according to announcement, convention was called to order by president W. H. Ross. But few were present. This meeting was in Jackson in F. M. church. One of the first duties of the convention was to fix upon a number which should constitute a quorum to transact business. The number was fixed at seven shareholders in the Michigan Christian Association. Convention then proceeded to the election of officers for ensuing year. Ballot resulted as follows: W. H. Ross, president; C. L. Preston, secretary; George Swanson, Jr., treasurer board of trustees; president, secretary and treasurer ex-officio, and H. F. Buffham, M. Veenboer, C. C. Foote, L. I. Wicker, S. P. Poole and H. A. Day. Various and important amendments to the constitution were made, and other important business transacted which will tell powerfully in future work in this State.

From this place delegates repaired to Battle Creek, where the unincorporated association was in session. Time and place of next meeting of incorporated association was left with its three principal officers. The meeting at Battle Creek began with discouragement written on the faces of every one. Bro. Stoddard failed to come as expected on the first evening, being detained in Chicago on important business. When the delegates came from Jackson, Bro. Starry was holding the audience, though there were but few out. On Thursday morning a respectable number gathered for devotional exercises, which were followed by a business session. Election of officers, etc., occupied the forenoon. C. C. Foote was elected president, H. A. Day recording secretary, W. H. Ross corresponding secretary, George Swanson, Jr. treasurer. By motion a political meeting was made the order of the day for afternoon at three o'clock. H. A. Day was appointed a committee to solicit the attendance of Adventist brethren Friday, at 10: 30 o'clock A. M., to enter into an examination of the position of the American party on the question of Sabbath legislation.

The following committees were appointed: on programme, H. A. Day, George Swanson, W. M. Beden; on finance, S. P. Poole, R. H. Glaspie, George Harris; on nominations, George Swanson, S. P. Poole, E. B. Webster.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer was offered by W. H. Ross, and after slight preliminary action, convention adjourned to make room for order of day at three o'clock. Meeting then proceeded to organize for a political convention, which resulted in the election of officers of former meeting as officers of political convention. Meeting immediately proceeded with the election of delegates to National Convention at Chicago in June. Result of election as follows: Rev. C. C. Foote, 1st Dist.; E. Z. Derbyshire, 2nd Dist.; Rev. H. A. Day, 3rd Dist.; Timothy Hudson, 4th Dist.; M. Veenboer, 5th Dist.; Rev. W. H. Ross, 6th Dist.; W. M. Beden, 7th Dist.; Marcus Wilcox, 8th Dist.; Rev. J. L. Bush, 9th Dist.; E. Jarvis, 10th Dist.; J. B. Crall, 11th Dist.; S. P. Poole and George Swanson, Jr., at large. By vote of convention the proposed additional plank to platform of American party relating to universal suffrage was endorsed by the body. A State central political committee was then appointed consisting of W. H. Ross, Williamston; H. A. Day, Parma; O. H. Johnson, Hickory Corners; James Brandt, Forest Grove; H. F. Buffham, Batavia; J. L. Stratton, Kalamazoo; J. Walters, Hopkins, Allegan Co. The committee were authorized to use their judgment as to whether they call a convention or procecd to nominate State officers themselves. A resolution was then offered by H. A. Day to the effect that in calls for State and national meetings our opposition to secret societies should be made prominent. Political convention adjourned and Michigan Christian Association came to order. The matter of consolidation of the two associations in Michigan was taken up. The matter was disposed of by old association agreeing to adjourn to meet at its next meeting at the call of the officers of incorporated association. Adjourned.

Friday morning meeting was opened with devotional exercises, Bro. Foote in the chair. Order of the day—Examination of our party relation to the Sabbath—taken up, and after considerable good natured talk between some of our Adventist brethren and American party representatives, a resolution was offered by Bro. Ross to express the sense of the meeting. "Resolved, That this association express its conviction that in the matter of Sabbath legislation those who observe the seventh day are entitled to the same protection we ask for ourselves." Carried by unanimous vote. Adjourned to two P. M. Friday afternoon meeting called to order by H. A. Day in absence of Bro. Foote. Bro. W. H. Ross elected president pro tem. Prayer offered by Rev. J. H. Canfield: singing, "Hold the Fort." Stirring remarks by Bro. J. P. Stoddard. On motion the convention heartily endorsed the plan for political organization and work suggested by Washington convention. Resolution offered by Bro. Stoddard on the relation of proposed Washington American, as organ of political wing of this reform movement, and Christian Cynosure, and in favor of Cynosure. Adopted by convention.

Order of day arrived, and convention listened for an hour to a stirring speech by Bro. Stoddard on the power of Freemasonry in church, judiciary and legislatures.

On Thursday Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College gave an address on Freemasonry, to which the audience listened with unabated interest throughout. On Friday evening Bro. Starry had a good audience, and worked the third degree of Freemasonry with telling effect. The best of order was preserved, and all workers and payers and praying ones in this reform have reason to be encouraged. The tenth annual meeting of the Michigan Christian Association was a decided success. Let us thank God and take courage.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

DALE, N. Y., April 24, 1884.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We are glad to report progress in northwestern New York. It was my privilege to address a small but intelligent audience (mostly middle-aged men) in the Free Baptist church a little north of Warsaw on Monday evening last. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Marsdin, made a few well chosen remarks in which he expressed a desire to know more of the character and workings of secret societies. Good attention was retained during the entire evening. After we had concluded, the audience kindly tendered me a vote of thanks.

On Tuesday morning I went on to Perry and arranged to have a lecture soon. Proceeding to Castile, I found friends as harmless as the dove, but I fear not quite as bold as the lion. I do not mean by this that they were ashamed of the grounds they had taken. The brethren, on the whole, are doing well. That they have a hard field for reform I found by circulating bills for the lecture the following day. As I came along the street I noticed quite a number of men gathered on the street corner, who commenced swinging their arms and pointing as though there was a house afire. One said, "There comes the Anti-mason exposer;" another, "That's him!" and as I passed quietly by the store where they were standing, a man rushed into the house exclaiming, "Let's get the rags!" Failing to scare me, they at once set up a hoot, like so many devils, saying "What time does your show begin"? etc., etc. I made no reply but went on my way rejoicing that I was "counted worthy," etc. The father (a Mason) of the gentleman who printed the bills asked me "How do you account for the fact that after each Anti-masonic lecture in Castile the Masons have twice as many join them as in all the rest of the year?" He doubtless thought this was a poser. I replied, "I do not have to account for this fact, if it be a fact; but will let you Masons account for it by agreeing to come and lecture just as often as you will pay for the hall and advertise the lecture, charging you nothing for the time or address. If I am driving men into your lodge the more lectures the better, for you." A long pause followed.

At eight o'clock last Wednesday evening about one hundred persons had assembled in Bush's Hall (a large number of Masons being present), to see the show, in spite of the Masons trying to raise a disturbance and keep people away.

After a word of prayer and reading of the Scriptures, I began the lecture, stating that I should discuss the question of the evening from a Christian standpoint. The Masons looked as if they had come to the wrong show, and had better keep quiet. One red-faced fellow (who during the day told me that he belonged to the order of the Sons of United Ancients, or some such society), occasionally cried out "That's a lie!" On the whole the meeting was a success. I go to-day to arrange for our first county meeting at Batavia, advertised last week.

THE CHURCHES.

—The annual election of the Board of Directors of the Chicago Theological Seminary was held last week. At 5:30 o'clock Wednesday evening the alumni supper was served in the parlors of the First Congregational Church and at 7:45 o'clock in the evening the twenty-sixth annual commencement took place in the audience room of the same church, there being ten graduates.

—Among the announcements for last Sabbath in Chicago was that of Prof. Moorhead, D.D., of Xenia Theological Seminary to preach in the First Congregational church, and of Rev. Neil McDiarmid, pastor of the Gaelic church at Elmira, Stark Co., Ill., to preach in Gaelic and address the audience in English in the lecture room of the First M. E. church.

—Rev. Charles W. Shelton, agent of Yankton college, has been chosen secretary of the American Missionary Association, to take the place of Rev. James Powell at Chicago.

—Among the converts in Mr. Moody's meetings at the mission at West Kensington, is said to be the son of Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, of India. Some six hundred persons have already professed conversion.

—It was stated at a meeting of the London City Mission, recently, that fifteen missionaries are now working among 5,700 of the public houses of London, but at least twenty more are wanted to cover the 11,340 contained in the metropolis.

—Among the buildings destroyed in the recent great fire in Paternoster Row, London, was the house of the Religious Tract Society, a costly structure valued at $400,000.

—The Rev. A. R. Parker, pastor of the Centennial Baptist church, has prepared a scholarly and elaborate review of the life of Cardinal Newman and the steps in his passage from the evangelical party of the English Church to Rome. It will be printed in the Standard, the Baptist denominational paper of this city.

—The people of Clyde, Ohio, are greatly excited over a remarkable faith cure. The wife of Rev. W. H. Painter has been an invalid for years, and Saturday, believing she would be cured by faith prayed earnestly, and was, it is stated, almost instantly cured.

—The Rev. T. G. Harper has resigned from the denomination in the Methodist Episcopal Zion Conference at Newburg, N. Y. He said he had been brought here from British Guinea and expected to find a free country, but discovered that it was free in theory only, ostracism of the colored race being general. He intends to join the Protestant Episcopal church and return to his native land.

—Dr. A. B. Earle, the well known Baptist evangelist, has during his more than fifty years of service preached about 21,000 times.

—The plan for an inter-ecclesiastical congress, started by the Berkshire county, Mass., pastors, makes progress. Two clergymen and a layman from each of the denominations concerned in the call—Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Reformed—are to be invited to act with the original signers in developing the plan further.—Independent.

—The Presbyterian Hospital in Philadelphia which some time ago refused a check for $2,500, its share of the fund raised by the charity ball in that city, has received a check for $3,000 from a resident of Bucks county. The writer explains that $2,500 is in lieu of the money which the hospital did not receive, and the remaining $500 is a premium for adhering to principle. He requests that the entire amount be added to the principal of the permanent fund of the hospital, to the end that principal and principle may go together.

—The First New York Reformed Presbyterian congregation, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, pastor, have sold their church building on West Twenty-eighth street and have secured for the present the use of Trenor Hall, on Broadway near Thirty-second street, for their services. They began to occupy this hall on the first Sabbath of March.

—The closing exercises of the Allegheny Seminary (Reformed Presbyterian) were held on March 18th, 19th and 20th. Eighteen sermons were delivered by the students and the usual examinations were held. Three students had finished their theological course, and seven were certified to their Presbyteries for licensure. The students received much praise from the board for their diligence and marked improvement. Dr. Sloane of the faculty is gaining strength, and there is good reason to hope for his restoration to health, so that his labors may be resumed at the next session of the Seminary.

—The Bombay, India, Methodist Watchman, referring to the death of the leader of the Brahmo Somaj, says of his work: "Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen is dead. He left this world January 8, 1884. That a great man has fallen, none can doubt. But he is certainly one of the most mysterious anomalies ever developed in any nation under the sun. He threw off repulsive heathenism and neither fell into atheism nor Universalism. He was a deist, though his desire was unlike that of any other deistic leader the world ever saw. We have never heard his moral character impeached. Many say he was a good man. It is sad so great and good a man should miss accepting and teaching him whom receiving not he received not God who sent him. Many hoped the movement headed by this strange man would eventually turn Christian. It has done good in being an Indian revolt against the repulsiveness of heathenism, but the extravagances to which it goeth fast will work its oblivion with hosts of errors that have lifted themselves against the truth of Jesus"

—A unique celebration of a hundred years of Methodism was recently held at Pearsalls, L. I. After the morning service, the pastor, the Rev. George Filmer, put a pine board on the altar-rail; on that, a saucepan; in that pan a package of law papers. Touching a match to them, he said: "Here are the documents which have so long weighted down our church; here are the mortgage and the notes on which we have been paying interest. Rejoice with me at their funeral pyre."

—Bishop Stevens recently administered the rite of confirmation to thirty-five persons at the chapel of the Italian P. E. Mission in Philadelphia. Rev. Mr. Zara, the missionary, is himself a native of Italy. With two assistants he conducts a night school through the week for teaching children and adults the English language. The mission is carried on under five trustees, appointed by Mr. Stevens. It is not connected with any missionary board, but is supported entirely by contributions.

—There are four ecclesiastical organizations in South Carolina which are known under the general name of Methodist church. The Protestant Methodists have only one or two congregations; the A. M. E. church has a colored ministry and membership; the M. E. church South is composed almost entirely of white communicants, and the M. E. (or Northern Methodist) church is composed in that State very largely of colored people. There are only four white men in the ministry of this last-named church in South Carolina.

—At a late Chicago Congregational ministers' meeting a committee consisting of the Rev. Messrs. C. C. Cragin, J. C. Armstrong and A. Monroe, was appointed to consult with ministers of other denominations with a view to calling Mr. Murphy the temperance apostle to Chicago to labor on the West Side.

OBITUARY.

MRS. MARY B. BANCROFT, wife of Elder Isaac Bancroft, was born in the State of Vermont, January 10th, 1822, and died in Monroe, Green county, Wis., April 18th, 1884, aged sixty-two years, three months and eight days.

She was converted to Christ when twelve years of age, and joined the Congregational church soon after, of which she was a devoted member until one year ago, when a society of the United Brethren church was organized in Monroe. She gave her name as one of that class that she might have Christian association and religious work.

For a good many years she has been a great sufferer, and especially the past year she has been called upon to pass through the most intense bodily pain, being confined to her room nearly the entire winter; yet through it all her faith did not falter, and she ever manifested a spirit of perfect resignation to the will of God. She was always actively engaged in Sabbath school work and many souls have thus been brought to Christ through her instrumentality.

Bro. Bancroft is an earnest and effective worker in the Anti-masonic reform, and is now the State agent of the Wisconsin State Christian Association. In this work he has ever enjoyed the sympathies and prayers of a loving wife. But she has said good bye and gone on before.

The funeral services were conducted at the residence of the deceased, where a large number of relatives and friends assembled to shed tears of sympathy around the casket of one they loved. We bore her mortal remains out to the beautiful cemetery, and amidst tears and flowers we laid her away to rest until the resurrection of the just. May great grace be upon the hearts of those that weep, and may they be united again in that land where parting shall never come.

D. R. G.

MRS. MARY KENDALL died at Blackbury Station, April 23d, in the 59th year of her age. She was strongly opposed to Masonry. Her husband, Loren D. Kendall, died about twelve years ago. He was a Mason. Mrs. Kendall would not allow the fraternity to have a Masonic funeral. She was a Christian, and was determined her husband should not have a heathen funeral.

J. P. B.

I am entirely in accord with the members of the Association that reform is the first need of the country, and that where a powerful oligarchy so foreign to our institutions as the Masonic lodge stands as an obstacle in the way, the first duty is to remove it. A party which in its wanton fondness for subtle, secret power has chartered the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia, thus establishing a religion, should be made to give place to some other party that will have more respect for the Constitution.—Gen. J. W. Phelps.

—The remnant of Indians in New York keep up a kind of ceremony which allies them to the wretched Zuni of New Mexico and the Freemasons. The rite is thus described: "The ceremony of burning the white dog was observed by the Indians on the Onondago Reservation yesterday. The Indians were all dressed in bright colors, and the chiefs and braves were adorned with feathers and ribbons. The dog to be burned is first hanged till it is dead by a delegation of sagamores appointed by the chiefs and warriors of the tribe in council. This is done in secret. The carcass of the animal is then daubed with spots of red paint, signifying a sacrifice of blood. Blue and red ribbons are tied about the animal, and the legs are fastened together with a long band of blue ribbon. The dog was laid beside a stove, while the squaws set up a howling, and the chiefs and braves uttered incantations in a low monotone. Chief Webster made the sacrificial address. He wore a silver crown, and asked that the sins of the Six Nations be forgiven. A short chant by the Indians followed, when the dog was placed in the stove, together with baskets of tobacco and herbs. the Indians then departed to their homes.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

FARM AND GARDEN.

A CONVENIENT PASTURE.

A pasture close to the farm buildings is a great convenience, and will save much valuable time during the busy season. The work horses may be turned into such a pasture in the evening after they have eaten their ration of hay and grain. It is an easy matter to bring the horses in again in the morning for their feed, before it is time for work. The cows may go to the back feeding ground for the day, and into the front pasture to pass the night. Boys who are tired from hard work through the day appreciate the convenience of a pasture close by the milking ground. The cows are more contented if kept near the barns at night. The gates and other entrances to this night pasture should be arranged to save all possible steps, both from the horse stable and the milking yard. Some may object to having horses and cows in the same field, but the writer has concluded, after several years' experience, that there is no danger with any ordinary animals. Young stock of all kinds will be safer if kept from the old in a separate pasture.

This convenient night pasture should be permanent, and furnish good feeding to the horses and cows throughout the whole season. It therefore needs to be kept in good heart. If naturally rich the droppings from the animals will keep up the fertility for several years. A man with a manure pick or mallet should go over the pasture each spring, and loosen and scatter the droppings. The mallet consists of a block of wood a foot long, square at one end and pointed at the other, into which a stout handle is fastened near the middle.

A top dressing of well rotted manure should be given every two or three years, or still better, a light dressing each winter. A hundred pounds of nitrate of soda per acre in early spring, aids greatly in giving a vigorous start to the young grass. If coarse weeds appear they should be rooted out before they become thoroughly established or ripen any seed. A flowing spring in a central location is of great value in any pasture, and especially here where cows may drink after being milked, and again early in the morning. It will also save much labor in watering the horses before and after work. If a flowing spring cannot be found the next best water supply is a well with a windmill pump.

A pasture properly manured, kept free from weeds, and thickly seeded with a large variety of grasses, may be as permanent and profitable as any field on the farm. The night pasture does not enter into the regular rotation adopted for the other fields.—DR. B. D. HALSTED, in American Agriculturist.

LIMA BEANS.

A Boston merchant who retired from business twenty years ago, "a miserable dyspeptic," and went to gardening on a small scale, regaining his health, and capturing more prizes at the Massachusetts horticultural shows than any other exhibitor, tells how he manages a crop of Lima beans. His mode of cultivation is practical and noteworthy, because all may practice it. He plants his beans in boxes in his cold grapery early in May, and transplants a box to a hill early in June, and thus gets the start of out-door planting by several weeks. The boxes are seven inches at the top and eight at the bottom, and they are bottomless. He arranges them in his grapery upon the floor and fills them with fresh earth and plants five beans in a box, with the eyes downward. When the time for transplanting comes he lifts them with a spade from the floor, and carefully places them upon a wheelbarrow, and then wheels them to the place where they are to be planted, the ground having been well prepared for their reception, the rows being four feet apart, and the hills in the rows three feet apart, little holes having been dug to receive the plants and earth from the boxes. They are removed one by one from the barrow with the spade, and set in the holes prepared for them, without in the least disturbing their contents. Then the boxes are removed, leaving the earth in the holes prepared for the reception of the contents of the boxes, and the earth drawn up around the beans in the hills with the garden hoe, and thus has he never failed of producing a prize crop. This is the bean of beans for table use and may be dried, and when wanted for use, by soaking them in water and cooking them, they are found almost as delicious in winter as summer. Mr. Smith wonders that farmers do not more generally enjoy this luxury at their own tables.—Sel.

CHICKENS IN THE GARDEN.

The broods hatched the last of April or early in May can be safely stationed in the garden, as soon as the vegetables are in sight—the hens being confined in coops close by, with conveniences for food and water. Insects are abundant in a well manured soil, and will be devoured by the chicks with great greediness. They also enjoy the tender weeds between the rows when they first appear. With cracked corn, insects and young weeds or grass, they have a perfect diet, and grow very rapidly after warm weather sets in. They are thus an important aid in destroying insect enemies that prey upon vegetables and the strawberry plants. Squashes, melons and cucumbers suffer most, and when their leaves appear a good location for the coop is near these. When chickens get large enough to trouble cultivated plants they must, of course, be removed from the vegetable garden.—Agriculturist.

DISTANCES APART TO PLANT TREES.—The Agriculturist says: "After a long course of observation and experience on this subject, we have fully made up our minds to the conclusion that in any part of the United States and the Canadas, the following distances are the best at which the trees should be required to stand:

Apples, 33 feet or two rods—40 feet is none too far.

Pears on their own stocks, 24 to 30 feet.

Pears on quince stock, 10 to 12 feet.

Quinces, peaches, nectarines, apricots, and plums, 16 to 20 feet.

English cherries, 20 to 24 feet.

Kentish, or common red, or pie cherry, 10 to 20 feet.

GETTING POTATOES EARLY.

Some years ago I conceived the idea of planting my potatoes with shoots to them. Probably the sprouts suggested the idea; at any rate I carried out the plan, and have been so well pleased with it that I have followed it for three years. A few weeks before planting time I select my seed potatoes, and set them in a warm place to sprout. By the time my ground is ready the shoots are about three inches in length. The potatoes are handled carefully, so as not to break the growth, and cut up in suitable sizes, as in the ordinary way. One strong shoot is left to each piece. The sets must be put into the ground carefully, of course, or the shoots will be broken off. As growth commences at once the green tops show in a few days. There is easily a saving of two weeks' time at the start. Those who have rather low ground which cannot be worked very early in the spring, will find this method will enable them to compete with their neighbors on higher ground with success. By July 10th I was using fine Beauty of Hebrons (an excellent early sort, by the way), planted April 25th. They were not then fully ripe, though the yellow tint in the leaves was getting quite perceptible. Generally the tops are dead at this date, but an unusually fine potato season kept them growing later this year.—Cultivator.

A Life Doubly Assured.

A RESIDENT of Bangor, Maine, writing to C. N. Crittenton, New York, for a supply of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar, mentions incidentally that three months ago a New England life-insurance company refused to grant him a policy on the ground that he was consumptive. "But," he adds, "thanks to the healing properties of that invaluable preparation my lungs are now perfectly sound, and I yesterday passed a medical examination without an objection, and insured my life for $5,000. OPINION OF EMINENT DR. H. R. WALTON, OF ANNAPOLIS, MD.

"Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic is a most excellent preparation. It is, par excellence, superior to cod-liver oil or anything I have ever used in wasted or impaired constitutions, and extremely beneficial as a preventive of malarial diseases." (Remember the name, COLDEN'S—take no other.) Of druggists generally.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin;' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

IN BRIEF.

From the edition of Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co's American Newspaper Directory now in press, it appears that the newspapers and periodicals of all kinds at present issued in the United States and Canada reach a grand total of 13,402. This is a net gain of precisely 1,600 during the last twelve months, and exhibits an increase of 5,618 over the total number published just ten years since. The increase in 1874 over the total for 1873 was 493. During the past year the dailies have increased from 1,138 to 1,254; the weeklies from 9,062 to 10,028; and the monthlies from 1,091 to 1,499. The greatest increase is in the Western States. Illinois, for instance, now shows 1,009 papers in place of last year's total of 904, while Missouri issues 604 instead of the 523 reported in 1883. Other leading Western States also exhibit a great percentage of increase. The total number of papers in New York State is 1,523 against 1,399 in 1883. Canada has sharcd in the general increase.

The effect of the anti-Chinese law on the prosperity of California has not been what its advocates anticipated. According to information gathered from the newspapers and from correspondents "the only people who seem to have been benefited by the passage of the anti-Chinese law are the Chinese who remain. They demand higher wages, fewer hours of work, and more consideration in most particulars. In the mean time the small fruit raisers, owing to the decrease of the numher of Chinese laborers, find great difficulty in having their herries properly picked, as it has been found almost impossible to get white men or hoys or girls having the patience, persistence and method requisite for this employment. And several infant manufactures in which the Chinese labored have been suspended, while no others employing white workmen have sprung up to take their place." —Statesman.

The census of Russia was taken in 1882 and the details have recently been made public. On the first of January, 1882, the inhahitants numhered 91,118,514, living in sixty-three provinces and eleven districts. During the year 1881 there were 4,043,863 hirths and 2,826,438 deaths registered, the growth of the population heing 1,217,425 inhahitants. At this rate the population would risc to one hundred millions in 1890, and in sixty to seventy years it would have doubled. At present the population of the empire is ninety-four millions. The growth of population is largest in the southern parts and smallest in the northern, where also the mortality is the greatest. It has been ascertained from the census reports that sixty per cent of the children die under the age of five years, which means 1,500,000 of deaths per annum among young children. It has also heen proved that more than half of the male population die before attaining the age for military service. Thus of the 7,742,000 boys born from 1856 to 1860 only 3,770,000 have reached the age of 21 years. Since then there has been little progress in the sanitary condition of the people, and while fifty-two per cent of young men have died hefore becoming of age for the last five years, the number of the weak and diseased unfit for military service was 93,-000 in 1877, and 110,000 in 1881, which indeed is anything hut progress. On an average a person is horn in the Russian empire every eight seconds.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sket h, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 429 pp.....75 cts.

Hand Book of Freemasonry, by E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, gives the correct or "Standard" work and ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees; paper cover.....35c

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy 6 cents.

A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevoleut Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, siguals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozeu, $2.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presideuts, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen. $2.00

This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemasou. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 25c. per doz. $3.25. Paper cover. 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, hy attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A hock of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 304 pages: cloth $1.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each: per dozen, $1.00.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each: per dozen, $1.25.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Balu. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozeu, $2.00.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that seeret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each: per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

—Senator Blair, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the bill to create a commision to inquire into and report upon material industry and intcllectual progress made by the colored people of the United States since 1865.

—The committee of the First Corps of the Army of the Potomac, including Generals John Newton, Hunt, Roseerans and Dudley and Assistant Secretary Coons, has waited on the President and invited him to accompany the society on its excursion to the battlefields of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and the Wilderness, the 15th of May.

—Four reports on the woman suffrage question have been prepared by the House judiciary committee. The adverse majority report declares that it would be either useless or pernicious to permit the entrance of political contention into the homes of the people—uscless if man and wife agreed, and pernicious if they differed. In the former event the volume of ballots alone would be increased, and in the latter the peace and contentment of home would be exchanged for a bedlam of political debate and become a scene of base and demoralizing intrigue. While a few intelligent women would defy all obstaeles in casting their ballots, the great mass of the refined women would shrink from rude eontact with the common crowd, leaving to the ignorant and vile the exclusive right to speak for the sex in public affairs. The minority report holds that woman has an equal right to the ballot with man.

COUNTRY.

—The death of the Hon. Isaac N. Arnold removes another of the group of men prominent in Chicago and Illinois. Mr. Arnold was among the most influential of the pioncer Chicagoans, and through nearly fifty years' residenee in the city he maintained his prominence and his influence.

—Mr. Andrew Paxton, the well-known and highly respected general agent of the Chicago Citizens' League, was arrested on the charges of perjury and false imprisonment, preferred by a man named James Ryan, who had been arrested on the affidavit of Mr. Paxton on the mistaken supposition that he was the owner of a saloon where liquor had been sold to minors.

—Dr. John Lord, having lectured 6,000 times, quit the rostrum on Friday.

—An English syndicate controlling $25,000,000 of capital, has offered $8,000,000 for the Trinity Church block in New York, desiring to erect thereon a mammoth structure for brokers' offices, but the proposition has been rejected.

—Mrs. Valeria G. Stone's will, bequeathing $250,000 for religious and charitable purposes, was admitted to probate at Boston Friday. The heirs have begun a contest.

—Frank James, the bandit, was acquitted by the United States jury at Huntsville, Ala., Friday, but was immediately arrested by the sheriff of Cooper county, Mo., for complicity in the Otterville train robbery.

—John H. Deane, senior member of the firm of Deane & Chamberlain, lawyers, made an assignment Wednesday, stated preferences amounting to $505,438.63. During his successful career Deane was generous to a fault. He contributed to charities and gave large sums of money to various institutions of learning. Chamberlain says that Deane gave away to charities a sum large enough to meet all his liabilities. He has given to the Baptist church and its institutions over $500,000 in money, while to the Rochester university, of which he was a graduate, he presented $100,000 and a library, and raised more on account of this gift. He is a member of the Calvary Baptist church, and gave largely to it, and was instrumental in its welfare. He also gave the land for the Second Baptist church, and was the means of putting up that church. He still retains a large amount of property, but there being no market for it sufficient money cannot be raised to pay off his indebtedness.

—Mayor Secor of Racine, Wis., intends to have a list of the habitual drunkards of the city posted up in every saloon. The licenses of dealers who sell liquor to these men will be at once revoked.

—A destructive fire in West Salem, O., destroyed nearly the entire business portion of the place. The loss is estimated at $100,000, partially insured. Companies not obtainable. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

—The Iowa State Brewers' association has agreed to make an assessment of $2 for every 100 barrels of beer sold last year, this fund to defray the expense of testing the validity of the prohibitory resolutions recently adopted. Resolutions were passed declaring a judicious license system to be the only practical solution of the liquor question.

—The non-union stove-molders at Quiney, Ill., have been guarded all week to and from work, but it was found that marching in a body tended to create excitement. Express wagons were secured to carry them. Three women pelted them with over-ripe eggs, and when they were getting into the wagons the crowd hooted and jeered them, throwing stones, mud, etc. Mayor Deaderick was present, and said afterward to the foundry men that he thought they had better close their shops, as the attempt to run them was inciting a riot. This proposition by the chief officer of the city has created great amazement among the manufacturers. It is believed that unless matters are amicably settled soon there will be bloodshed.

—Dispatches from Dayton, Ohio, April 27, deseribe a fatal wind storm which passed near that city: "Shortly before five o'clock this afternoon the most destructive cyclone ever known in this part of the country passed over the southern part of Montgomery and Greene counties devastating everything in its course. It appears to have originated near Woodbine, a small town ten miles south of here. Eye witnesses describe it as appalling in its fury. An authentic statement is that the cyclone was formed by the union of two light storm clouds from south and northwest, which immediately assumed the form of a waterspout, rising and descending like waves of the sea, and destroying everything in its way. A Jamestown, Greene county, special says the cyelone struek Jamestown about five o'clock. Two thirds of the town was completely ruined. Six persons were killed; several were badly wounded. Hundreds of people were turned out of their homes.

FOREIGN.

—The Paris Figaro's correspondent at Cairo sends the following details of the recent Shendy massaere: "Three hundred Egyptian troops and 600 non-combatants preferring to make the hazardous attempt to march to Berber to starving at Shendy, set out from the latter place the 15th inst. Part of the number went slowly by steamer down the river while the others marched along the river bank. When within two hours' march from Shendy they were attacked by the Arabs, and after a short fight all the troops excepting a few were massacred. The Arabs afterward captured Shendy. The Egyptian troops there had deserted their arms and uniforms in the hope of being spared. Few, however, escaped the general massacre. Two thousand men, women and children were slaughtered. Many of them were refugees from Khartoum.

—A movement is on foot in London to enlist 200 volunteers to rescue General Gordon. The idea originated in high social circles. The volunteers are expeeted to contribute their quota of expenses. The enterprise will be carried out even if the War Office refuses its sanction.

—At 9: 30 o'clock last Tuesday morning an earthquake shock of considerable force was felt in the eastern counties of England. Localities in Essex and Suffolk were the seenes of the greatest disturbance. At Ipswich the shock was so severe that the walls of houses were perceptibly shaken, plates were rattled and bells rung. The people have been thrown into such a state of consternation that business is for the time suspended. The shock was still more severe in other places.

—A French dispatch says that De Brazza the Freneh explorer has signed a treaty with the most powerful sovereign in Western Africa, by which all the right bank of the Congo river from Brazzaville to the equator passes under the protection of France. The ceded rights, however, do not amount to much, seeing that the Portuguese control the mouth of the river.

—The largest assemblage of women seen in London for many years was in St. James Hall last week. The occasion was the mass meeting intended to bring a pressure to bear on Parliament in favor of Mr. Woodalls to insert a woman suffrage clause in the pending franchise bill. The hall was crowded in every part with a highly intelligent and respectable audience, composed chiefly of women, and including delegations from every city and large town in England. The lady speakers all took bold ground in favor of resistance to the taxation of women until the right of franchise be given them, and reports from London and other cities showed that several societies had already been organized against "taxation without representation."

The anniversary exercises of the Morgan Park Theological Seminary are to be held this week and will include addresses, society meetings, banquets, receptions, etc., covering five days and occupying two Chicago hotels and several churches in this city and Morgan Park. This school of the prophets certainly differs from that with which good old Elijah was well acquainted.

Upon the trial calendar of the Chicago criminal court are the cases of twenty-five lottery and policy-shop dealers. The Inter Ocean says that the county attorney, L. L. Mills, intends to conduct the prosecution himself; and adds with humble deference for the official, that if he persists, the cases will be continued; and if continued, they can be dismissed if the defendants ask it, as this is now the third term of court since the indictment of these lottery dealers. Does the Inter Ocean mean to advertise Mr. Mills's Freemasonry?

The Inter State Conference of colored men in Pittsburg last week was a meeting of some importance as it represented seven out of the fifty million of our people. It is important also as a means for understanding the influences which act with most energy upon the colored people, and is therefore worth the study of educators and politicians. First was the undoubted purpose to oppose and slight Frederick Douglass, who, though in his old age, easily maintains his position as the foremost among his race in America. The Republicans of Washington had just admonished him that they could be revenged for his willingness to speak against the lodge, by electing a saloon-keeper over his head as delegate to Chicago. The colored convention joined with this perhaps a castigation for his late marriage. At least when both temporary and permanent chairmen were suggested, Mr. Douglass was left out with much significance and when he was requested to speak objections were made. He replied with some warmth of indignation to the manifest dishonor that was being put upon him, which aroused a storm of applause.

Another fact to be marked was the moving of a resolution "That the Republican and Democratic managers have not, as a rule, respected the rights and proper feelings of colored citizens in the management of their parties and in the administrations to which they have been selected and elected, and that it is both politic and manly for the colored voter to await events, and not at the present time commit himself with any political party." What! After the Republican managers have with such energy and uniformity dragged the Ku Klux and his victim to the front and bared the bleeding back of the black man before every voter at every election period—is this the reward of all their sympathy, and has their battle for the colored voter gained only this barren victory? "I am tired of being held up as a red flag for a political bull," vehemently exclaimed Rev. C. S. Smith, the colored speaker who gained loudest applause at the late Republican meetings in Chicago and Peoria. The motion had too much dynamite in it to be safely put into the heat of the discussion which was arising and was withdrawn; but not until there was evidence enough for ordinary Republican voters to see that their periodical subterfuge of getting his rights for the black man has come to be appreciated at its proper value by the representatives of that race.

Two gentlemen representing the great English temperance organization, the United Kingdom Alliance, have just visited Chicago and made the acquaintance of our workers in the same reform, especially the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Citizen's League. The Alliance aims to "procure the total and immediate legislative suppression of the traffic in all intoxicating liquors as a beverage." It is laboring to secure "local option," as a step towards the great end. Gladstone is pledged to this measure and will support with his cabinet a bill for that purpose as soon as more urgent matters are out of the way. Sir Wilfred Lawson, the radical, is president of the Alliance and watches for its interest in the House of Commons, before which body fourteen temperance measures are already pending. The drink statistics of Great Britain are appalling. They are in comparison with other items of national expense thus given in pounds sterling: For bread, 70,000,000; rent of houses, 70,000,000; rent of farms, 60,000,000; woolen goods, 46,000,000; cotton goods, 14,000,000; butter and cheese, 35,000,000; milk, 30,000,000; sugar, 25,000,000; coal for household purposes, 15,000,000; for education, 11,000,000; for Christian missions, $1,050,000; FOR INTOXICATING LIQUORS £136,000,000—and besides this enormous bill £100,000,000 more is lost annually from taxes, labor, accidents, disease, etc., through the drink.

General Adam Badeau, the favorite and biographer of General Grant, and Consul General at Havana has just resigned that position, claiming that the State Department has treated him with "injustice and indignity." He furthermore publishes through the press a number of charges against the Department, which may prove to be of some moment, but the immediate use of which will be for political capital pending the nominations at Chicago, June 3d. Our government, he claims, has grossly neglected the interests of American citizens and sailors allowing them to be insulted and injured and cringing to Spain when reparation was demanded. It has also made a commercial treaty with reference to the Senate, which is injurious to this country and unjust to its treasury. These may be wrongs that should be righted, but they are no justification for a new demand for war-like equipment by sea or land, nor for such a foreign policy that should make preparations for aggressive war needful. We believe that the greatest dignity and honor of this nation in our foreign relations are not necessarily maintained by machinery or hirelings for killing men.

Since our government has obtained the promise from Italy that the American college, so called, belonging to the Romish Propaganda should be exempt from the tax sale ordered by the Supreme Court, other governments have been besought to interfere in the same manner. The result would be that the Pope would save this possessions if all were equally successful. A Washington correspondent gives a fact or two which show into what folly President Arthur and Secretary Frelinghuysen have been cajoled by the Jesuits of New York: "The society De Propaganda Fide is an organization at Rome, and having for its object the propagation of the Roman Catholic system of religion throughout the world. It was started by Gregory XIII. in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and was fully organized by Gregory XV. in 1622. Since then it has been gradually accumulating funds by large and small gifts, amounting now, it is said, to over $3,500,000. In this college, pupils are gathered at an early age from all countries and educated for the works of the Romish church, in their own lands. In the American college, as it is called, there are said to be now over fifty lads and young men from this country." "With regard to the property that the Italian government has "converted," there is no question, I believe, that it belonged fully and legally to the propaganda. There was no other owner whatever, and the claim that it, or any part of it, belonged to the United States, or to citizens thereof, would never have been admitted or heard of had not such a crisis as the present arisen. That money has been contributed by Americans to the purposes of the propaganda no more makes the property American property than the gift of Smithson makes the Smithsonian Institute British property." "The society of the Propaganda does not open its books for general inspection. But if the Italian government is to be called to an account for American funds invested in that society, it may reasonably ask for a showing of the funds of this Roman society invested in America."

CHURCH RESPONSIBILITY.

BY PRES. C. J. KEPHART.

The church of Christ is America's chief vitalizing, moralizing force. While it has not yet exhibited mankind as a race purged from the power and guilt of sin, it is quite true that to it must be referred every great, permanent, retormatory movement that has blessed mankind. To the Christian church, as the underlying power, must be attributed the settlement of the great questions involved in the American Revolution. It was the Christian church which awakened the sentiments that led to the abolition of American slavery. It is the Christian church that must lead in the uncompromising warfare against the demon alcohol. If these statements be not true, will some one please refer us to the system of truths which has given rise to these great successive reformations. No one will deny, that a reformation in society must be preceded by a reformation in sentiment. And that a reformation in sentiment must have its basis in conviction born of truth.

These, along with other considerations, should produce a profound conviction of the responsibility of those who compose this great reformatory body.

Although it is not so by legal enactment, it is so in fact that Christianity is the religion of America. Not simply because it is more prevalent here than any other religion, but because it exercises in this country a stronger influence than any other institution. Many opponents of Christianity deny this, but it is nevertheless true. No institution can maintain an existence in this nation for any considerable time, without the direct or indirect support of the Christian church. Slavery cursed America as long as it did, because it made the Christian church its refuge. Many branches of the church tolerated it and plead for it. Had it not been for this, its cursed and cursing life would have ended long before it did.

Intemperance hangs as a deadly parasite upon the American body politic, because American churches have given it a refuge. How long is it since many American ministers thought it necessary to stimulate the brain in order to an effective sermon. This "worm of the still" yet lives because thus nourished, and will live until a large element of the American Christian churches in the van of temperance workers leads on to victory. But how shall this be accomplished? Surely not by approving of the traffic. Not by ministry and laity uniting with the whisky venders in their unholy business. What element in the Christian church of America awakened the sentiment that led to the abolition of slavery? Surely not that element which went into the South, and, in order to establish itself there, tolerated slave-holding by its membership. Indeed it is very difficult for a large part of that element of the church to say to-day that the abolition of slavery was right.

What element of the church will lead on to success in the strife with intemperance? Surely not that part which can see no wrong in drinking, which yet tolerates the social glass. Nay, verily; but it will be those, fanatics they may be called, who say "Touch not, taste not, handle not;" who say that even the sacramental wine must be free from that which intoxicates. It will be that element which has either kept entirely free from its use, or separated itself from it; not those who tolerate the evil.

Sin, like truth, is one. It manifests itself in different forms, but when brought to the last analysis it is one. In dealing with it we must remember this fact.

If the Christian church in order to arouse a sentiment sufficient to purge the nation from human slavery and whisky, must separate itself from these evils, must it not do the same respecting other forms of evil? Can the church work successfully for the destruction of any evil while furnishing the strongest support to that evil?

There exists in our nation the terrible curse of organized secrecy—a curse, because it seeks to shield and support the few without regard to the many; terrible, because of the completeness of the machinery to accomplish the end. Can it be expected that those branches of the church which tolerate, and by tolerating encourage and support these institutions, will do much toward securing their overthrow? Just as slave-holding church members would not oppose slavery, and as whisky-drinking and whisky-selling church members will not aid the temperance cause, so secret society church members will not aid in the overthrow of this form of evil. Either they do not see the evil and hence will not oppose it, or they do not care to see it, and hence will not oppose it.

If this form of iniquity, for surely it is an iniquity, is overthrown by the efforts of the church, it will be by the efforts of those who stoutly and with knowledge protest against its countenance and toleration by admission to church fellowship.

Surely the need to-day as always, is SEPARATION, SEPARATION.

LENT.

This great fast, so conspicuous among the many observances of the Roman church—and among those of some Protestants, as well—has once more come and gone. Its claims of peculiar sanctity, the increasing respect for it among even Protestants, and that mysterious glamour with which it always seems invested, all demand the most searching investigation into its every feature, and that its merit, or demerit be fully and thoroughly understood.

It is conceded by all concerned that there is no precept, or command, in the Old Testament or the New, requiring, or even approving any such observance. In no history, sacred or profane, have we any example of its observance, either by those holy men "to whom were committed the oracles of God," by the ancient church, under the Old Testamant dispensation, or by the "apostolic church," of the New. Like every form of "festival," therefore, its appearance in the Christian church is that of an interloper and an enemy.

Very early in the Christian era, the resurrection of Christ was annually commemorated, but for centuries that commemoration was preceded by no Lent. Cassianus, the monk of Marseilles, writing in the fifth century, says, "The observance of the forty days had no existence, so long as the perfection of that primitive church remained inviolate." This testimony is a most expressive intimation that the introduction of "the forty days" was the bitter fruit of a violation of the purity and integrity of "that primitive church."

"Whence then," we ask, with another, "came this observance?" We answer: The forty days abstinence of Lent originated with the ancient pagans, formed a part of their worship, and is therefore a purely idolatrous observance. "Such a fast of forty days" in the spring of the year, "is now observed by the Yezidis, or devil-worshipers of Koordistan, who have inherited it from their early masters, the Babylonians." (Layard's Nineveh and Babylon, p. 73.)

So, too, the pagan Mexicans, says Humbolt (Mexican Researches, vol. I., p. 404), "Three days before the vernal equinox, began a solemn fast of forty days in honor of the sun." Wilkinson tells us in his Egyptian Antiquities, vol. I., p. 278, that such a fast of forty days was observed in Egypt. (Two Babylons, p. 169.) Rome, too, whose paganism, both ancient and modern, was borrowed and perpetuated from the same ancient Babylonian model as that of Egypt, did not allow herself to overlook so conspicuous a feature as this, in that paganism, for under the pagan regime, she too had her Lent. Probably this was the time which includes the "forty nights," during which "the wailing for Proserpine continued." It appears from the testimony of Arnobius, as represented by Hislop in "Two Babylons," p. 170, that the Romans observed a "saered" fast called "Castus," which the Christians in his time, believed was primarily in imitation of the long fast of Ceres, when, for many days she refused to eat, on account of "excess of sorrow," for the loss of her daughter Proserpine, who had been stolen and carried away by Pluto, the god of hell.

Whatever relation "the forty nights wailing for Proserpine," the long fast of Ceres," and the "saered fast" of "Castus" may or may not have sustained to each other, they show that like the Egyptians, from whom they learned their paganism—and like the whole pagan world as well—the ancient Romans periodically observed a "sacred fast."

These facts, as we shall see, answer the question as to the origin of this great observance. They reveal, as the source from whence it has emanated, a fountain whose filthiness and pollutions, no words but those "which the Holy Ghost speaketh," can possibly describe,—a fountain whose waters, however clear and pellucid they may appear, are always charged to the full with the rankest, deadliest poison!

Just here, another question presents itself, viz.: How and why did "Lent" find its way into the Christian church? Let us see. There is abundant evidence in history, that to propitiate the pagans, and to secure their assent to a "nominal Christianity," the Church of Rome, pursuing her usual policy, took measures, and found it no difficult matter, to get paganism and Christianity, now far sunk in idolatry, —in this, as in so many other things—to shake hands.

Such a treasonable policy could be carried out only by treachery and fraud. But Rome, as usual, was equal to the occasion.

Taking advantage of the fact that fasting, though not commanded, was expressly approved by the Master, and practiced by his apostles and "the Apostolic Church," it was easy for her, under some plausible pretext, to recommend, and, at last, to bring in this ancient, and with, the pagans, revered observance. To the church, "now far sunk in idolatry," this—like certain popular defections of the present time—was but another backward and downward step in her much boasted "progress" and "advanced thought!" Of course, it was in every sense a loss to her, while to the pagans it was a positive gain.

Side by side with the Christians, they still fasted and worshiped in honor of Bacchus, their false Messiah; while the Christians, in their "progressive" but false "liberality," kept the same fast, and to great extent in the same way, in honor professedly of the True! Thus, at length, this great "name of blasphemy" had found its place among her other "abominations," as an ordinance of the Christian religion! In all this the pagans had yielded absolutely nothing, yet the church, conceding everything, yielding everything, took, in this one act, a long step in that long career of concessions and compromises, by which at last she became thoroughly and hopelessly metamorphosed into what is now called the "Roman Catholic church," a living, loathsome embodiment of the ancient Babylonian paganism!

As we have seen, for some hundreds of years after Christ no fast before Easter was observed, and until long after its adoption it had no connection with the "Lent" of the pagans. Just when the "forty days" were adopted, does not clearly appear, but it is certain that it was not for a considerable time after the Council of Nice, which assembled in A.D. 325. About the year 450, Socrates, the eminent historian, wrote: "Those who inhabit the princely city of Rome, fast together before Easter three weeks, excepting the Saturday and Lord's day." "At last," says Hislop (Two Babylons, p. 172), "when the worship of Astarte was rising into the ascendant, steps were taken to get the whole Chaldean Lent of forty days made imperative on all within the Roman Empire of the West. The way was soon opened. A council was held at Aurelia, in the time of Hormisdas, Bishop of Rome, about the year 519, which decreed that Lent should be solemnly kept before Easter."

The beautiful "simplicity that is in Christ" which at first characterized the celebration of his resurrection, was already eclipsed and superceded by the pompous flummeries of the pagan Easter, and now, after such a mandate, from such "infallible" authority the tendency toward paganism, which had fully become the rule, in everything ecclesiastical, made the acceptance and adoption of "Lent," a "foregone conclusion." Accordingly, the observance of this great pagan monstrosity became in time, the law and custom of "the universal church!"

This new order of things cursed the church with the rankest superstitions and the grossest abominations.

"Let anyone read the atrocities that were commemorated during the "sacred fast," or pagan Lent, as described by Arnobius, or Clemens Alexandrinus (Clem. Alex. Protrepticos, p. 13), and surely he must blush for the Christianity of those, who, with the full knowledge of all these abominations, "went down to Egypt for help" to stir up the languid devotion of a degenerate church! "That Christians should ever think of introducing the pagan abstinence of Lent, was a sign of evil. It showed how low they had fallen. It was also a cause of evil. It inevitably led to deeper degradation." (Two Babylons, p. 171-2.)

"Can a man take fire into his bosom and not be burned?" If the introduction of the pagan festivals, and the "Lent," has been attended with such fearful cost to the integrity and purity of the Christian church in by-gone ages, how can she now do the same thing without a repetition of the same consequences? Her present insensate zeal for the pagan feasts of Saturn and the old Greco-Roman Aphrodisia under their specious, but deceitful aliases ("Christmas" and "Easter"), often celebrating them with a hundred fold more earnestness, more passionate ardor than she bestows upon the legitimate observance of any true, Christian ordinance, is already bringing forth its inevitable fruit. Corruptions in both doctrine and practice are fast finding their way into the church, and are accepted and cherished there with a heartiness, an unction even, which is appalling, and the growing favor with which this other paganism, Lent, is even now regarded and treated, is a sure indication that the great defection is most alarmingly on the increase! It shows too, that, as with Christmas and Easter, the adoption and observance of "Lent" by the Roman church, and its cunning, crafty insinuation into the Christian church, is an important link in that long chain of "sorceries" with which "that arrant whore of Rome," even now, "deceives" and binds "the nations." As therefore God commands that we "be not partakers of her sins," participation in this, as in any other of her paganisms, must be open treason against the "King of kings." (See Jer. 10: 2; 2 Cor. 6: 16, 77; Rev. 18: 4; Deut. 12: 32.)

SENEX.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT:—He that loveth his life shall lose it.

MY BRETHREN:—The ancient Grecian pagan made a personification of wheat; called it Prosessma, and, when wheat was east into the earth, they feigned that Pluto had taken Proserpine down to Hades. Then Jove was called in, who decreed that Ceres, the mother of Proserpine, should have her daughter a part of the year, while Pluto should have her the rest of the year—three months, more or less. This idea was magnified into a religion, which was taught in secret mysteries, like Freemasonry. It was mere flummery from beginning to end.

But when the Saviour was at the height of his popularity, in the capital of Jewry, at the great national festival of the Jews, two curious Greeks, travelers from Athens, perhaps, wished to have an interview with him. His reply to the inquisitiveness of these Greeks is sublime. It showed how little regard he had for his then present popularity; how sadly the hour to him was one of sorrows, instead of one of triumph, and at the same time exhibited his intimate knowledge of the emptiness of the Greek religion. In a few brief words like these, viz.: "I say unto you except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it," etc., in which he evidently alluded to the religion of his would-be interviewers, he sets aside the whole stupendous fabric of that religion, even as a mighty river in a solemn flood, might throw aside the floatwood that had fallen into its current.

He virtually said to the two Greeks as follows: This glory of popular esteem which you now see me possessed of, this life for which men strive, is nothing; I must lose it, like a kernel of sowed wheat, or the germ of immortal life within me will never spring up into everlasting glory. This present glow of popularity is not to end in placing the crown of Cæsar upon my brow, but it is to end in death; a kind of death, a death to worldly glories, without which there can be no life in the world to come.

In the midst of his majestic discourse addressed to the admiring throngs around him, how small does Greece with all her glory seem? The Jews had assembled, probably from every quarter of the world, to celebrate their national birth-day; and unwittingly the glory that they designed for the day was being bestowed upon the Saviour, thus unawares recognizing him as the life and glory of their race. But ere he could attain to that real glory he must first die, as Moses had done, on the very borders of the promised land. This he knew and boldly asserted.

My brethren, the mythology of ancient Greece is an indecent sham; and the myths of Freemasonry are also a miserable sham. They are an effort made at grasping after worldly life, after popularity, office, wealth, and impure friendship. But can the man who seizes upon this kind of life ever attain to the higher life? Can anything suited to the true dignity of human nature, that dignity which the Saviour came to save, proceed from a hypocritical institution that teaches such indecent frauds and buffooneries in the name of religion as Freemasonary does? Remember, the Saviour died for the sake of a pure religion, and of that religion Freemasonry makes a mockery and a farce! How then, my friends, can you pray in the name of the Saviour and at the same time vote for men who make of death and the resurrection a ghastly joke?

My friends, if ye so dishonor your Lord as to vote for Freemasons, ye make yourselves hardly above the beasts that perish:—less than the ass that reproved Balaam. SO MOTE IT BE!

THE HIDDEN FOE.

Our foe hidden long in his ambush of night,
Now forced from his covert stands black in the light!
O the cruel to man and the hateful to God—
Smite him down to the earth that is cursed where he trod.

For deeper than thunder of summer's loud shower—
On the dome of the sky God is striking the hour;
Shall we falter before what we've prayed for so long,
When the Wrong is so Weak, and the Right is so strong;

Come forth altogether, come old and come young,
With a vote in each hand and a song on each tongue;
Truth naked is stronger than falsehood in mail,
The wrong cannot prosper the right cannot fail,

Like leaves of the summer, once numbered the foe;
But the hoar-frost is falling, the northern winds blow;
Like leaves of November, ere long shall they fall
For earth wearies of them, and God's over all.

THEIR OWN WORKS CONDEMN THEM.

[Editorial in Christian Worker (Friend's organ) February 7th, 1884.]

Secret societies, we think, are working great evil, and should receive the disapproval and condemnation of the church. We see nothing of good in all that is claimed for them that at all compensates for this evil. We will endeavor to state some of our objections to such societies:

1. They raise in the minds of many who enter them expectations of good they can by no means supply. Many persons, having the sense of spiritual need usual to the unsaved, with no definite understanding of how to find soul-rest by faith in Jesus Christ, but rather thinking of finding it through some system of morality and good works, enter the lodge with a delusive hope that they will here find that which will supply this inward want. The strange, and to them impressive ceremonies, together with the sacredness and antiquity claimed for their origin, the lessons they are said to symbolize, and the excellent morality spoken of as inculcated by the order, have a strong influence to encourage this feeling and inspire such to depend upon the order rather than seek Christ. Degree after degree is taken, and no rest is found; the cold heart is no nearer to God.

Some of these at last, sick and weary at heart, leave the whole system, and through pardoning grace find Jesus, mourning their loss and shuddering at the perils of their delay. Others, unwilling to sacrifice that which has cost them so much, attempt the service of God by holding on to lodgery, and thus render but a lame, half-hearted sacrifice, which brings neither peace to the soul nor success to their labor. A still larger class settle down in devotion to their chosen order, depend upon some unsatisfactory system of works for salvation, reject the only means offered to man, and live out their days, cold, unspiritual, unsaved—victims of a most fatal delusion.

Thus, dangerous procrastination or the loss of eternal life are what is often paid for Masonry, Odd-fellowship, or other secret orders. The professions of brotherhood, of obligations to their fellows, of benevolence, of care for the sick and widows, tend to strengthen these delusions and to darken the mind as to the importance of faith in Jesus Christ; while fellowship with the ungodly tends to corrupt and defile the already perverted heart and life.

2. Secret societies foster vanity and ostentation. To see their display upon the streets, to look upon their costly regalia and other trappings, to observe the pride which attends these marches and this outward ornamentation, is but to view an exhibition of human vanity and weakness too foolish and trifling to receive the approval of thoughtful minds. Conscious of this, many of the best members of these orders will not be seen in these processions; to appear there they would feel degraded and out of place. How they can rest in secretly contributing to such vanity we do not understand.

3. They are expensive, both in time and money. He who would make what is called a good member of any order must give much time in attendance of lodges and in the performance of other requirements. It is also a continual drain upon means, and to men of small income often leads to embarrassment. An idea of the wastefulness of this expenditure is given by the following figures, published some time since, purporting to show the "general condition" of Odd-fellowship:

The receipts for 1881 were	$4,854,877 17
Paid for relief	1,831,171 38
Leaving a balance of	3,023,705 79
For 1882, the receipts were	5,245,946 00
Relief	1,882,443 88
Balance	$3,363,502 12

While one dollar is spent in support of the principal if not the only redeeming feature of the order, more than two dollars is given to the machinery for dispensing it, that machinery being largely made up of foolishness, vanity, and display. To this must be added the loss of time.

It will be observed that in this article we have made no reference to the secret things of these orders. We present objections which we think sufficient to condemn the system, even though the internal requirements were free from fault. Much more may be said on the same line. Independent of secret things, we say, as we began, that there is enough to condemn these institutions as evil, and that against them ought to be arrayed the united influence of the church. Lest we be misunderstood, we would express our belief that amongst the greatest evils of secret societies is their secrecy, the unrighteous and unreasonable obligations by which it is enforced, and the unholy ceremonies which attend their proceedings. We feel compelled to believe the testimony of witnesses who have revealed these secrets, many of them being persons whose integrity is beyond question.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

In a college where some excitement prevailed in respect to secret societies—"fraternities," they are euphemistically called—it became noticeable that as young men connected themselves with them and were absorbed by them, they lost their interest in other better things to which they had given attention. Boys who carried to college the practices of their early homes attended church and the prayer-meetings and seemed hearty in their interest in religion, but so soon as they leagued themselves with the college guilds, these commendable practices and dispositions were given up. The societies absorbed them. They seemed, also, to feel that they had backslidden from their faith and former good habits and cut off from previous obligations. It might be hoped that this, along with other youthful ways, would be overcome, and that the subsequent life would, after all, be free from so unhappy a perversion. Sometimes this is the case, but usually the taste for such affiliations, having been stimulated and indulged in college, it increases afterwards, and instead of the church and religion claiming the man, he is nothing better than a devotee of the lodge. Colleges cannot do a better thing than to rigorously prohibit these means of youthful perversion.—United Presbyterian.

Masonry, Odd-fellowship, and all such, are abominable humbugs. Let them alone and save your money. We agreed once on a time, upon a certain contingency, to let somebody interfere with our respiratory apparatus, but we had no real intention of ever submitting to such an inconvenient arrangement, and the man who administered the oath was too good-natured to kill a rabbit, much less a fellow human being. It is meaningless bosh. How would one look "five thousand leagues under the sands of the sea shore?" (We are not very "bright"—it is some time since we "posted.") A man would smother to death, in a little while, in such a place as that. "Vengeance is mine. I will repay, saith the Lord." "If we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "Ye are complete in him." That's a fellowship that amounts to something. No murderous oath underlies that fraternity. "Hereby we know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." True, sweet, Christian brotherhood don t have to be bulwarked, nor buttressed by "solemn obligations." It flows out spontaneously like "rivers of water." In this "lodge" we "restore" the apostate, where love will do it, instead of murdering him. Vengeance, we leave to Jehovah.—The Shining Way, David City, Neb.

THE SERMON.

BY REV. DAVID MCFALL, CHAMBERS ST. REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BOSTON.

TEXT:—Doth Job fear God for naught?—Job. 1: 9.

These are the devil's words; but while we take them as a text, it is with no intention of honoring the author. He here gives expression to a very mean and false insinuation against a good man's character, and at the same time opens the way for a comparison between himself and God, as masters from which he should have had sense enough to shrink. We take pleasure in exposing the insinuation, and in pointing out the contrast he suggests.

I. The insinuation. It is both against Job's character and God's methods. He insinuates that Job's piety was mercenary, and that God was buying up followers, and both together constitute a sort of wail at the ill-success of his personal efforts, "in going to and fro in the earth and in walking up and down in it." It was as if he complained of the fearful odds with which he had to contend. He might as well have said: "Between the bulls and bears of God's abundance and man's cupidity, my lambs are fleeced, and I get empty pockets for my share." So whines the arch enemy—the old deceiver.

The insinuation has just enough of coloring in it to give it point. Job was a pious man, and he was also a very rich man; and the devil connects these two facts together and says: "The piety is the result of the riches." The argument was shrewd but very fallacious. "Doth Job fear God for naught? Hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side; thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now and touch all that he hath and he will curse thee to thy face." So the devil reasoned; and if the devil had been right Job would have been wrong. Piety that is for sale to the highest bidder is no piety at all. To follow Christ for the loaves and fishes is really not to follow Christ, but the loaves and fishes. The profession that is made on that basis is, therefore, not a Christian profession, but a fishy profession.

The insinuation also derives some point from the fact that there have always been men mercenary enough to be religious from corrupt motives. See how the Shechemites reasoned when the proposition was made to incorporate with Israel, and undergo the distinguishing rites of their religion. "Shall not their cattle, and their substances, and every beast of theirs be ours." It was not the religion of Israel that attracted the Shechemites, but it was their flocks and herds, and for the sake of these they were willing to feign some little respect for the religion. Look at Jehu. "See my zeal," says he, "for the Lord." But that "zeal for the Lord" burned so brightly because he was thereby securing power for himself and for his family in Israel. It was one word for the Lord and a whole history for Jehu. He was quite willing to do the Lord's work when that led him in the line of cutting off all rivals to the throne on which he had succeeded in seating himself. Look at Micah the Ephraimite. A wandering Levite comes to his door, and Micah takes him in and makes a priest of him, and says: "Now I know the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest." You see it was purely as a speculation that he took him in, just as it was for a speculation that Laban kept Jacob. He pressed Jacob to remain with him, not because he had any respect or affection for Jacob, but because he felt it paid. "I have learned by experience," says he, "that the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." And so he was willing to put up with Jacob for the sake of the Lord's blessing. But Jacob out-generaled him, and it served him right. Thus there have been men in the past, and there are probably plenty of them at the present day, guilty of all the devil insinuates against Job, viz., that his piety was the result of his riches, and that he continued to serve God because God continued to subsidize him with his providential favors.

Now, if this had been so in Job's case, he would have been an unworthy character; and his piety, beautiful as it appeared, would have been hollow and heartless. Our Lord says, "A cup of cold water shall not lose its reward." But mark you, to be worthy of any reward it must be given to the thirsty for Christ's sake, or because the thirsty one belongs to Christ—not because you expect a dollar in the bottom of the cup when it comes back to you again. If that be your expectation, or the motive on which you give the water, then verily I say unto you, you have your reward, either the dollar you have, or in the disappointment you feel at not having it.

If Job had been influenced by the dollar, Satan's point against him would have been well taken, and his gaudy, pious bubble none too soon exploded. But Job was not influenced by any such considerations, and the proof is he held fast to his integrity when all he had on earth wilted and shriveled up like a dry and seared leaf in autumn. One day a messenger arrives in breathless haste and cries out, "The Sabeans have carried off the oxen and the asses, and have slain the servants with the edge of the sword." Another declares, "The lightning's flash has burned up the sheep and those that attended them." A third says, "The Chaldeans have carried off the camels and murdered the servants." And a fourth comes with heavier tidings than all the rest. He says, "Your eldest son's house is fallen, and your entire family is crushed and buried beneath its ruins."

There stood the old patriarch; a moment ago he was the richest man in all the East, now "none so poor as to do him reverence." The morning's sun had kissed his possessions and hailed his family with gladness; it now looks down from its noon-day height and sees all in ruins. Only four faithful but broken-hearted retainers, and a crazed wife, are left. And as he stands there, the central figure in that forlorn group, what does he do? Curse God to his face? Hurl anathemas against heaven for the unexpected but sweeping stroke? Ah, no. He rends his mantle, and plucks off the hair, and prostrates himself on the ground and worships, and says, "Naked came I into this world, and naked shall I go out of it. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." The unjust aspersion cast upon his character is now wholly wiped away.

But is the devil satisfied that he made a mistake in his estimate of Job's piety? No, he is not, or at least he pretends not to be. The English deist, Henry St. John Bolingbroke, is credited with saying, "Every man has his price." And the devil is just like Bolingbroke, and so he thinks Job has his price. "It is true," he says, "he holds fast to his integrity with his family and servants slain, and his property in ruins." But "skin for skin; all that a man hath will he give for his life. Put forth thine hand now and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face." And once again God says, "He is in your hand, but save his life." That is, just leave the breath of life in him. And very soon this reservation was all that remained to Job. Smitten with a disease that left no soundness in his flesh and filled his bones with pain, health and strength gone, he sits down among the ashes and begins to scrape himself with a potsherd. His wife looks out upon that picture of abject misery, and her reason gives way entirely, and she utters wild and incoherent ravings. But Job replies, "Poor woman, you speak as one whose reason was gone;" and then, meditatively, "What? shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not also receive evil?"

And then the devil goes out and brings in three or four reputed wise men, and they gather around him as he sits on his ash-pile, ostensibly to comfort, but really to read him cruel and provoking moral lectures; and all these could extort from him was, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

Now, does Job fear God for naught? Yes, Job fears God for naught. He has no earthly consideration whatever in view. Not wealth, nor family, nor friends, nor health; these were all gone. Not even life itself, it has now no charms for him. He would rejoice exceedingly and be glad if he could find the grave. But still he fears God, and why? Because he loves him. That is the lesson, the sublime lesson, we are taught in this wonderful book.

What are all your hireling attachments and base and mercenary friendships compared with this? Here we have a noble model for our devotion to God. This shows us the love which the first and greatest commandment requires—love with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. It is the attachment which our Lord demands when he says, "If any man come after me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Look back, then, brothers and sisters in Christian profession, look back to the man of Uz and see how unselfish, how pure and strong your devotion to God should be.

The devil's insinuation is now more than exploded, and Job's character triumphantly justified.

II. The contrast. A few words will suffice to set this forth. The devil as a master is as cunning as he is cruel. He carefully conceals from his deluded followers every danger to which they are exposed in his service, while at the same time he skillfully brings all possible allurements into view. Like Jael of old, he welcomes them in, and spreads the couch, and brings forth butter in a lordly dish, but conceals the hammer and the nails which he means to drive into their very souls. He promises every thing and pays nothing of what he promises; but thrusts upon his victims, at the close of the course, what he had carefully concealed from them at its commencement. See his wiles with our first parents: "The fruit of this tree is good for food, it will make you wise. The day you eat of it ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." And thus he goes on, specifying advantages, but all the while concealing the death penalty that lay in its taste. He promised them knowledge and life, and they got ignorance and death. He promised Achan, in Israel's army, a wealthy heritage, an easy fortune, an enviable future, if he would only avail himself of what chance had thrown in his way. But instead of this he was detected in the theft and ignominiously put to death for his rebellion against God, and treachery to his companions in arms. He promised Ananias and Sapphira great respect and esteem among the apostles and brethren for their apparent generosity; but instead of that they met with scathing rebuke and instant death for their hypocrisy. So he deals to-day with those simple enough to believe his representations. To the young man inclined to give way to the blandishments of the social glass, he says: "It is only an hour's good fellowship, simply a social evening;" but by and by it is a lonely evening—in the gutter or the felon's cell. To another, whose integrity has secured for him a position of trust, he says: "Here is a splendid opportunity to invest, margins large, returns quick and sure; only invest a little of the funds entrusted to your care, you can replace them before they are called for, and in the meantime make a handsome profit for yourself." He invests and is ruined. Sometimes he turns preacher and says: "The theatre is the place to go for a good, moral lesson." And the young man, prejudiced against the church, and feeling his need of moral instruction, turns to the theatre and goes back and forth in search of his moral lesson, until he comes out an immoral man. Such are his promises, and such the fulfilment of them. Or if in any case they are kept to the car, it is that they may be broken to the heart. And, finally, when the work is done, he thrusts death into the hands of all his servants as their wages for the services rendered. "The wages of sin is death."

On the other hand, how different it is with those who serve God. We have seen already in what sense his servants serve him for nothing. They serve him irrespective of worldly gain. There is nothing promised on this score; certainly nothing stipulated for by those who enter his vineyard. Those who serve the Lord Jesus Christ, serve him for love, not for money. But while such considerations as these do not enter into the engagement, it may be proper to state what is promised and what may be expected.

We are not promised afflictions, distresses, persecutions, and so on, but we are candidly informed that we shall meet with these that we may be the better able to count the costs. But if we are forewarned of these, we are promised grace and strength with which to meet and bear them. And these promises are fulfilled in every case, and they are the hidden manna on which God's children live when the world thinks they ought to die. The fulfilment of these promises brings rich and precious spiritual experiences—experiences that are in themselves foretastes of heaven's enjoyments.

Besides this, there is the satisfaction arising from the voice of conscience when it tells of duty done, which is in itself a perennial source of enjoyment. This is something that the world can neither give nor take away, but which is invaluable to him who possesses it. These two, the fulfilment of God's promises and the testimony of our own conscience, are the daily wages of those who fear God.

And then at the close of the course there is a "recompense of reward" which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, the things which God has prepared for them that love him."

Doth Job fear God for naught? Yes, and no. He fears God without thought of worldly reward; but he shall receive a spiritual and eternal reward that is unspeakable and full of glory. And he knows this but fears, not the less for pure love of him whose grace has so ordained it. Does any man serve the devil for naught? No, and yes. He serves for promises, but they are never fulfilled; for a mess of pottage, but he never gets it; and when at last deception is no longer possible or necessary, he thrusts into his hand the wages of eternal death and endless despair.

Behold the contrast and take your choice. You must serve one, and cannot serve them both. "No man can serve two masters," least of all two such masters. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

CAPE TOWN, April 2, 1884.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—With thanks I acknowledge the receipt of £2 8s. Our prayer is that the Lord will reward the donors, and hope they have experienced a blessing on account of it, since they decided to contribute this sum to the Lord in our behalf. We have of course our trials while trusting the Lord only for our temporal support, but he takes continual care of us, even by means of his children from afar, as we have now proof again. For this way of living the Lord also grants us blessings which we could not expect otherwise.

Some say, I would my faith were as strong as yours, but they very little realize that our trusting the Lord only for temporal means, and not receiving salary in order to exclude anxiety about temporal matters, stands in close connexion with the strength of our faith in other things. If one useful member be paralyzed, the whole body suffers on account of it, which fact perhaps is generally not well understood, as being applicable to the spiritual man also.

The Lord's dealings with us are very wonderful. For instance: I had a desire to visit a place, Beaufort West, to preach the Gospel there, and try to distribute some useful literature, but the traveling expenses connected with it would be rather large. But what happens now?—a lady from that place writes to me that she has a sick person in her family, and asks me to come there, while she offers to pay the expenses up and down, amounting to £4 or $20. What gave occasion to her writing me on such a condition? Recently I wrote to a paper, which has a large circulation in this country, about healing by faith, in Dutch, adding also a few cases of remarkable healing, in which I had been instrumental by the prayer of faith. This she had read and was thereby induced to write me. In said article I also denounced the use of the poisonous medicines, by means of which many die before their time. I explained the passages of Scripture on which the system of medicine is generally founded, and had thus to deal with "figs," "clay," "wine," etc., as some of the readers can imagine. I showed that these things and their application, had nothing in common with the present medical system, proving that this is not at all of divine institution, but of human invention, and contrary to the direction of God's Word, in which the prayer of faith is presented, as the only divinely appointed means of cure. I stated that the figs in the case of Hezekiah, were not ordered by a doctor, but by the Lord himself; were not so much a means to the end for which medicines are employed, but a sign or earnest of his healing, as stated in Isa. 38:22; also that figs would poison nobody, which could not be said of many medicines. As to the clay, I said the Lord applied it, and not a doctor; and that if he intended to employ it as a medicine, he must have been a poor physician, for which reason perhaps so few in our days resorted to him for healing, because the medecines of the doctors seem to answer the purpose better. I showed from the Word how weak the faith of present Christianity is, in comparison with what it was during the time of the apostles.

A Christian told me after reading my article he went at once to the Lord to deliver him from a pain with which he had been afflicted longer than a year, and was healed at once. I am despised by many because of telling the truth so plainly, but it must be done, and the Lord blesses me and others on account and by means of it.

I just received a letter from a man in the Orange Free State, who had been suffering for some years from a sore leg, and on which he had expended already hundreds of pounds (remember a pound is nearly five dollars), without any avail. It may also be stated here, that a visit by a doctor in such thinly populated countries often will cost $50 or more. For such people, the healing by the prayer of faith alone would be a Gospel or glad tidings indeed. The Bible, which they daily read, contains this Gospel, but they have been taught by their religious leaders, and by way of tradition, that this kind of Gospel has served its purpose long ago, and has in fact died with Christ and his apostles. The Lord has led me also to introduce faith healing among the Mohammedans with good success. Many of them have been greatly benefited in this way. They already ask me now and then to pray for them in case of sickness.

Not long ago I made a preaching tour through several Dutch Reformed churches, often telling them that the way to heaven is not as broad as even many church people seem to imagine, and this has been, as I hear, not without blessing to many.

I also have translated some Anti-masonic matter for a religious paper, whose editors are also opposed to the lodges; among other pieces also a tract by Charles G. Finney on "The duty of Christians toward the Lodge."

South Africa at large is at present in a deplorable condition, as far as the finances and concerned. The money is now scarce as never before, as they say. The whole country, as it were, is considered as bankrupt. The debt of Cape Colony, I hear, amounts to over thirty millions of pounds. The original and moral cause no doubt is sin, but the secondary causes are considered as several, as: foreign banks, as those of the Standard bank, which has its branches everywhere through the country, by means of which the money is carried away to England. Many Africans have taken money from these banks, and they having suffered by drought, insects in their orchards, by the cheapness of their products (especially wine), they get in difficulty with the banks, by which no mercy is to be found, the result of which is that a great many go bankrupt, and others are constantly living in dread of it.

The diamond fields and the farming of ostriches are also far less productive than formerly, so that there is a concurrence of circumstances which easily account for the secondary causes of the present poverty of South Africa. Both banks and large business men fail, whereby many in the country, among all classes, suffer considerably. Many being well off are rendered poor in this way. There is also a Dutch Reformed church temporally ruined by the failing of a bank. They had taken many shares in that bank, and have now to pay occasionally large sums, not knowing yet where it will end.

The Cape Colony has also long been governed by foreigners (Englishmen), who, as the Africans say, have taken care more for their own purses, than for the welfare of the country which they ruled. By means of the Transvaal war with England, the eyes of many Africans have been unclosed, and are now more engaged in political matters than formerly, and have brought it so far already, that they get of their own people as representatives in the parliament, in which also the Dutch language is used as well as the English. They also try to make it obligatory that public officers have to sustain examination equally in both languages. Yours in the Lord.

W. HAZENBERG.

It is a blessed thing to have to work. Work keeps us out of foolish and hurtful desires, which destroy so many. If a young man especially has all the money he wants to spend, he may be almost certain it will ruin him. A rich man's son is brought up under great dangers, unless he is early compelled to work just as hard as if he were a poor man's son. Wise parents understand this.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

SAMUEL C. POMEROY,

OF KANSAS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultiv[illegible]intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CALL FOR NATIONAL POLITICAL CONVENTION.

The National Convention of the American Party will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20, 1884, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, to revise the platform of the party, and transact such other business as may be brought forward.

Each State will be entitled to as many delegates as there are Congressional Districts in the State, and two delegates at large. These delegates may be chosen in such manner as each State shall determine, and they shall be furnished with credentials signed by the chairman of the State Committee, or by the member of the National Committee for that State.

Persons friendly to the cause, who are not delegates, or who are elected to represent organizations friendly to the party, will be admitted to all the privileges of the Convention except that of voting, and this privilege may be extended to them by the Convention provided the delegation of the State from which they come is not otherwise full. Signed— F. W. CAPWELL,

President.

PLANKS FOR PLATFORMS.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will present a memorial to the national political conventions soon to meet, asking that their platforms advocate the adoption of measures "requisite to to the end that prohibition of the importation, exportation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages may become an integral part of the National Constitution."

A national convention of wool growers will be held in this city May 21 which will demand the recognition of the wool industry by both the leading political parties and the insertion of a pledge for their protection in the platforms of the Presidential conventions. Seventy-two thousand wool growers will be represented in the convention.

The National Executive Committee of the Irish National League held its first annual meeting on Tuesday, April 15th, in the Palmer House, Chicago. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to present to each of the national political conventions to be held this year, a request that there be embodied in each platform a resolution favoring an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the ownership of land in fee simple by any but American citizens, or residents who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States and settlers in good faith, and pending the adoption of such constitutional amendment, requesting Congress to provide by suitable legislation for the protection and conservation of public lands.

NO COMPROMISE.

I send the enclosed letter from a personal friend, published in a late number of the Delaware, (O.), Signal. The writer is a man of no mean reputation among the Prohibitionists, who begins to see things not intended to be seen by the "secret schemers," who are trying to hand over the P. H. P. party to the Republicans. I hope you will publish, calling the attention of your readers to what Mr. Heath says of the condition of their National committee, which was appointed in 1880 to stand for four years. This committee, he claims, was unlawfully changed, and names of men put on it who have never yet voted a straight Prohibition ticket! The votes of such men have changed the time for their convention from May 21st to July 23d, very much to the disgust of the men who are and have been the Prohibitionists pure and simple. These Republicans first, and (possible but not probable) Prohibitionists have defeated the true men, and are likely to do so to the end. Would God Mr. Stewart and the "Old Guard" could have the courage to respond to the clarion call of Mr. Heath.

But this revelation ought to be a lesson to the American party. Make no compromises with open enemies, or any to be friends. Call no man to our ranks or to any official position who is not pronounced in its favor, and has not fought its battles. Our name and our platform are both irreproachable. Let us go before the country with them unchanged. Let there be no more tampering with our ticket. Let the past suffice for this. Let our convention at Chicago in June heartily ratify what has been done; and then let us act like men who know our own minds, have a well defined purpose and a faith in God and in the final success of our principles. After this manner is modestly but fearlessly offered the opinion of

J. L. BARLOW.

TO THE OLD GUARD.

BRETHREN:—Ye who are battle-scarred in the Prohibition party cause! Ye who have toiled and sacrificed for pure principles in years when it cost something to adhere to the party of prohibition! Ye who to-day are more saddened and dismayed by the loose and disorganizing utterances of traitors among us, than by all the battle cries of open and manly foes! Listen to the cry of danger! The enemy, despairing of crushing our principles and our noble party by civilized warfare, have cunningly introduced disguised warriors into the very citadel of power among us. Not only this, but these new-comers, with lips dropping honey, have wormed their way into places of power and trust in our councils. Accepting their false professions, we have welcomed them, and deferred to them, until to-day by a strategy worthy of the wily savage, they have carried out their plans and wrought our ruin. The Prohibition party to-day stands bound and helpless in the hands of its enemies. The voice of the tried and trusted is overwhelmed by strange and unwelcome policy cries. The postponement of our National convention, forced upon us by the votes of those who have never cast their ballots for our cause and whose vote is an outrage upon fairness and justice, is the last drop in the cup of traitors! They have shown their foul spirit, and if we be men we will vindicate our cause and our manhood against open foe and secret schemer. The time for action is at hand! The emergency is great, calling for utmost promptness of thought and deed.

If the foreign element in our National Committee is strong enough to impose on us a date which is harmful, because they wish to force us to receive as delegates a class who are not of us nor with us in spirit, they are also strong enough to meet in Pittsburg July 23 and throw open our convention to our stubborn foes. If they are strong enough to impose a postponement upon us which tends to help the Republicans to put forth another deceit upon the people, they can also so depose, select and manipulate officers as to throw our convention into unfriendly hands. These are by no means all the dangers of the situation, but space forbids a full exposure. Yet we cannot forget one specially venomous element namely, a poisonous press, breathing forth unsoundness and all corruption and stubbornly suppressing all argument and protest and even gagging our national head, whom we trust and revere.

Brethren, from all these dangers there is a refuge. There is a clear, lawful and pure course open before us, which promises relief from these difficulties. if we will enter upon it instantly. Let us see. The Chicago convention of 1882 usurped authority to elect a National Committee, deposing those whom the Cleveland convention of 1880 had elected to serve for four years. The term of the Cleveland committee has not expired. They are in office. No others are lawfully in office. The Chairman and Executive Committee thereof are in harmony, and the full committee would doubtless rise to meet the emergency and protect our party from destruction. Let Hon. Gideon T. Stewart as chairman of the Cleveland National committee, issue his call for the National convention to be held at Pittsburg on May 21st, and let each and every member of that Cleveland committee hasten to send in their approval of that call. In addition to this let each and every chairman and secretary of the various State committees send in his approval of that call. Also, let leading men in the party everywhere, men who can see the difference between a true, genuine Prohibitionist and a Republican or Democrat, hasten to assure Bro. Stewart of a generous, hearty support in such a noble and patriotic course. And let all who are thus asked to write him in view of the shortness of the time, make it a matter of imperative business to write such letters or cards before they sleep, after reading these lines. Of course such extreme haste is not to be invoked except in cases of great emergency, but this is beyond question such a case.

As to the composition of the convention thus called, it would be well to have it clearly stipulated that delegates must themselves sign the National call, and have that call so construed and interpreted as to involve utter and entire abandonment of the old parties, both State and National. Other details can be arranged hereafter. The main object of this writing is to induce instant action in Bro. Stewart in calling the convention, and in all loyal friends and officials in endorsing his call. Brethren, a bold facing of this danger will overcome it.

A. R. HEATH.

Danbury, Ct., April 11, 1884.

—A telegram to the Laramie Boomerang from Goldendale, W. T., says: "Sheriff Wise, who has just returned from a 200 mile trip over the country, reports that the women who were summoned as jurors to serve during the May term of court are very nervous, and many will pay a fine rather than attend. He says it is astonishing to note the number of women opposed to suffrage. A canvass among the legal female voters of Goldendale shows that sixty-nine out of eighty-three are opposed to voting."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BEAUTY OF THE LODGE.

HADLEY, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One year since I took up my residence in this village, which has three lodges and two churches, M. E. and R. B., the pastors of which claim not to be Freemasons. About last October Mr. Hough, State lecturer for the Sons of Temperance, sent to the R. B. elder to know if he could lecture in the R. B. church. He received an affirmative answer and came and lectured Sabbath afternoon and two evenings, trying to persuade hearers to join a Sons of Temperance lodge; but failing, he left until the next Monday evening when he lectured in the M. E. church with like result, berating open and praising secret temperance organizations.

After Mr. Hough had left I called on the R. B. elder to obtain his house for a lecture by H. A. Day, but was peremptorily refused. I then applied for the M. E. church with similar result. Time passed on until the week of prayer, when the churches united, alternating from house to house. On Thursday evening after prayers for the churches (the exercise being changed to conference) your correspondent spoke of the Lord's commanding John to write to the seven churches of Asia, reproving one of having "them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans which thing I hate," saying that their plans and work were done in secret, when the elder arose and notified the speaker that he was occupying too much time (less than four minutes). Several others rose to speak, simply saying a few lifeless words, and the meeting ended about as the light of a lamp ends when the oil is all gone. One wide-awake Free Methodist who was there remarked afterwards that he could not talk, for it seemed as if God had shut his mouth.

The week of prayer was followed by union evening meetings for two weeks, adjourning over Wednesday evening, giving the Masonic members a chance to attend the lodge. Thursday evening your correspondent was present beholding an uninteresting lifeless meeting, with no desire for its continuance. One preacher remarked that, although there had been no conversions and no especial awakening, yet they had enjoyed much of the divine presence. Another preacher thought they had accomplished much as the meeting had been conducted with perfect unanimity and friendly feeling (reminding the writer of a certain day when Herod and Pilate were made friends). An Adelphic entertainment was advertised for Thursday evening, Feb. 21st, at said R. B. church.

In contrast to the above, the last six months the Free Methodists have been holding Friday evening prayer meetings at a private house only three-fourths of a mile from the R. B. church, resulting in conversion and addition to the Free Methodist church of a goodly number; yet this village knows nothing of said meetings.

Yours for Christ's kingdom, W. M. BEDEN.

THE TRUE ORDER.

HEBRON, Ind.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The great object, professedly, of all secret organizations is mutual help and protection; then while you are trying to destroy these associations as being entirely wrong, I think you ought if possible to try and present the people with a substitute that would be wholly right.

I think in the Bible we have the form of an organization or company that would meet every demand, if we can only get to clearly understand its teachings on this matter. I do not pretend to fully comprehend the whole form of this order as it is in the Bible, but I will present a few ideas that may lead others to think on the subject.

The three-one God is the head of this company, and is he not most worshipful? We all of right belong to him; he is our Creator and without him we could not exist for a moment. He has appointed the Lord Jesus Christ as the head, overseer or director of this company.

But how are we to become members of this order? It is first necessary to know that we are now in rebellion against this our Creator, and he proposes terms of reconciliation; if we fully accept of those terms, then he adopts us into his family. He has provided a way in which he can pardon our rebellion and receive us into his family, if we are only willing to return to our allegiance. But, as I said before, we belong entirely to God, and he requires us to give ourselves wholly to him; but as he gives himself to us, have we not the best of the bargain? His almighty power is pledged for our protection, his infinite wisdom for our direction, and his fulness for a supply of all our wants. The apostle says "ye are complete in him." Our whole business of our lives is to act so as to be an honor to him, and in return he promises to honor us. To glorify him and aid in building up his kingdom in the world is all the service we can render him. It is always the business of a parent to provide for his dependent children, and theirs to work for the parent. So it is with this company; we are the dependent children of our father; he provides for us and we work for him, entirely under his direction. But we must never forget that he provides for this company as a whole, and not as individuals. He says the poor shall never cease out of the land; and again he says, "The poor ye have always with you." But he adds, "Therefore I command you saying, thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor and to thy needy in thy land." Deut. 15: 11. We learn from this that God often gives to some of his children more than they need, while he leaves others destitute; but we must remember that all the property of the company belongs to God, and his command to the company is to see that none suffer for the want of the comforts of life. We are not our own; we belong to God, and he tells us not to seek our own, but as far as in our power promote the happiness of all around us, especially those of our own company.

I ask, can this be improved as a mutual help company? And it is neither exclusive nor secretive. Men, women and children are equally welcome, and instead of being secretive we are required to publish as fully as possible the whole form and fashion of the order. There is a glorious future for this society. It is the stone cut out of the mountain without hands that will fill the whole earth. There is nothing human about it. It will break in pieces and destroy every organization that will set itself in opposition, and it will stand forever. Is not this a grand order? Would you not suppose there would be a perfect rush to get into it? And so there will be; but as long as that old serpent who deceiveth the whole world is loose men will continue to believe that the service of our God is a hard service, having no happiness or enjoyment. God says, "The way of transgressors is hard," and that wisdom's "ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace." But, alas! God is not believed, and Satan is, and so the world is rushing headlong to a destruction perhaps more terrible than Noah's flood.

There is little doubt but that the Lord is about to come out of his place (the mercy seat) to punish the earth in equity. These cyclones, earthquakes and floods are but the beginning of sorrow. They are outbursts of God's wrath, shadows of what is coming. J. McFARLAND.

PITH AND POINT.

IN SYMPATHY WITH JEREMIAH.

I think I can realize to some extent the feelings of the old prophet when he cried out in the bitterness of his soul, "O that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears," that he might weep day and night over the slain of the daughters of his people, when they departed from the true worship of the living God to the worship of idols and were overthrown. If God overthrew the Jewish people for their departure from the way of truth, will he not overthrow us who have had so much more light than they, when we commit the same offence in setting up the gods of the heathen and worshiping them in the name of Noble Grand, Worshipful Master, and casting out Christ so far as it can be done by organized human power, from the state and from the church?

Secret Baal worship has wormed its way into the church until it has become, or is in process of becoming, heaps of confusion and the mountain of its power as the high places of the heathen in the groves and in the mountains of Samaria. But now, dear brethren in Christ, hold up your heads. Trust in Christ. Labor and pray on, for God has promised that he will avenge his elect, and he will reign till he shall put down all rule and all authority and the heathen shall be given to his Son and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.—JOHN THOMPSON, Sabetha, Kansas.

WHO WANT DECORATION DAY?

What was more fully attended than ever? Why, decoration observances, to be sure. Who said so? Did not all the newspapers say so? Did not all the members of the sly craft spread the idea of a fuller attendance than usual among the gaping dupes that came in from the country to see the show? There are five classes of men who are interested in keeping up the graveyard show of decoration day: first, Freemasons; second, politicians; third, pensioners; fourth, newspaper editors; fifth, the uncles, aunts, cousins and nieces, etc., all who are interested in getting pensions. These people, added to the dupes, are all who at any time have taken much interest in decoration day; and the dupes are becoming less each year. The clergymen who attend these ceremonies merely lend the sanctions of their religion to the purposes of imposition and fraud. They are playing into the hands of Jesuits. LOOKER-ON.

THE COLLEGES.

PARK COLLEGE.

PARKVILLE, MO.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The students in Park College assemble in their chapel for devotional exercises both morning and noon.

To-day, at the afternoon service, we studied the Bible-reading for the day: Matt. 6: 24–34. The President, who usually presides at these services in the chapel, made some remarks on these verses which were so pointed and practical that I wish to see them in print. As I cannot quote verbatim I shall only endeavor to give you the substance.

Taking the 24th verse as a sort of text, he said: We cannot divide our time, in serving God, no more than we can divide our affections. We cannot serve him in the sanctuary on the Lord's day and then serve the world and the devil from Monday to Saturday evening. The preacher who on Monday contradicts, by his conduct and life, what he taught in his sermon on the day before, is thereby showing that he does not serve God even whilst in the pulpit. He cannot please God by anything he may do or say on the Sabbath if his heart is not right before God. If his heart is right, his motives will be right; and if his motives are right, he will seek the honor and glory of God every day in the week.

"Take no thought," referring to the 25th verse, he said, does not mean, as many seem to think, that we should be thoughtless, indolent and careless; but, on the contrary, as the 33d verse plainly shows, that we should be very thoughtful, and careful and earnest, in seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness. In doing this, and being, by God's own Spirit dwelling richly in us, qualified to make it the chief aim and occupation of our life, we are sure to seek and to use the things of this life, diligently and perseveringly indeed, but never for ourselves except as God's stewards and as co-workers with Christ.

Suppose, now, we apply that interpretation to those Christians, and Christian ministers, who are so anxiously concerned about their temporal welfare that they sell themselves to do evil that they may gain favor, advantage and position. How can a minister of the Gospel preach the doctrine of these verses—from the 24th to the 34th, inclusive, of the 6th chapter—and then go and practice and teach Masonry?

Only a short time ago I went to a church where a "revival meeting" was in progress, to hear the "presiding elder" preach. Something in the very make-up of the man, and in his manner, impressed me with the suspicion that he was a Mason. His prayer, at the opening, was very eloquent—very elegant and poetical, indeed—but it failed to stir up any devotional feeling in my own heart. His sermon, based on a verse found in the twenty-second chapter of Revelation, was a—powerful display of elocutionary talent, a fine oratorical effort—a grand sermon about heaven. But I could not then see, and I cannot yet understand, what a presiding elder could mean to preach such a sermon on such an occasion. Presumably he meant to reach the unconverted; really he lost the opportunity to convince them of sin and then to show them a Saviour.

Now, there is no doubt in my mind that this man is wonderfully gifted and eminently qualified to do a great work for the saving of souls, but he lacks the one essential thing, which is a gift from above—power. I sometimes like to call it "spiritual magnetism." I could not understand why I could not find spiritual food for myself in the sermon, and watched closely for something which would explain this, my unfounded(?) antipathy.

Toward the close of his discourse he mentioned God as the "Great Architect," working out his designs on the "TRESTLEBOARD OF ETERNITY." That enlightened me, and I knew why my soul went out in antagonism as soon as he began to speak. It also showed under whose banner he is serving. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

J. D. GEHRING.

A REMARKABLE COLLEGE.

[From the N. Y. Witness, Feb. 28, 1884.]

An article on the first page of the Weekly Witness of February 7, "Our Boys and College Professors," inclines me to speak a word for one of our younger colleges, in this place. Started before the war of the rebellion by devout Wesleyan Methodists, with anti-slavery, anti-tobacco, anti-liquor, anti-secrecy principles, it has struggled through many a tight place, financially, but always on the right side morally and spiritually, it has a record to be proud of in the character and influence of its graduates. Nine of every ten have left the college halls Christian workers, and are filling positions of influence in every walk of life, and that influence is good—the very best.

Our professors are all able Christians, and the lady teachers as well, making the soul's salvation one of the first objects to be sought. Two of them have had a course of study in Europe, and a third stands higher than almost if not quite all other Western professors of ancient languages and literature. We have also a conservatory of music of first-class quality, and a fine-art school, especially adapted to fitting teachers of drawing for that kind of work which is called for in our graded schools. The expenses are very low, society excellent, and location healthy, twenty-five miles west of Chicago, on the C. & N. W. R. R.

Many young men have been sent here reckless, profane and addicted to the use of tobacco, etc., who leave with a similar testimony to one given in "Students' Prayer-meeting" two weeks ago. It was this: "When I came here three years ago I was a skeptic and terribly profane; this I had felt to be a very foolish and ungentlemanly practice, and had tried again and again to forsake it and could not. Prof. F. called to talk and pray with me, but when he asked me if he should pray with me, I replied, 'You can get down there if you want to, but you don't catch me there.' He prayed and I mocked, as I was in the habit of doing at all the prayer-meetings I attended, making fun of all that was done. I have experienced a radical change. I know it. No word or thought of profanity even comes to my mind now, and I am 'clothed and in my right mind.'"

Such cases could be recited page after page, to my knowledge, personally, as my own sons and daughters have graduated in this school; and I wish the fathers and mothers of the country who wish their children educated highly, and not morally ruined in the process, could know more of this college. It has a preparatory and normal department, and three courses of study—the usual classical course of the Eastern college, the Laureate course, one year less than the classical, and the philosophical course the same time. At our morning exercises the lecture is often by eminently spiritual men and women from Chicago, and others, as well as by the president and professors. Any one wishing further information can send for catalogue, or address President C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill. H.

GENEVA COLLEGE NOTES.

The winter session of Geneva College closed March 5th. The number of students about 110. The same students that entered in the fall, have remained through the winter session, and with very little change are continuing through the last or spring term of the college. It is very gratifying to have the students who enter in the fall continue throughout the year; it gives uniformity to the classes and makes the progress more perceptible.

The grades made at examination give evidence of a great deal of close and careful study. There is a laudable ambition among the students to reach the highest grades that can be obtained.

In the year thus far there has been much to encourage; the health of professors and students has been generally good, and many tokens have been given us of the favoring providence of God.

Mrs. Sterrett, of Pittsburgh, has given $10,000 additional to the chair of political philosophy, which, added to what her husband, Dr. S. A. Sterrett, deceased, had given, makes $15,000 for that professorship.

Mrs. Sterrett has also intimated her intention of giving $5,000 more towards a fund for the support of students of limited means in Geneva College.

Mr. John Tibby, of Pittsburgh, and some other friends, have made very valuable contributions to our library, and we have in prospect a considerable sum of money to be invested in books for the library in the near future.

We are thankful to all the friends for their kind remembrances of the college, and trust that their contributions may long be appreciated, and wisely and carefully improved.—OUR BANNER.

—The trustees of Earlham College, at Richmond, Ind., have decided to erect a new building, to cost $45,000, and elect three new professors. This is the leading college of the Society of Friends in the West.

—In an article by Charles F. Thwing on "Gifts to Colleges and Universities," published in the Bay State Monthly, it is stated that the amount contributed to college and university education in the United States during the past ten years is $35,622,000, and since 1848 the total amount given has not been less than $50,000,000.

—The Slater fund of $1,000,000 for educating the colored people of the South has been fortunately invested, and is yielding a handsome income of $60,000, the distribution of which is in the hands of Dr. A. S. Haygood, President of the College at Oxford, Ga. Three thousand dollars have been set aside for educating pupils who were specially bright, and Mr. Slater, the donor, expresses himself as highly pleased with the progress that has been made so far in the work of the fund.

The Advance gives the following facts concerning prohibition in Kansas which were communicated by Prest. McVickar of Topeka, who was recently in this city. These statistics were gathered by James A. Troutman of Topeka. He had reports from sixty-six of the eighty-one counties of Kansas, made by State officers. From May 1881, to January 1884, the saloons had been reduced from 708 to 313; more than half the latter being in Leavenworth. During this time the population increased twelve per cent. In 41 counties there is not one saloon. Fines, for violating the law, amount to $95,000. Eighty-one saloon-keepers have been imprisoned; the aggregate imprisonment amounting to eleven years, five months and sixteen days. The prohibition sentiment is growing in fifty-one counties; in seven it is reported as decreasing.

President Arthur is thus described by a Washington paper: "He is the first President who seemed to aspire to aristocracy. Only one or two others had tastes that way, and they appeared to modify them in office. Arthur is the club man in his manners, the knight of the ball room, the hero who shines best on the velvet carpet of fashionable society. His manner is reserved and patronizing. His attention to the minutiæ of taste and ornament is microscopic. Garfield was hearty and ever unreserved possessing a grace of innate gentleness strong enough to leave the strict rules of formality and to make the novelty charming. He was a people's man. Arthur is the millionaire's familiar, a companion for royalty."—N. Y. Evening Stock Report.

HELP FOR A LECTURER IN THE SOUTH.

COLUMBUS, MISS., April 23, 1884.

The convention of the Associated Churches of Christ made it obligatory upon me to collect funds to defray the expenses of a colored anti-secret lecturer. There is here a wide field ready for the harvest where a vast amount of good can be done. When you read this will you breathe the prayer, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and then, "Whatsoever he saith unto you do it."

If you have money you wish to send, please forward it to me without delay, as the work is urgent. Anti-secret literature is also needed. If the Lord puts it into your heart to help and you cannot send money, boxes will be acceptable containing clothing, cloth in any shape in which there is wear, spelling books, Bibles, Testaments, dictionaries, Bible dictionaries, concordances and any article useful in housekeeping. These things are in great demand among the colored people and can be readily made to pay for means of private conveyance for the lecturer whenever it is most convenient to travel in that way. Get good, substantial boxes or barrels and send them as freight, not by express. Last, but not least, we want you to pray that the means may be supplied and the work abundantly blessed. Your sister in Christ,

M. A. TAPLEY.

P. S. Good temperance literature that in no way advertises or recommends secret temperance orders will be acceptable.

THE CYNOSURE CLUBBING LIST

Every subscriber to this paper who wishes to take other standard journals will do well to look over our list, and notice how he can expend his money with most economy. The Cynosure at two dollars per year will be sent together with either of the publications below, for the price in cash named in the second column. The price in the first column is what you would have to pay for the two by sending direct to the publisher of the paper named. These prices are for new or old subscribers to the Cynosure, but new only for the other papers.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

WM. HAZENBURG, Cape Town, S. Africa.
A. D. ZARAPHONITHES, Andros, Greece.

Contributions for either of these brethren may be forwarded through the Treasurer of the N. C. A. PLEASE DESIGNATE to which one such funds shall be sent.

NOTICE.

Persons write occasionally, saying, "I sent a remittance so and so, but the tag on my paper it not changed." Such inquiries are proper, and the explanation is this: when a subscription is received it is entered at once on the book and the letter filed for future reference if needed, but the printed mailing list is not changed until a sufficient number are received to require the printing of a new list. If but few subscriptions are received, the change may be delayed for a month or more, but when the list fills up rapidly it requires frequent revision. If the date on your paper is not changed within four weeks after you remit it is the safest way to drop a card to this office

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1884.

"Boys that carry pistols and dirk knives, who band themselves together in cellars and garrets, from which they plan safe burglaries and raids upon red-skins and express cars—boys whose chief reading is the blood-curdling tales above mentioned, and whose chief detestation is honest work, are not likely to make good citizens."—Catholic Review.

The above just remarks apply with ten-fold force to the weekly workings of Masonic lodges: playing murder, mangling and mutilating oaths, stupid fooleries and horse play; intermingled with mock-solemn prayers, funeral dirges,—all done in the name of God for dues and degree fees! If anything on earth can deprave and harden men, this will.

PRE-MILLENNIAL AND PAST-MILLENNIAL discussions, as everything which stimulates Bible study will do good. Neither the time nor the mode of the millennium can be known. The signs of it can be. All Christ's comings have been terrific. So will be his final return. It will be "the acceptable year of the Lord, and day of vengeance of our God." But all speculations which set aside the Lord's Prayer as a petition to be answered must be vain. The Saviour gave that prayer to all his disciples, doubtless, because he meant to grant its petitions. His kingdom is to come "in earth;" not by turning man into angels who can live in the air, but by filling men (not spirits of men) with "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

We purchased a small camel's load of Detroit dailies, of both parties, and waded through a continent of mud to get a little "politics;" as, in the days of liquor, a toper, who drank flip and found it weak, said "he had to drink a great deal of beer to get a little rum." The Democratic papers have neither candidates nor principles. Their whole political stock in trade, is, the chances of Arthur, Blaine, Logan or Edmunds. The Republican papers are ditto. This is probably the very emptiest federal canvass ever inaugurated. It compares with that which elected Buchanan. Then the real forces which controlled parties were kept out of sight; but secession soon brought them to the surface. The forces which now govern American politics are the lodge and the liquor. They will be uncovered.

A good and brave friend of our cause, says: "Look at our Anti-masons! What sort of a church would we make if put into a church by ourselves? Many churches which fellowship Masons would excel us in general goodness and piety."

ANSWER.—It is a weakness to try the goodness of a cause by the weakness and even sins of its advocates. Moses spake unadvisedly. Aaron and Miriam were envious and jealous. Elijah fretted and asked leave to die when God's people forsook him; and so down to the close of the sacred Scriptures. And ever since reformers have been harsh, sincere men, fanatical; and Satan has sifted worst those whom he dreaded most.

> The world teems with reformers, and reforms
> Succeed each other like successive storms.

All very true. Yet earth were a moral sty without them. They stood by Christ and his cause while the religious worldlings let him be crucified!

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BATAVIA, N. Y., April 29.

The lateness of the season, the crowding of "spring work" which will not brook delay, dwarfed the attendance last night. But I spoke to the few who came in for about an hour. The cause of Prohibition is now agitated in this city, and yesterday delegates were appointed to the Pittsburg National Convention for July 23d next. Some of the delegates who attended our meeting said they were decidedly opposed to the secrecy imposed on Prohibition by the temperance secret orders. Some who did not attend our meeting sent in word that they should attend the Pittsburg Convention as opponents of the secret orders, and the friends of open Christian methods of work.

But though our numbers were small, our president, F. W. Capwell, was there, and his energy accomplished the county organization and provided for delegates to the Chicago Convention, as see below.

At the close of our business meeting we walked down to see the MORGAN MONUMENT which grows beautiful with time. Its inscriptions are read by thousands, and Masons curse it as they go by in the cars. But their curses, like the blasts of winter, only polish its surface and strengthen its firm foundations.

The county Executive Committee appointed in the Opera Hall was thus formed:

A. A. Burgess, chairman; A. C. Newell, secretary; A. Higley, E. Palmer, Darius King, Alexander Brown, James Williams, with leave to fill vacancies; also instructed to act in connection with the State Committee in appointing delegates for the county to the Chicago National Convention June 20, 1884.

ALBION, N. Y., MAY 1st.—The Orleans county Anti-masons met here in the beautiful court house. Above fifty were present. W. B. Stoddard, State Agent, is getting his work well in hand, and the meeting was good. To-day the friends meet at 10 o'clock to secure delegates to Chicago, form a county club, etc.

In the congregation last night a young, vigorous looking man clapped and applauded the remarks which pleased him; when the meeting broke up he came up and poured himself on us thus:

"I'm a full-blooded Irishman, Catholic and Anti-mason. I'm only transient here, but I saw your notice and I came in to help on the cause. I believe in the divinity of Christ which is more than these Masons do, and if we stick by him we'll oust sin," etc.

It was hard to escape him. The poor fellow was half or two-thirds drunk, decently clad, and probably had a wife and children. Said he, "I go in for prohibition." "All the drinking men will vote that ticket," with much more to similar effect. He was himself the strongest argument against the saloon-curse.

Our next meeting is to be in Rochester. There are a large and increasing number of men and godly women in this and the surrounding country devoted by tradition to our cause; but the ministers, even those who are with us at heart, shrink from facing their supporters who vote the Republican and Democratic tickets. As soon as the American party gets a recognized existence, all that will change.

MAY 1, P. M.—The meeting this morning was called to order by State Agent, W. B. Stoddard. The American platform was read and J. C. Allis, Esq., was elected chairman and W. B. Stoddard, secretary; prayer by President Blanchard. Those present with others whose names were sent in were enrolled as members of the Albion American club. The officers chosen were: J. C. Allis, president; A. R. Bacon, vice-president; A. Plummer, secretary; and G. Bullard, treasurer.

Delegates to the Chicago Convention June 20th next were thus chosen: Geo. W. Holmes, N. S. Burnett, George Brown, Alanzo Smith, Norman Herrick, J. C. Allis, H. Roraback, Chester Williams, A. Plummer, A. R. Bacon, Mrs. C. E. Douglass and Mrs. Wm. Wirt.

Col. Perez Hakes who raised and commanded the 25th Regiment N. Y. Volunteers and fought under Joe. Hooker, was a member of the convention. He said he lived here when Morgan was taken by from Canandaigua to the Ridge Road, and that a driver whom he well knew told how three men came out of the hotel to get into the stage, the middle man pinioned and veiled. Col. Hakes said that driver died by poison after making public the above facts before he could act as a witness in the abduction cases. "When the Masons killed Morgan," said he, "they killed me."

THE MODERN KNOW NOTHINGS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. MAY 3d.—In Albion, Orleans county, several years ago there was a Good Templar lodge of 400 members. After awhile, like all those vanities, it vanished and passed away.

As the Presidential canvass is beginning to open, men are employed to go through this part of the State, and raise up from their graves the dead Good Templar lodges. In Albion, a new Good Templar lodge has risen like Jonah's gourd; in a night. It already numbers 100 members, with an interesting young man, who hates Masonry, for its "Worthy Chief Templar," who is an artist (Mr. Belden), and who treated us with much Christian courtesy, and attended the American Prohibition meeting at the court house.

Now if Mr. Belden and his associates knew that this Good Templar revival was, as it verily is, a mere Masonic trick to beget a thirst for secrecy in young people; to protect the Masonic lodge from popular reprobation, by getting good people to put on its drapery and shape, and to unite the members of all the secret orders in the support of Masonic candidates in the old parties, the Albion lodge would never hold another meeting unless it was promptly to disband.

The anti-secret discussion is now about where the Abolition discussion was just before the rise of the Republican party in 1856. Indifference, ridicule, sophistry, and mobs, had all been tried, and all had failed. The anti-slavery discussion moved steadily on against wind and tide; and the devils who superintended slavery began to have "great wrath" as their time grew short. Then Know-Nothingism arose. It spread like "the pestilence which walketh in darkness." Good men were drawn into its secrets in multitudes.

Dr. Gamaliel Bailey, aided by Lewis Tappan had removed his paper from Cincinnati to Washington. Its list rose rapidly and seemed likely to lay the foundation of a fortune for Dr. Bailey, who had long struggled against the popularity of the slave-power. Dr. Bailey refused to go into Know-Nothingism and it nearly made him a bankrupt. This lodge movement postponed the triumph of the anti-slavery cause for two Presidential elections, or for six or seven years at least; and then it passed away like the shadow of a dark cloud and left no trace of its existence but the memory of its folly, and its lofty, lying promises.

The Good Templars are the modern Know-Nothings. Its lodge is a mere empty, shadowy image of the apocalyptic beast. Like Jesuitism and Masonry it packs its members in layers of degrees, pledging the upper to concealment from the lower, and the lower to become underlings to unknown superiors. The Prohibitionists must throw off that incubus, or sink, as a party, under its weight.

It is to be hoped that Senator Pomeroy will come to an understanding with Hon. Gideon H. Stewart, St. John, Bain and others, and that those gentlemen and other Prohibition leaders will attend the convention of the American party at Chicago, June 20th, and give us a united front. If Mrs. Helen M. Gougar will take this matter in hand, it can be done. She is the Deborah of Prohibition. J. B.

REPUBLICAN PROHIBITION.—The Springfield State Journal (Ill.), April 4, says:—"One of the features of the late Republican Convention at Peoria was, that not a single resolution was introduced on the subject of emtperance or 'personal liberty,' for the first time in a long series of years. This would indicate that the present license law is acceptable to all classes of Republicans."

On the contrary this dodging the Prohibition issue "indicates" that the Republican leaders know that they are beaten next November if they lose either the whisky vote or the Prohibition vote. They therefore undertake to retain both by undertaking the impossible task of carrying water on one shoulder and whisky on the other; and they are likely to spill both. If Prohibitionists trust such a party, which puts them on a level with distillers and saloonists, they deserve defeat and will get it.

—C. A. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, will deliver the fourth and concluding discourse of the present series under the auspices of the Chicago Anti-secrecy Christian Association at 221 W. Madison street, Tuesday evening, May 13th, at 8 o'clock. Subject: "Anti-Christs." The public are cordially invited.

—The Washington address of Pres. J. Blanchard is offered for the postage, but as there was some expense in issuing the edition of 5,000, which has unexpectedly come upon the N. C. A. treasury, if any friends wish to send more than the postage they shall have our warm thanks for so doing. Those so contributing please state the fact in your letters.

—The General Secretary left Chicago Saturday morning for a few days work in Henry, Knox, Mercer and Warren counties, Illinois. He hopes to arouse an interest in the June Convention in this city, and is enjoined to report at this office fifty subscriptions per week for the Cynosure. Our readers in that part of Illinois will please see that his mission is a success in both respects.

—The Record, of Blanchard, Iowa, comes out in four-page form, full of news, notes, facts and arguments, with "Anti-secrecy," "National Reform" and "Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic" boldly inscribed on its front. "Henceforward," says the editor, "it will be the aim of this paper to be found in the front rank of every true reform." As one evidence that these words will be made good there is a department headed "Christian Unity,' with Christ's words, John 18: 21, for a motto—a grand conception. The directors of the Record company are among the best and strongest men of Missouri and Iowa —Revs. R. M. Sherrard, M. A. Gault, Wm. Johnston, A. W. Hall, Rufus Smith and D. McKee being among the number. May the Lord bless their work abundantly. The establishment of such a publication under such a management is an event for the whole southwestern district.

DAKOTA AMERICANS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I would like to say to friends of the American party and readers of the Cynosure in Dakota, that inasmuch as I was elected as chairman of central committee for Dakota at the convention at Washington, D. C., I would be glad to have some correspondence as soon as possible with several of the friends of the American party in order to determine where and when a convention could be held to nominate delegates to the National Convention of the American party to meet in Chicago June 20th next, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the U. S., etc. Address me up to May 24th at Tulare, Spink county, Dakota, where I expect to be before that time. My address as given in Cynosure of April 24, is incorrect; it should have been Burdette.

I will do the best I can to meet friends in convention somewhere in Dakota for the object named: who will help to make it a success? JOHN DORCAS.

LITERATURE.

The Century introduces to American readers, with a fine portrait, Chief Joseph of the Nez Perce tribe. Of the illustrated articles "Recent Architecture in America" seems to be of most value and attractiveness. But those which will be most read are Mrs. Jackson's "Women of the Bee-hive," and "Trades-Unionism in England." The former is a review of Mormonism which abhors the final effect of the system but shows a human sympathy for those who are afflicted by it. The principle which underlies Mormon polygamy and which makes women submit to it is the doctrine that the universe is full of spirits, waiting to be born into this world, as the only way to reach a better; and that these spirits prefer the Mormon church. Hence the obligation upon every Mormon woman to bring as many children into the world as possible. But Mrs. Jackson's argument that efforts for the suppression of this enormity only inflame the zeal of the Mormons is not good. Such will doubtless be the frequent effect for a time, but a well aimed blow that would unhorse the leaders would scatter the whole following.

The North American Review for May opens with an important paper by Judge William Strong of the United States Supreme Court upon our "Defective Naturalization Laws." Immigration must undoubtedly continue to be one of the great economic questions of this country, and it involves a political problem of the highest importance, that of naturalization. That our naturalization laws are defective in many respects is notorious, and the demand for their revision will no doubt acquire added force from Judge Strong's article. Edwin P. Whipple is easily the first of American essayists and critics, and when he takes "Matthew Arnold" for his theme expectation is not disappointed in the grace, the courtesy, the justice and the keen analysis with which he lays bare the fundamental failings as well as the excellencies of the celebrated English critic and poet. It is the best critique of Arnold of the many that have appeared of late. Prof. R. A. Proctor, in "A Zone of Worlds", develops a theory in regard to the belt of asteroids in the solar system which must attract attention among scientific men. "Workingmen's Grievances" is a discussion pro and con by W. G. Moody and Prof. J. L. Laughlin of Harvard University. Of Mr. Moody's statement of grievances it is enough to say that if the workingmen cannot find an advocate of more intelligence and common sense, and with less extravagance of rhetoric and of statement, their cause is indeed hopeless. The same failing is general with such speakers and writers, from De la Martyr to Kearney. Prof. Laughlin's article is candid, strong and valuable—worth reading by every workingman. Other articles are: "The Railway and the State", "Illusions of Memory", and "The Mean-of Song."

"THE TEACHING OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES." The recently discovered Manuscript, bearing this title, the supposed product of the second century, and which the New York Independent pronounces "By all odds the most important writing, exterior to the New Testament, now in possession of the Christian world," seems certain of securing a wide circulation. John B. Alden, New York, publishes a handsome edition, the Greek text and the English translation on opposite pages, in fine cloth binding, for the nominal price of 25 cents. He also issues it in an "extra" number of his monthly magazine, Choice Literature, of which he prints 100,000 copies, and sends one, free, to every clergyman in the United States.

The American Agriculturist for May contains nearly ninety columns of original reading matter, with one hundred pleasing and instructive engravings. The full-page pictures are, "Beneath the Skies of May," and "Types of Dogs;" the latter presents eight famous breeds. The number abounds with good things in season for every one in village, city or country.

The English Illustrated Magazine gives us a bright May number. The illustrations of coast scenery accompanying the fourth number of "An Unsentimental Journey through Cornwall" are excellent pieces of work and vividly portray the dangers that lurk for seamen along the rock coast of Cornwall. The laces of Nottingham have a paper and sketches, and the "Industries of the English Lake District" have also, the subjects for drawing being chosen from the most commonplace occupations of piling sticks, shaving hoop-poles and weaving baskets, proving that not heroic deeds alone are honored by art and literature.

St. Nicholas contains the conclusion of Mayne Reid's story of adventure in and about Terra del Fuego, which presents in an attractive way much information of that remote part of the world. It begins also a new story which promises to be profitable to some boys and dangerous to others who have already a well-developed contempt for parental authority. This first chapter may do for parents; it is not good for many children. The May number is well illustrated as usual.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

ODD-FELLOW ANNIVERSARY.

On Sabbath, April 27th, 1884, the sixty-fifth anniversary of Odd-fellowship was celebrated at the Foundry M. E. church in this city. The Grand Lodge of the District and all the subordinate lodges were represented, and the commemorative address and defence of the order was delivered by the pastor, Bro. Dr. Naylor. On Monday the lodges aired their regalia and advertised their benevolence (?) by a street parade with bands of music, and at night they had an entertainment in the Masonic Hall, followed by a grand dance.

It is greatly to be deplored that the church where Mrs. Hayes worshiped should be devoted to advertising the secret orders, and that the pastor should find no better use for his Sabbath afternoons than in trying to shield from merited rebuke one of the most seductive and pernicious forms of anti-Christ. The former pastor by his adherence to, and defence of Freemasonry drove off some of the members of the church. These, with all others, were expressly forbidden to distribute Anti-masonic tracts at that place. It was hoped and expected that the present pastor would prove a wiser, if not a better man. Alas! "They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for a reward." It was of similar perverters of the truth that Whittier said:

"Paid hypocrites! who turn
Judgment aside; and rob the Holy Book
Of those high words of truth, that search and burn
In warning and rebuke.

How long, oh Lord, how long!
Shall such a priesthood barter truth away,
And in the name of robbery and wrong
At their own altars pray?

Their glory and their might Shall perish; and their names shall be
Vile before all the people in the light
Of the world's liberty."

REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS.

The Republican convention for the election of delegates from this District to the Chicago convention was a most disorderly gathering, attended with many fights and requiring all the skill of the police to quell the riot, and ambulances to carry off the wounded. The result was the choice of Mr. Conger, the city post-master, and Perry Carson, a colored saloon-keeper, who got seventy votes to Mr. Fred Douglass's five. Last Saturday (26th) the dissatisfied Republicans held a meeting in Shea's Hall to consider whether bribery had not been resorted to in the previous convention. This meeting was scarcely less disorderly than the first. After a fight calling for the intervention of the police, the chairman declared the meeting adjourned, and it broke up in disorder. Moral: the secret lodges and the whisky ring govern the Republican party in this District, and send a saloon-keeper, their fitting representative, to Chicago to nominate candidates that shall represent their interests and be voted for by Republicans.

STAR-ROUTE FOLLY.

Another Star-route trial has begun—that of ex-Senator Kellogg of Louisiana, charged with accepting a bribe of $20,000 for securing increased compensation on mail contracts. The case has fairly opened and the the prosecution made its opening plea. Col. Ingersoll for the defence keeps his plea in reserve.

It would be unfair to say in advance, that the acquittal of the defendant has already been determined on; but if we may judge from the past, and from the fact that Mr. Kellogg is reputed to be a high Mason, there is no other reasonable conclusion. The following testimony of the contractor would look quite conclusive:

James B. Price, the mail contractor, was called to the stand. He testified that he met Senator Kellogg at Willard hotel in March, 1879. He presented him with papers and petitions relative to the expedition of routes, and the witness said it would be worth $20,000 to him. Kellogg put the papers in his pocket and told witness that he would see what could be done. A few days afterwards witness saw Kellogg, and he told witness that he thought it would be all right. When he received the order for the mail service, the witness gave Kellogg the $20,000 in notes and drafts. There were five drafts and a promissory note. The witness produced this note.

It is, however, quite likely that the defence may produce a number of witnesses who will swear that they did not see the Senator accept any bribe, or he may be acquitted as the ex-detectives were, on the ground of his good moral character. Both these pleas are put in as proof that Freemasonry is right. Some men have never seen any evil in it, and others think that some who practice it are good people. Surely the same plea ought to answer for the acquittal of a Mason.

LATER.—I have just listened to Judge Wylie's decision in the case of ex-Senator Wm. P. Kellogg, charged with taking fees unlawfully for "expediting" in the Star-routes. The case rested almost solely on the testimony of contractor Price who swore to paying Mr. Kellogg twenty thousand dollars and receiving what he bargained for. No effort was made to set aside this evidence but it was plead: 1st. That the action was barred by the statue of limitations; and 2d. That the indictment set forth that the payment was in "lawful money," whereas the evidence showed that it was in orders on the Post Office Department and a promissory note.

In a learned review of the case, the judge sustained the plea of the defence, and thus on purely technical grounds, there is an acquittal from the charge of a great crime.

As a layman, it looks to me as though the judge forgot that he was not simply a defender of the rights of the prisoner but the guardian of justice and protector of the public welfare. This is one of a long list of similar cases that have been dismissed on technicalities. To my mind, had the case been that of a poor negro who had stolen a ham, instead of a rich Freemason stealing $20,000 there would be a widely different result.

THE TARIFF.

Most of the time for several weeks is being spent in endless Congressional debates on the Morrison Tariff Bill. No one expects it to receive the sanction of this Congress; and it is only barely possible that it will pass the House. In the main, it is a mere political discussion, and yet not devoid of interest and benefit. The able speeches as they appear in the Congressional Record are replete with able arguments and valuable statistics. I believe that the earcful thinkers and philanthropists incline more and more to free trade, and that the time is not distant when all restrictions on commerce will be regarded as invasions of personal rights, and relates to a semi-barbarous age. H. H. HINMAN.

Washington, D. C. April 29, 1884.

—At a very recent meeting of the Reform Club, of Topeka, a reformed man who had stood unshaken in his total abstinence principles for ten years, made this confession: "I was in Topeka last week in attendance upon the G. A. R. meeting, and in an evil hour I forgot God. My old appetite for drink came upon me with such force that had I been able to find a place where liquor could have been gotten, I should have fallen. I would have given my right arm almost for a drink." Praise God that the saloons in Topeka are closed, and that this tried and tempted man was thus saved to himself and his family. —Union Signal.

Observe, this did not happen at a prayer-meeting, nor was it likely to. But do we want to have organizations that by unnecessarily recalling old associations revives old temptations? However, it is a matter of congratulation for all good people that in this secretism-enslaved country there is one place where even it with all its power can't shield crime. s.
